REFLECTIONS.—The Christian religion delightfully promotes friendship and good manners. It teaches us to pay civil respect in a decent manner to persons of all ranks, and gratefully to return favours shown to us in the best way we can. It gives a holy turn to a genteel behaviour, and makes men sincere in wishing the temporal, and especially the eternal prosperity of their friends.—With deep concern should all Christians labour to excel in piety, fix themselves in church-fellowship, and in their respective stations study to be serviceable to the whole mystical body of Christ. Amiable are those families which resemble a church of Christ in their worship, order, and conversation. And it is a great honour to be first or eminent in the faith and profession of the gospel. With exact care ought all to judge for themselves in matters of religion, according to the doctrine which they have received from Christ and his apostles; and to avoid such as cause divisions and offences, by broaching errors or forming parties in the church. Whatever be the plausible pretences, fair shows, or flattering speeches of such, they always secretly carry on some selfish and carnal design. There is great need therefore in this evil world to have such knowledge of the truth that we may not be imposed on, and such honesty as to act up to our knowledge, imposing upon none. For Satan earnestly promotes pernicious principles and practices, to the disturbance and corruption of the church. But it is very encouraging to true believers that their God will quickly and entirely subdue him and all his emissaries and works. And if faith and patience hold out a little, we shall reign triumphant for evermore.—Ancient and divine are the gospel tidings of our salvation. Delightfully they harmonize with the types and predictions of the Old Testament. And their offers and blessings graciously extend to all nations of mankind, and by the Holy Ghost are made effectual to men of all ranks and degrees. With what faith and love ought they then to be received, submitted to, obeyed, and practised! And infinite is the glory that redounds to God from this his wonderful work of our salvation.

Among the books of Scripture, the Epistle to the Romans holds a similar place to that of a star of the first magnitude among the heavenly bodies. It stands specially remarkable for the guidance it affords in searching out 'the deep things of God'—such as, the co-existence and reconciliation of inflexible justice with abounding mercy—of the unchanging purposes of the Eternal with the perfect accountability of man—and of justification by faith in Jesus Christ, with the indissoluble obligation to every duty of holiness. 2. It stands specially remarkable for its practical vindication of the doctrines of free grace. There seems a natural antipathy in the carnal mind against a free salvation; so that the heart that needs it most, hates it most. And the alleged ground of this antipathy is, that it is unfavourable to morality. But this objection proceeds upon disregard of self-ignorance of the principles of the human heart—and a total forgetfulness of historical truth, or neglect of observation. Disregard of self—for a sinner cannot be saved, unless by free grace. Ignorance of the human heart—for nothing can subdue its enmity but redeeming love, or govern its powers, but gratitude for mercies. And forgetfulness of historical truth, and neglect of observation—for both have

SCENE IN OLD CORINTH—WHERE PAUL WROTE THE EPISTLE TO THE ROMANS.
 [ROMANS, xvi: 27.]—The epistle to the Romans was written by St. Paul from Corinth. It was written to the Christians in Rome before the apostle himself had gone thither. In the view we give we have an illustration of an old tree and some rude houses that are used as a place to keep horses to hire to tourists. The scene is close to the temple that stood in Corinth when St. Paul was here. It is a striking commentary upon the changing fortunes which great cities in the East have undergone to remember that the site of the proud and rich city of Corinth is now a wheatfield. Peasants plow to-day where once kings and conquerors reveled. This city would have dropped out of attention had not St. Paul spent a few years here.

united to prove, that in all countries and times, the most godly and moral characters have been produced by the preaching of salvation by the cross of Christ. 3. It is conspicuous for the boldness with which it encounters national prejudices, combined with the affection with which it seeks to conciliate good-will. The prejudices of the Jews against the Gentiles, and the contempt of the Gentiles for the Jews, formed one of the chief barriers against the triumphant spread of his gospel. These diseases of the carnal mind the apostle never overlooks or palliates, but, like a skilful physician, reveals all its symptoms and malignity, and applies, as its only adequate remedy, the doctrine of free grace and salvation. 4. It is remarkable for the extent of its moral precepts. Every book of Scripture abounds, either directly or indirectly, with moral precepts; but this epistle takes a wider range, yet descends to more minute particulars than any other book in the New Testament; thus affording the readiest reply to those who charge the doctrine of grace with an unfavourable aspect towards morality. And, truly, if morality, rightly understood, be any evidence of the divine origin of a system (and that it is so is unquestionable), then does the morality of this epistle place it as far above every heathen system of ethics as light is superior to darkness; and conducts infallibly to the conclusion, either that Paul was wiser than all the philosophers of Greece and Rome, or that he was inspired by the all-wise God. This superiority the philosophers of the world will not acknowledge—the inspiration, therefore, they should not deny. 5. It is remarkable for its speciality of personal attentions. While with a most wonderful terseness, or as Haldane phrases it, ‘parsimony of words,’ it delivers its moral precepts, and transuses into a single sentence the spirit and amount of volumes, it exhibits ‘what might seem a prodigal waste of words’ in its commendations, salutations, and acknowledgments. But the memory of the heart never forgets; and the Christian is the only true citizen of the world. He loves him that begets, and, by the same reason, he loves all that are begotten of him.

He that would study this epistle must begin, as all study of Scripture should begin, with humble prayer ‘to the Father of lights and mercies;’ but to this he must add a firm determination to study it as a whole: it cannot be understood in fragments. He must attend to it with diligence, until he has acquired a consecutive view of its parts—till he is able, as it were, to take the parts asunder, as the wheels, &c., of a machine, and to set them up again in their original order. And the whole he must receive ‘as a little child;’ for he that does not so receive it will neither discern its meaning nor feel its comfort. C.

THE FIRST EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE CORINTHIANS.

Corinth ranked among the most illustrious of the Grecian cities. It was situated on the isthmus that joins the Peloponnesus to the rest of Greece. With a port on each side, it received equally the commercial contributions of Europe and Asia; became first distinguished for arts and commerce, and next (such is ever human abuse of mercies) equally distinguished for luxury, and infamous for licentiousness. Yet here, after the missionary labours of about two years, Paul and his companions succeeded in planting a Christian church, consisting of Jews and Gentiles. But shortly after his departure, false teachers, undervaluing Paul’s authority, crept in among them; erroneous and heretical doctrines were inculcated, and sectarian divisions were introduced. Under these circumstances Paul writes this epistle:—1. To support his apostolic authority, and vindicate himself from the calumnies of his adversaries. 2. To correct the abuses that had arisen, and remedy the disorders that had infected the church. 3. To return answers to certain queries that had been addressed to him on some important points of Christian doctrine, management, and morals. These answers and directions, though generally referring to circumstances and practices no longer in existence, are yet, by virtue of the principles involved, of perpetual application to the various emergencies of the Christian church. C.

We learn from ch. 16. 8 that the epistle was written from Ephesus. This is at variance with the subscription which is attached to our English version; but it ought to be remembered that these subscriptions have no divine authority. They are mostly late additions, and some of them are decidedly erroneous. It seems probable from the remark that he intended to leave Ephesus after Pentecost, and from the allusions in ch. 5. 7, that the time of writing was at or about Easter, A.D. 57. P.

CHAPTER I.

After his salutation and thanksgiving, 10 he exhorteth them to unity, and 12 reproveth their dissensions. 18 God destroyeth the wisdom of the wise, 21 by the foolishness of preaching, and 26 calleth not the wise, mighty, and noble, but 27, 28 the foolish, weak, and men of no account.

to preach the gospel: ⁹not with wisdom of words,² lest the cross of Christ should be made of none effect.

18 For ¹the preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness; but unto us which are saved it is the power of God.

19 For it is written, ¹I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and will bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent.

20 Where¹ is the wise? where ¹is the scribe? where ¹is the disputer of this world? hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?

21 For³ after that in the wisdom of God, the

as the object of their faith, worship, and obedience—all the riches and the blessed effects of redeeming favour, love, and mercy, and an abundant peace with God, with your own consciences, and with one another, from God the Father, as the original spring and deviser of every blessing, and through Jesus Christ, as the source, storehouse, and bestower of them. 4-6. I heartily congratulate you on your happiness and honour upon every remembrance of you, and bless my infinitely gracious God for the manifold favours, gifts, and graces which, on Christ's account, he has bestowed upon you, enriching you not only with such spiritual habits and tempers as are necessary to salvation, but with remarkable knowledge of the mysteries of the gospel, and a ready ability to communicate them to others—the Spirit of God thereby confirming to your hearts and consciences the truth of the gospel of Christ which we preached and ye believed. 7-9. So that ye are not remarkably deficient, or inferior to other Christians, in any spiritual gifts which could render you useful in Christ's church, in which ye continue praying, preparing, and patiently and hopefully waiting for his second coming—who, by a constant supply of necessary gifts and graces, will more establish you in the faith, hope, and holiness of the gospel,—that, when others are condemned, ye may appear perfectly righteous, holy, and irreproachable at his tribunal; for God, who has graciously called you into a state of union and fellowship with his dear Son, being unchangeably faithful to his character, love, and promises, will aid you to be partakers of eternal glory. 10-12. If then God hath done, and will do, so much for you, and if Jesus will in a little time judge you at his awful bar, let me beseech you, by the authority of our Lord Jesus Christ, by his excellencies, relations, and works of love, and by your profession of him, to lay aside your contentions and alienation of affection from one another, and to study the most cordial harmony in sentiment, affection, and holy practices; for, to my great grief, I have been informed that ye, whom I truly esteem, and of whom I hoped better things, have, by uncharitable divisions, been thrown into different parties, under different leaders—some of you ranking yourselves under me, as the apostle of the Gentiles, or instrument of your conversion; others under Apollos, as the most eloquent and fervent preacher; others under Peter, as the apostle of the circumcision; while others pretend to be immediately directed by Christ alone, needing no other instructor. 13-16. To convince you of the absurdity of your conduct, let me ask even you who pretend to be solely for Christ, overlooking his ministers and ordinances, Is his person to be divided from his offices? or his offices from the execution thereof by the ministry of his servants, who labour in the church by his authority and according to his will?—Why set up me, or any other minister, for your spiritual head? Did I or my brethren make atonement for your sins? Or were ye baptized by the authority, or into the faith, worship, and obedience of us? I thank God that, though I was the instrument of conversion to many of you, I baptized but very few of you, lest any should have thence taken occasion to insinuate that I had acted by my own authority, and bound the persons whom I baptized to acknowledge me as their spiritual master. 17. For indeed Christ sent me not chiefly to baptize, but to preach the glad tidings of salvation through his blood; and that not dressed up in flowers of rhetoric or maxims of philosophy for the promoting of my own selfish honours, but in the most plain language and style, that the native majesty, spirituality, glory, and power of the gospel doctrine, of and concerning a crucified Saviour, might be the more clearly manifested in the humbling and conversion of sinners. 18. For the plain preaching of salvation through the blessed righteousness of Jesus Christ, received by faith, appears quite despicable, foolish, and absurd, to them who live and die in their sins; but to us who are really saved from our sins and miseries, it is the marvellous mean through which the almighty influences of God's Spirit are conveyed for illuminating, sanctifying, supporting, and comforting our hearts. 19, 20. This, according to the Scripture, quite confounds the notions of the learned of this world, and exhibits a method of salvation directly contrary to whatever they could have imagined. None of them, Jews or Gentiles, could ever contrive a method of saving sinners, or of reconciling them to God; and herein he hath stamped disgrace upon all the wisdom of philosophers and others, and manifested their schemes for appeasing an offended God, and reconciling guilty sinners to him, as altogether vain, foolish, and ineffectual. 21. For after he, in the manifestation of his own infinite wisdom, had plainly shown that neither the works of creation, nor of common providence, nor any powers of human reasoning, could lead to a saving and satisfying knowledge of himself or the way of salvation, it pleased him, by the much-despised plain preaching of a crucified Christ, and the way of salvation through his blood, to save them who by faith receive and rest upon him for their eternal redemption, as therein offered to them. 22, 23. Notwithstanding all the proofs that Christ hath given us of his Godhead and saving offices, the obstinate Jews still persist in demanding a sign from heaven to prove them, and the learned Greeks insist upon philosophical demonstrations of the method of salvation. But, regardless of these prejudices, we faithful ministers proclaim a full, eternal, free, and offered salvation to sinful men through the obedience and death of Christ, which the Jews condemn, to the infinite hazard and ruin of their souls, and the learned Greeks account highly foolish and absurd. 24. But let others think as they will of Jesus Christ, or of the doctrine of salvation through his blood, we, who do yield to him, discern and experience therein the great power and manifold wisdom of God, clearly exhibited in his whole person, offices, and saving effects. 25. For what ignorant, carnal, and prejudiced men reckon absurd folly, infinitely transcends in wisdom all the boasted schemes of the most sagacious, prudent, and learned philosophers; and what they account weak and unavailing is found by experience to have an incomparable energy in destroying the works of the devil, renewing the heart, and reforming the lives of men. 26-29. And to manifest the abundance of his grace, and, as it were, to mark the insignificance of men's natural or acquired advantages, ye cannot but observe that very few of the learned, the eminently sagacious, great, or powerful, are converted to Christ; but he has generally fixed his love upon, and graciously finds, such as are comparatively foolish, weak, mean, or contemptible,—that none, Jews or Gentiles, do have any pretence to glory before him of their natural parts, accomplishments, or external privileges, as if these could recommend them to his favour, or qualify them to receive the gospel. 30, 31. Yea, on the contrary, because of your simple faith in Jesus Christ, he accepts you in, and thus also unites you to, Christ Jesus, who, by his divine appointment, is constituted and made over to us in the gospel offer, and freely granted to us in the day of power, as an infinitely well-furnished and loving Teacher, to render us wise unto salvation; a law-fulfilling Saviour, through whose finished obedience and suffering we may be completely justified; and not only as securing, but as a loving giver, of all renewing, quickening, and sanctifying grace, by his Spirit dwelling in us; and a full deliverer from sin and misery, and bestower of that eternal happiness which he hath obtained for all,—that, as the Scripture directs, he who has any honours and blessings bestowed upon him may centre all his joy and boasting entirely in the Lord Jesus, and in the free grace of God through him.

Ver. 2. Sanctified in Christ Jesus—by faith in the offering of his body. See 26. 18; He. 10. 10, 14.—Note. It is no objection to the reality of this character, that there was deficiency in the true believers, and false brethren among them. The epistle is to the 'sanctified,' not to those who, notwithstanding their nominal profession of Christianity, might still be in the gall of bitterness.—In every place call upon, &c. To 'call upon,' or 'call on the name,' signifies to 'invoke,' to 'worship,' Ac. 2. 21; 9. 14, 21; 22. 16; Ro. 10. 12-14; 2 Ti. 2. 22. Wherefore, there is here a distinct acknowledgment that the primitive and apostolic church universally worshipped Christ—universally acknowledged his Godhead. C.

Ver. 8. Who shall confirm you. The 'who' is by some referred to 'Christ,' ver. 17, but it seems preferable to refer it to 'God,' ver. 4; for had the apostle intended to refer the confirmation directly to Christ, he would not have closed the sentence with 'the day of our Lord Jesus Christ,' but with 'his day.' C.

Ver. 16. I know not, &c. These words are to be taken in their literal import—ignorance, either from lapse of memory, or from the possible addition of new members to the Corinthian church whom he might elsewhere have baptized. But this ignorance is by no means inconsistent with the plenary inspiration of the apostle; for inspiration does not imply the divine communication of everything, but merely the communication of things necessary for the edification of the church. C.

Ver. 17. Not with wisdom of words. Reference is here made rather to the form and structure of his discourses, than to their language. They were not framed in accordance with the artificial rules of the philosophers. They did not treat of speculative questions; they were altogether different in structure from the orations delivered in the schools of Greece. Paul makes no apology, therefore, for his simple language or homely speech. He could not have done so truthfully; for we find in this epistle a depth of thought, an acuteness of reasoning, a beauty of illustration, and sometimes a splendour of eloquence, not surpassed in Greek literature. P.

Ver. 21. By 'wisdom of God,' some understand the permission or government of his wise providence. But may not the whole verse be better understood thus:—'For after that the world, through its [philosophical] wisdom, knew not God (though manifest) in his wisdom (of creation, providence, and word), it pleased God, through the preaching of foolishness (the cross, ver. 18, 23, 25) to save them that believe.' C.

Ver. 28. Base things. Not things really base and unworthy, but things so esteemed by the world; God, by the weakest and apparently the most inadequate instruments, producing the most wonderful results.—Things which are not, &c. The expression 'things which are not' is generally represented as hyperbole, or oxymoron—an extravagance or contradiction in language, frequent in classical writers. But there is no necessity for attributing either to the apostle. God had chosen a people (the future Christian church) 'that were not' then in being, 'to bring to nought' the heathen empire of Rome; and there is still a chosen people to be born, under whom all the kingdoms of this world shall become 'the kingdoms of our God and of his Christ,' ch. 2. 7. C.

Ver. 30. Christ . . . is made unto us wisdom. A wisdom different from, but infinitely above—both as to subject and effect—the wisdom of earth. The wisdom of this world has narrow limits. It is bounded by the limits of human vision and of human experience. It can neither reach to the unseen nor to the future. But the wisdom which is in Christ, and which we have through him, is infinite in its range;—it extends to the invisible God and to the eternal future. All the wisdom which makes wise unto salvation is embodied in Christ:—in 'his incarnation, his life of obedience, his teaching, his death of atonement, his glorification and sending of the Spirit.' In him are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge. P.

REFLECTIONS.—With great prudence, but with plainness and courage, ought ministers, on some occasions, to assert their mission and the dignity of their office. And with firm assurance should we receive the apostolic writings and doctrines as indeed of divine authority. Divine power and grace are necessary to render men saints, while fervent prayer and religious worship evidence them such. And it is absurd to hold demption through his blood, not with any tickling arts of human invention, or soothing language, but with the convincing light and persuasive evidence of the Holy Spirit himself on your minds and consciences and attended with his miraculous gifts and operations.

5. That the faith, by which he assented to the gospel and embraced Jesus Christ in it, might not so much as seem to be wrought in you by the authority, arts, or arguments of men, but might be solely produced by the efficacious power of God, and built on his authority and faithfulness manifested in his Word.

6. Nevertheless, we preach the infinitely wise plan of the redemption of sinners, and explain the transcendent mysteries thereof, especially to such as have attained some considerable measures and degrees of knowledge and grace:—not indeed the wisdom of philosophical or political schemes of learned men or princes;—

7. But we publish and inculcate that mysterious doctrine which is the wonderful product of the infinite wisdom of God, which has been long hid from the Gentile world, and but obscurely revealed to the Jews, and can never be fully comprehended by creatures; and which God from all eternity determined at this time to reveal with transcendent light and evidence, for the honour of the gospel

² Milk is fit for children. ³ Strife and division, arguments of a fleshly mind. ⁷ He that planteth, and he that watereth, are nothing. ⁹ The ministers are God's fellow-workmen. ¹¹ Christ the only foundation. ¹⁶ Men the temples of God, which ¹⁷ must be kept holy. ¹⁹ The wisdom of this world is foolishness with God.

AND I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes in Christ.

² I have fed you with milk, and not with meat: for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able.

³ For ye are yet carnal: for whereas there is among you envying, and strife, and divisions,¹ are ye not carnal, and walk as men?²

⁴ For while one saith, I am of Paul; and another, I am of Apollos; are ye not carnal?

⁵ Who then is Paul, and who is Apollos, but ministers by whom ye believed, even as the Lord gave to every man?

⁶ I have planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase.

⁷ So then neither is he that planteth any thing, neither he that watereth; but God that giveth the increase.

⁸ Now he that planteth and he that watereth are one: and every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labour.

dispensation, its ministers and subjects, and the eternal happiness of every believer. ⁸ Which important scheme of salvation the rulers and great men concerned in the crucifixion of Jesus Christ, and others so disposed, had no just notion of, their minds being blinded, and their hearts hardened, against all the means of conviction afforded them, otherwise they had never concurred in the shameful, ignominious, deliberate, and public murder of the divine Messiah, who has all infinite glory in himself as the Son of God, and is the author, fountain, and bestower of all the glory of the gospel dispensation and heavenly state; ⁹ And who, as Isaiah foretold, has brought in that incomparably and inconceivably glorious, delightful, and advantageous gospel state, and all the transcendent blessings thereof, which God, of his infinite wisdom and grace, had provided, adjusted, and secured: and which he bestows upon them who, in the faith of his great love to their souls, do sincerely esteem, desire, and delight in him. ¹⁰ Yea, God hath now manifested them to us by the immediate revelations and gracious internal illuminations of his Spirit, who has a perfect and comprehensive view of the divine nature and love. ¹¹ For as none but a man's own soul can know his secret thoughts and designs, so none but the Holy Ghost, who has the same essence and will with the Father and Son, can penetrate into or comprehend the deep love of God. ¹² And it is this all-knowing Spirit of God, not the boasted wisdom and learning of the world, which we have received, in order that we may savingly understand the great and glorious blessings of the gospel, freely prepared for, offered to, and bestowed upon us; ¹³ Which glorious mysteries and benefits we, being taught of God ourselves, represent to others, not in the foppish gildings of human language, but in a plain, grave, and majestic style, suited to their nature, dignity, and beauty, even in the words and figures in which the Holy Ghost has represented them, carefully comparing them together. ¹⁴ But no unregenerate men, be as learned and sagacious as they will, can truly approve or know these spiritual doctrines and blessings; nor can they, for want of an understanding illuminated and rectified by the Spirit of God, discern their divine truth, spirituality, excellency, and glory, in a truly spiritual and affecting manner, suitable to their transcendent worth and importance. ¹⁵ But he who is really renewed in the spirit of his mind can search into, discern, and form a right judg-

* While the apostles were ministers commissioned of God to do his work, while they were even so highly honoured as to be fellow-workers with God, yet whatever effect was produced, whatever minds were enlightened, whatever souls were saved—God was the real and efficient cause. The church at Corinth, viewed as a tilled and fruit-bearing field, was God's tillage; viewed as a temple, was God's building. Hence God alone should have the glory, and to God alone all in the church should unite in rendering homage.—P.

ye are God's husbandry,³ ye are God's building.⁴

¹⁰ According to the grace of God which is given unto me, as a wise master-builder, I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon. But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon.

¹¹ For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ.⁵

¹² Now if any man build upon this foundation gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble;

¹⁴ If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward.

¹⁵ If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss: but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire.

¹⁶ Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?

¹⁷ If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are.

¹⁸ Let no man deceive himself. If any man ment about everything necessary to be known in order to salvation, and perceive the glory and feel the transforming power of divine truths; though his views thereof, and satisfaction therein, cannot be certainly judged of by any other man; far less by such as are destitute of the Spirit of God and the true experience of these things. ¹⁶ For what unregenerate man ever penetrated into the deep love or revealed truths of God, so as to be able further to instruct a spiritual man in what he before knew, or to prove what is contrary to his views? Nay, we apostles, and other Christians, are, by the Holy Ghost, instructed in the doctrine of Christ in everything respecting the glory of God and the salvation of men.

Ver. 6. By 'perfect' some understand those 'who are advanced in Christian knowledge,' as distinguished from the 'babes,' and corresponding to the 'spiritual,' ch. 3:1; others, the Christians, as distinguished from the Jews and others, that higher mode of teaching exemplified in the Epistles to the Romans, Galatians, and Hebrews, in which Christ is fully set forth as 'the end of the law for righteousness,' by the perfect exposition of the Jewish dispensation. This last opinion seems to receive decisive support from apparent contrast between ἐν παιδείᾳ λόγους (ver. 4) and ἐν τοῖς τέλει (ver. 6); which last expression appears to apply, not to persons, but to correspond with the things that once were 'hidden,' but now 'revealed' by the Spirit, as things fulfilled and perfected, ver. 7, 10. See the similar expression, Ep. 2:6. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Great is the native beauty of the gospel as God's own testimony concerning Jesus Christ crucified for men. And it is absurd and hurtful to souls to veil and stain its illustrious simplicity, wisdom, and grace by human oratory. The faith of Christians must be the effect of divine operation, and of human persuasion. It is impossible for carnal men to understand the gospel, or to make it comport with their worldly schemes. And not merely an external revelation, but the inward illumination of the Holy Ghost, who is perfectly acquainted with the whole mind of God, can give us just and impressive conceptions of spiritual things. Thrice happy are they who have him to lead them into all necessary truth, and to make them know what inexpressibly great and glorious things God has prepared for, and freely given to them! Judicious and experienced Christians discern admirable wisdom, power, and grace in the gospel method of their salvation. And while they have the greatest satisfaction, experience, and hope in themselves, relating to it, no natural man is able to correct or refute them.

CHAPTER III.—Ver. 1. And indeed, brethren, when I was among you, I perceived in you such an earthly-minded, opinionative, and disputatious temper, as discovered you to be really weak in spiritual knowledge and experience. ² I therefore made it my chief care to instruct you in the plain principles of the gospel concerning Christ and his salvation, which were suited to your weak capacities, not entering into the more sublime and abstruse points, which neither then, nor even now, ye can improve to your real edification. ³ Your present contentions and envying of one another is a plain evidence that many of you do not in a spiritual manner, or upon proper authority, take up the doctrines of the gospel, but are under the influence of your natural corruptions, and act in the manner of unregenerate men. ⁴ Nothing can more plainly manifest your great carnality of temper than to extol particular ministers as if they were to be the lords of your faith: ⁵ For what are ministers but servants of Christ, by whose preaching of one and the same doctrine ye were brought, not by their skill or power, but by his gracious operation on your hearts, to receive and rest upon him for your salvation? ⁶ I, as an apostle, first published the gospel among you, which, through the gracious and almighty influences of the Holy Ghost, proved instrumental in the conversion of many of you; and Apollos, coming after, laboured in promoting your spiritual edification: but whatever success he or I had, was entirely owing to God's powerful blessing and influence on our labours; ⁷ And therefore to him alone ought all the glory to be ascribed; not in the least to us, who are neither the authors of the gospel, nor of its efficacy upon you. ⁸ Whether we be instrumental in the conversion or in the building up of souls, we all act under the same authority of Christ, and are united in our doctrine and principal design, yea, are all accountable to God, and are equally incapable in ourselves of producing any saving effects by our ministrations: and if faithful, shall in due time receive from him a gracious reward answerable to that diligence which his own free grace has enabled us to use. ⁹ For all of us labour jointly with the same views, and as his workmen, with and in subordination to God, who will never desert us in our work, nor be unmindful of us; and ye are not ours, but God's workmanship and property, and therefore ought to be devoted entirely and only to him. ¹⁰ And I, being employed under him as his distinguished workman and first labourer among you, have, with all that know-among you seemeth to be wise in this world, let him become a fool, that he may be wise.

19 For^c the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God: for it is written, He taketh the wise in their own craftiness.

20 And again, ^aThe Lord knoweth the thoughts of the wise, that they are vain.

21 Therefore let no man ^eglory in men:⁹ for all^h things are yours;

22 Whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours;

23 And ^hye are Christ's;¹ andⁱ Christ is God's.

CHAPTER IV.

1 In what account the ministers ought to be had. 7 We have nothing which we have not received. 9 The apostles spectacles to the world, angels, and men, 13 the filth and offscouring of the earth: 15 yet our fathers in Christ, 16 whom we ought to follow.

LET a man so account of us as of ^athe ministers¹ of Christ, and ^bstewards of the mysteries of God.

2 Moreover, it is required in stewards, that ^aa man be found faithful.

ledge, wisdom, prudence, and care, which he enabled me to exercise, laid the ground-work of your faith and hope, safety and comfort, in the gospel doctrines of a crucified Jesus, and salvation by him alone. Every preacher therefore who comes after me must take care that he attempt not to build you up by any doctrine inconsistent therewith. 11. It is beyond the power of any to lay another foundation of true holiness or happiness beside what is already laid in the incarnation, obedience, and death of the Son of God in our nature, and which is exhibited in the Scripture, and was taught by me. 12. And if Apollos, or any other like-minded, should now, after my preaching, attempt to edify you with the precious truths of God; or if others of a different stamp should attempt to build on it the unsubstantial, contemptible, and perishing inventions of men, 13. Their whole doctrines and practices, as well as those of all other men, shall at the last day be thoroughly tried by Jesus Christ according to the standard of his Word; and the truth and value, or the falsehood and emptiness thereof, be fully manifested to all around. 14. Whoever then shall, in his doctrine and practice, be agreeable to the Scriptures, and answerable to the foundation truth of free salvation through Jesus' blood, shall be graciously and amply rewarded in proportion to his faithfulness and diligence: 15. And whosoever shall, in his doctrine or behaviour, be found unscriptural, though not fundamentally erroneous, shall indeed, if united to Christ, though with apparent difficulty, be saved from eternal wrath; but have nothing but shame and dishonour for his erroneous notions and bad practices. 16. Remember therefore, that as ye, who are God's true church, founded upon Christ preached in the gospel, are set apart, sanctified, and devoted to him as his temple, in which, through his Spirit, he dwells by sweet relation, possession, operation, and favour; 17. If any of you maintain and propagate such errors as are subversive of the foundation, and so at once corrupt yourselves and the church, he shall certainly be punished by him in a fearful and lasting manner, as a defiler of his gospel temple, more sacred and dear to him than any of the apartments of the Jewish. 18. Let therefore every man, preacher or hearer, take heed, lest, through a conceit of his superior understanding, he bring loss and ruin upon himself; and if any have apparently a large stock of earthly wisdom, let him renounce it all as insufficient to lead him to the attainment of gospel truth; and in becoming truly wise towards God, and to the salvation of his soul, through faith in Christ, let him patiently submit to be esteemed as a fool by the carnal pretenders to reason; 19, 20. For as the Scripture repeatedly testifies, all the policy, prudence, wit, and learning, which give men a reputation for wisdom in this world, are but folly in God's account, when compared with his glorious scheme of salvation through a crucified Redeemer: and in the end it will appear to have ensnared them, and discovered the vanity of their minds. 21, 22. Since human knowledge then is so insignificant, and no man can direct you into the way of salvation, but as he himself is taught of God, let none of you, to your own spiritual hurt, set up one gospel minister as his head in opposition to another; for all things, particularly those relating to the dispensation of the gospel, are in the new kingdom secured for, and given to, you who believe, and are divinely directed for your spiritual advantage; all faithful ministers, with all their gifts, graces, and ministrations, are appointed for building you up in faith, holiness, and comfort, to eternal salvation: all the wealth, honours, pleasures, and trans-actions of this world are in Christ's hands for you, to be given you in property or use, as shall tend to your real good: life, in all its diversified conditions, and death, in all its harbingers and forms, are yours: 23. And what secures all these to you, completes your happiness, as well as calls for your attachment to him, is, that ye are saved from sin by Christ, cleansed from sin by his sacrifice, and filled with all the blessings of his grace and glory; and Christ is God's dear Son and faithful Servant, set up by him to be the infallible mean of your eternal salvation, to the praise of the glory of his love.

Ver. 3. ^aYe are carnal. By calling the Corinthians 'carnal' the apostle does not mean under the dominion of 'the carnal mind,' Ro. 7, for then, instead of being 'babes in Christ,' they would have been in 'enmity against God.' But he means that, while compared with other believers, they 'came behind in no gift, being enriched in all utterance, and in all knowledge,' ch. 1. 5, 7, yet were they inferior to others in the quality of Christian prudence, which avoids all 'doubtful disputations,' and of the Christian temper which 'bears the infirmities of the weak,' and which in all its witness to the truth, Ro. 14. 1; 15. 1, 'still labours to preserve inviolate the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace,' Ep. 4. 3.

Ver. 12. ^aGold, silver, precious stones—emblems of the glorious truths of the gospel.—Wood, hay, stubble—emblems of errors, not fundamental—but useless, vain, and trifling—such as endless genealogies that never can be settled upon any divine authority, traditions of men, with rites and ceremonies invented as aids to piety, but becoming clogs and weights to the progress of vital godliness. C.

Ver. 15. ^aHe himself shall be saved—because he built upon the foundation, Christ (ver. 10); yet 'his work shall be burned,' because his superstructure consisted of mere rituals and imaginations.—Note. The attempt of Romanists to extract from this passage the figment of purgatory is vain—for every man's works—the things saved and burned are tried in the same fire, ver. 13, 15; and, so far as their authority avails, the doctrine obtains no support from the earlier fathers; and the detected attempt to interpolate Theodoret on the passage, throws more than suspicion over all similar interpretations. C.

Ver. 18. ^aLet him become a fool in the estimation of an ill-judging world, to whom salvation by a crucified Saviour appears the very height of absurdity. C.

REFLECTIONS.—With great faithfulness and prudence ought ministers to accommodate themselves to the capacities and circumstances of their hearers. And 4 For ^aI know nothing by myself; ^hyet am I not hereby justified: but he that judgeth me is the Lord.

5 Therefore¹ judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the heart: and then shall every man have praise of God.

6 And ^hthese things, brethren, I have in a figure transferred to myself and to Apollos for your sakes; that ye might learn in us ^knot to think of men above that which is written, that no one of you be puffed up for one against another.³

7 For ^bwho maketh thee to differ⁴ from another? and what hast thou that thou didst not receive? Now if thou didst receive it, why dost thou glory, as if thou hadst not received it?

8 Nowⁿ ye are full, now ye are rich, ye have often great pretenders to wisdom and knowledge have no true grace in their heart. When all Christ's faithful ministers are, under him, united in the same spirit and design, how absurd is it to kindle contentions in the church by setting up one above another! Their honour is great in being workers together with God in the salvation of men. And the effectual success of their labours flows wholly from his power and grace. Yet none must expect God to bless their administrations, but in preaching Christ as the sole foundation of the hopes and happiness of sinful men laid by his Father. Terrible is their ruin who refuse to build on him; and great their loss who attempt to mingle their own fancies with the doctrines of Christ. Exact shall be our future account; and our eternal honours be proportioned to our right improvement of Christ and his truths on earth. And very necessary is holiness in every church and member thereof. Great is the danger of self-conceit. And it is very sinful and ruinous to trust our eternal happiness to the care and direction of our carnal wisdom, which is so insignificant before God. But extensive is their happiness, and high their honour, who, as united to Christ through his sacrifice, and to God in him, have all things, present and future, secured as their property, and divinely directed to their best advantage.

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 1. Let none depreciate us ministers, or exalt one to the dishonour of another, but account of us all as persons called and qualified by Christ for dispensing to Jews and Gentiles the great and unsearchable doctrines and ordinances of the grace of God. 2. And, as stewards of Christ, we must take heed that we by no means neglect, pervert, betray, or deal partially in our trust; but study to be faithful to God, to our own conscience, to the truth of Christ, and to the souls to whom we minister, giving them their proper food in due season. 3. And if any pretend that I am unfaithful, or take offence at my fidelity, I little regard the censures of men, as I am not to stand or fall in the last judgment according to their fallible, partial, and prejudiced sentiments concerning me; nor dare I pretend that my own judgment of my sincerity, faithfulness, and diligence is absolutely right. 4. For though I am not sensible of any allowed unfaithfulness, but have the testimony of my conscience that in simplicity and godly sincerity I have had my conversation in this world; yet such is the inadvertency and treachery of my heart, that I dare not look on this as a justification of my conduct before God, but expect the acceptance of my person and services only through Jesus Christ and his righteousness. 5. Beware therefore of judging our hearts, or of passing uncharitable censures upon us; but wait till Christ at his second coming manifest all the secret transactions, reigned as kings without us: and ¹I would to God ye did reign, that we also might reign with you.

9 For I think that ²God hath set forth us the apostles last,⁵ as it were appointed to death: for we are made a spectacle⁶ unto the world, and to angels, and to men.

10 We⁴ are fools for Christ's sake, but ye are wise in Christ; we are weak, but ye are strong; ye are honourable, but we are despised.⁷

11 Even⁸ unto this present hour we both hunger, and thirst, and are naked, and are buffeted, and have no certain dwelling-place;

12 And⁹ labour, working with our own hands: being⁴ reviled, we bless; being persecuted, we suffer it:

13 Being defamed, we entreat: "we are made as the filth of the world, and are the offscouring of all things unto this day.

14 I¹⁰ write not these things to shame you,⁸ but as my beloved sons I warn you.

15 For though ye have ten thousand instructors in Christ, yet have ye not many fathers: ¹¹for in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the gospel.

17 For this cause have I sent unto you ²Timotheus, who is my beloved son, and faithful in the Lord, who shall bring you into remembrance of my ways which be in Christ, as I teach every where in every church.

18 Now some ³are puffed up,⁹ as though I would not come to you.

19 But⁴ I will come to you shortly, if the Lord will; and will know, not the speech of them which are puffed up, but the power.

20 For⁵ the kingdom of God is not in word, but in power.

21 What will ye? shall I come unto you ⁶with a rod, or in love, and ⁷in the spirit of meekness?

CHAPTER V.

1 The incestuous person 6 is cause rather of shame unto them, than of rejoicing. 7 The old leaven is to be purged out. 10 Heinous offenders are to be shunned and avoided.

IT is reported commonly that there is fornication among you, and ⁸such fornication as is not so much as named among the Gentiles, that one should have his father's wife.

2 And⁹ ye are puffed up,¹ and have not rather thoughts, and desires of men; and then shall every man who has acted uprightly be publicly acknowledged and rewarded by God according to his real character. 6. I have mentioned myself and Apollos in this point, who are distinguished in office and success among you, that you may learn to adjust your sentiments about men, and never pride yourselves in or boast of one preacher in opposition to another. 7. And to humble you, and prevent your idolizing of ministers, think what gifts or graces you or any of them have which ye did not receive freely from God. Why then do ye boast of any of them, as if they were originally your own? 8. For indeed ye seem to pride yourselves on your gifts, graces, and other acquirements, as if, independent of us who first preached the gospel to you, ye had arrived at the highest prosperity; and I heartily wish that ye did remarkably flourish in everything excellent, great, and glorious, that we, as God's instruments in your conversion and edification, might rejoice in your mercy, and share your happiness and Christian esteem. 9, 10. For I really think God hath set forth us apostles, his last and extraordinary messengers in the church, to be a public show before angels and men, devoted to deadly combats, to contempt, trouble, and violence. We are treated as weak, foolish, and despicable, and are loaded with labours, cares, and sufferings for Christ, while ye appear to yourselves and others wise, powerful, honoured, easy, and opulent. 11-13. While ye live in your rich city and commodious dwellings, amidst ease and affluence, we faithful preachers, ever since the Lord called us to this work, have been often destitute of the common necessities of life, and cruelly abused, and driven from place to place, like vagabonds. Meanwhile, to avoid prejudicing men against us as mercenaries, we have earned our daily subsistence by the labour of our own hands; we have earnestly prayed down blessings on them who reproached and cursed us; we have patiently borne all the injuries and abuses we met with; we have humbly exhorted and suppliated them who maliciously slandered us; and notwithstanding all this inoffensive, meek, and winning behaviour, we continue to be treated as the vilest miscreants, who have been the cause of every public calamity, and are fit for nothing but to be killed as sacrifices for the purgation of cities. 14. I have not drawn out this detail of our injurious treatment, and of our meek, patient, and benevolent behaviour under it, in order to expose you to shame among your fellow-Christians, but in order affectionately to warn you against pride, or an unbecoming behaviour to faithful ministers. 15, 16. For though many preachers have laboured to promote your instruction and edification,

I alone have been remarkably honoured as the instrument of your spiritual regeneration and adoption. I therefore beseech you, in the most endearing and condescending manner, that, instead of turning aside after those who desire to corrupt the simplicity of your faith and manners, ye would follow the directions which I, your spiritual father, give you from Christ, and imitate me in faith, holiness, humility, and love. 17. And for this cause I have sent to you Timothy, my dear partner in preaching the gospel, who being converted to Christ by my ministry, and my ordinary attendant, can acquaint you with my uniformity in doctrines and in holy practices, answerable to what I everywhere teach. 18. Some of my opponents boast that I dare not make my personal appearance among you, where I have so many opposers, but must rest content with sending my friend. 19. But if God give me strength and opportunity, I sincerely intend to visit you, and to try those proud pretenders to learning and eloquence as to what authority they have received from Christ to preach his gospel, what of God's gifts and graces appear in their ministrations, and what efficacy their doctrine hath upon their own and others' hearts and lives. 20. For the excellency of the gospel dispensation does not consist in human learning or outward profession, but in an experience of what is wrought by the Spirit of God. Nor is the gospel propagated, or the work of grace begun and carried on in men's souls, but by the miraculous operations and divine energy of the Holy Spirit which attend the plain preaching of a crucified Christ. 21. Think then whether ye would have me come in order to inflict spiritual censures, or even corporeal punishments, upon obstinate transgressors; or, as I earnestly wish, in tender affection, meekness, and gentleness, to encourage, commend, and comfort you.

Ver. 8. It is nothing short of distressing to find expositors pronounce this verse an irony or a sarcasm; figures, upon such a subject, and in such a mood, unworthy a serious man, how much more unworthy the Spirit of God! The words are simple, literal facts—'ye are full' of the gift of righteousness, Mat. 5. 6; Ro. 5. 17: 'ye are rich' in all utterance and knowledge, ch. 1. 5: 'ye have reigned,' being 'a royal priesthood,' 1 Pe. 2. 9; and 'would to God ye did reign (in that glory of which ye are heirs, Re. 1. 5, 6), that we also might reign with you,' Re. 5. 10; and so escape the toils and miseries of this present evil world! C.

Ver. 13. Some, instead of 'filth,' render the word a lustrative sacrifice; and 'offscouring' a redemption sacrifice, in allusion to a heathen custom of devoting some one to death as a sacrifice in times of drought, famine, or plague, &c. The Authorized Version seems, however, to convey a more natural meaning. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Important is that trust of divine truths and human souls which Christ has committed to his ministers. And with great care and faithfulness ought they to declare and explain his mysteries and dispense his ordinances. It is groundless to be either puffed up or cast down by men's judgment of us. The great point is to approve ourselves to God, by whose judgment we must abide, and who will at last clear us from all false accusations. And never must those who are most conscious of their integrity depend on that, but on faith in Jesus Christ, as the ground of their acceptance to eternal life. With great care ought we to avoid rash censuring of others, in the view of that last judgment in which the secrets of men's hearts and lives shall be discovered. And there is need of deep humility when our defects are so great and many, and all our gifts and graces are the free gifts of God. Alas! that many should be puffed up with spiritual gifts, or even with riches or honour in this life, and the faithful servants of Christ be chiefly exposed to poverty, disgrace, and violent persecution. But it is delightful when Christians and ministers shine in meekness, patience, and returning of good for evil. Great wisdom is necessary in faithful reproofs, that they may neither provoke nor expose. And Christians need to be frequently reminded of admonitions formerly given them. With great care should they copy after the example of their godly ministers. And if faithful ministers bear strong affection to such as have been converted to Christ by their ministry, those converts ought fervently to love, regard, and reverence them as their spiritual fathers, and study that they may be always not grieved correctors but joyful comforters of them. It is not fine words or fair speeches, but the power of the Holy Ghost changing the heart and purifying the practice, that will prove men real ministers or Christians.

CHAPTER V. Ver. 1, 2. I must now mention some particular offences among you; and first, it is publicly reported, to the great scandal of your holy religion, that one of your members lives in the most shocking incest with his own stepmother—a form of whoredom detested by, and scarcely known among, civilized heathens; and, nevertheless, many of you, puffed up with a conceit of your gifts and attainments, have overlooked, if not boasted of him, instead of being deeply concerned for the dishonour hereby done to Christ, the disgrace brought upon his church, and the hurt done to the soul of the offender and of others, and of being careful to have such an infamous sinner removed from your holy communion. 3. Therefore, though I am not personally present to direct or influence your procedure, yet being earnestly desirous of your true honour and welfare, under the special direction of the Holy Ghost, I have considered and determined how this base scandal ought to be censured. 4, 5. That ye whom Jesus Christ hath made spiritual mourned, that he that hath done this deed might be taken away from among you.

3 For^e I verily, as absent in body, but present in spirit, have judged² already, as though I were present, concerning him that hath so done this deed;

4 In^d the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, when ye are gathered together, and my spirit, with the power of our Lord Jesus Christ,³

5 To^e deliver such an one unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus.

6 Your^g glorying is not good. Know ye not that ^a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump?

keep company, if any man that is called a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner; with such an one no not to eat.⁷

12 For what have I to do to judge⁸ them also that are without? do not ye judge⁹ them that are within?⁸

13 But them that are without 'God judgeth. Therefore 'put away from among yourselves that wicked person.

CHAPTER VI.

1 The Corinthians must not vex their brethren, in going to law with them: 6 especially under infidels. 9 The unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God. 15 Our bodies are the members of Christ, 19 and temples of the Holy Ghost. 16, 17 They must not therefore be defiled.

DARE any^a of you, having a matter against another, go to law before the unjust, and not before the saints?

2 Do ye not know that *'the saints shall judge the world?*¹ and if the world shall be judged by you, are ye unworthy to judge the smallest matters?

3 Know ye not that we shall 'judge angels? how much more things that pertain to this life?

4 If then ye have judgments of things pertaining to this life, set them to judge who are least esteemed in the church.

5 I speak to your shame. Is it so, that there rulers in his church, should, as a court constituted in his name, and after solemn prayer for his direction and assistance, with my hearty approbation, in his name and authority, as the great institutor and ratifier of the sentence, fully excommunicate this notorious offender from all fellowship with the visible church, and deliver him back into the visible kingdom of the devil, as one who has no manifest claim to the promises of the new covenant—in order that, by the blessing of God on this awful sentence, his prevailing corruptions may be mortified and subdued, and he, through fear, grief, and shame, brought to such repentance and reformation as may issue in his solemn acquittal and salvation in the last judgment. 6. Your glorying in such a person, be his gifts and attainments what they will, or in your own spiritual gifts, or the prosperity of your church, is extremely sinful and dangerous. Know ye not that a single instance of scandal or manifest error connived at tends to corrupt the minds and practices of others, and to infect and defile the whole church? 7. In imitation of the Jews, who purge their houses from leaven at their passover, labour not only to purge out corrupt affections from your own hearts, but to cleanse the church from scandalous persons and sins, in honour of Jesus Christ, who offered himself as an atoning sacrifice to God, in order that his people might be cleansed from all iniquity, and rendered zealous of good works. 8. Let us therefore lead our whole life on earth, and particularly celebrate the New Testament festival of his supper, without sinful fellowship with notorious offenders, or indulgence of corrupt affections, envy, malice, or the like; but with integrity and godly simplicity, and a real love to the brethren, according to the truth of the gospel. 9. Being absent, I have in this epistolary manner warned you to abstain from all familiar intercourse with persons addicted to whoredom, as thereby ye would harden them in their sins, and they would tempt you to follow their detestable example. 10. Yet I mean not that you should have no dealings with heathens who live in whoredom, manifest covetousness, extortion, or idolatry; for then it would be necessary for you to leave this world, which is everywhere filled with such. 11. But I insist that if any of your professed Christian brethren be chargeable with uncleanness, or be inordinate lovers of money, or join in idolatrous worship, or be given to wrathful, abusive, and opprobrious language, or be lovers of much drinking, or intoxicated with liquor, or given to take advantage of others by excessive rents or prices, ye carefully avoid all voluntary familiarity with them at common meals, and especially partaking with them at the Lord's table. 12. For I, as a minister of Christ, have no power to prohibit such converse as the civil offices, secular affairs, and relations of life call you to; nor have ye power to judge and censure any offenders but such as are of your own spiritual society. 13. Those flagitious sinners who are not in church-fellowship with us must be left to the righteous judgment and wrath of God; but be ye careful to exclude this incestuous member from your church-fellowship, and from all familiar and chosen conversation.

Ver. 5. Satan being 'the god of this world,' 2 Co. 4. 4, to deliver any one to Satan is simply to eject him from the church, and send him out to the world from whence he came. For the destruction of the flesh. Not for the infliction of disease, but for the destruction of the fleshly appetites, that the 'outcast' may be made sensible of his sin, grieve for the loss of his old friends in the church, become ashamed of his new associates in the world, and so, through godly sorrow, be led to repentance and salvation. C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is very shameful to hear of such scandalous enormities among Christians as even heathens would be ashamed of. And highly unbecoming when professors, for the sake of party attachments or great gifts, are puffed up rather than humbled and mourning under such awful events. Flagrant and obstinate sinners must be solemnly cast out from the Christian church, that their souls may be recovered, and the honour of Christ and the purity of his church preserved. For how inconsistent is it for those who were saved by and live upon a crucified Saviour to indulge themselves in unholiness of heart and life! And extremely infectious are scandals if they be not seasonably censured and restrained. Very awful is an excommunication from the church, inflicted in the name of and ratified by Jesus Christ the supreme Judge. And happy or terrible are its effects as men are duly affected with it. Heinous and highly aggravated are the iniquities of professed Christians; they render them more detestable and infectious than the very heathens. With conscientious care should all Christians forbear familiar converse with such scandalous professors, in order to render them sensible of their sins. And church-officers ought to proceed with the greatest prudence in their censures with respect to their subjects, manner, and end. But thrice happy will it be when we shall be no more plagued with wicked persons, lusts, or practices.

CHAPTER VI. Ver. 1. And since ye have power to call your own members to account, and to judge of their behaviour, how imprudent, unbrotherly, and shameful must it be for you to prosecute your small differences, in civil affairs, in a litigious manner, even before heathen magistrates, to the scandal of your religion, rather than submit to the arbitration of your fellow-Christians! 2, 3. Do ye not know that faithful ministers and really holy persons shall at the last day sit with Christ on his throne, and give their assent to the sentences which he shall pass upon wicked men and angels? Are ye not then able to settle matters, nay, small matters, of right and wrong between one another? 4. If therefore ye have hereafter any civil differences, submit them to the arbitration of some of your brethren in the church, who are not ministers, but sensible and disinterested persons; nay, rather submit them to the arbitration of two or three of the weakest honest Christians, than bring them before heathen judges. 5. What a shame and reproach is it to you, who boast so much of your wisdom, that you cannot find among yourselves any persons able to adjust trifling debates about civil property! 6. But brethren, united together in the same saving head, faith, and fellowship, to the reproach of all, litigiously prosecute one another before heathen magistrates! 7. This your conduct is extremely sinful, contrary to Christian prudence, forbearance, love and friendship, and highly dishonourable to your meek and lowly Lord and Saviour, the Prince of Peace, who secured peace with his blood. Why then do ye not rather part with what is strictly your due, than expose one another, and even Christ himself, to contempt in the open courts of profane heathens? 8. Nay, I find, that instead of meek and patient bearing and forgiving injuries, too many of you by lawsuits really defraud and unjustly wrong your Christian brethren. 9, 10. But know, and consider this plain and awful truth, that whatever profession such people make, they are utterly unfit for, have no title to, and shall never be admitted to enjoy the blessings of grace or glory, who live impenitent and unbelieving under the guilt and dominion of any is not a wise man among you? no, not one that shall be able to judge between his brethren?

6 But brother goeth to law with brother, and that before the unbelievers.

7 Now^a therefore there is utterly a fault among you, because ye go to law one with another. Why do ye not rather take wrong? why do ye not rather suffer yourselves to be defrauded?

8 Nay, ye do wrong, and defraud, and that your brethren.

9 Know^e ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived: neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, 10 Nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God.

11 And^d such were some of you: but ye ^aare washed,² but ye are sanctified,³ but ye are justified⁴ in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God.

12 Allⁱ things are lawful unto me, but all things are not expedient:⁵ all things are lawful for me, but I will not be brought under the power^j of any.⁶

13 Meats^k for the belly, and the belly for meats: but God shall destroy both it and them. Now^l the body is not for fornication, but for the Lord; and the Lord for the body.⁷

14 And ^aGod hath both raised up the Lord, and will also raise up us by his own power.

15 Know ye not that ^eyour bodies are the members of Christ? shall I then take the members of Christ, and make them the members of an harlot? God forbid!

16 What! know ye not that he which is joined to an harlot is one body? for ²two, saith he, shall be one flesh.

17 But^a he that is joined unto the Lord is one spirit.⁸

18 Flee^e fornication. Every sin that a man doeth is without the body; but he that committeth fornication sinneth against his own body.

19 What! ^kknow ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own?

20 For ^tye are bought with a price: therefore ^gglorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's.

CHAPTER VII.

2 He treateth of marriage, 4 showing it to be a remedy against fornication: 10 and that the bond thereof ought not lightly to be dissolved. 18, 20 Every man must be content with his vocation. 25 Virginity wherefore to be embraced. 35 And for what respects we may either marry, or abstain from marrying.

NOW concerning the things whereof ye ¹wrote unto me: ^aIt is good for a man not to ^ttouch a woman.

2 Nevertheless, ^cto avoid fornication, let every sin. Deceive not your souls with flattering fancies, hypocritical pretences, or presumptuous confidences. The nature, perfections, purposes, and word of God render it absolutely impossible that any, who live and die impenitent, in idolatry, uncleanness, dishonesty, drunkenness, or reviling, should ever be members of his kingdom of grace here or heavenly glory hereafter. 11. And remember, for your humiliation and warning, and for exciting your admiration of God's blessed grace towards you, that, while ye continued heathens and unregenerate, some of you were chargeable with these detestable crimes: but in his most transcendent mercy all of you, who truly believe in Christ, have been graciously cleansed from the guilt and the domineering and defiling power of your sinful lusts, and brought into a state of favour with God, promised eternal life, and made partakers of holiness in nature and practice, through the righteousness and intercession of Christ, and by the applying, quickening, renewing, and purifying influences of the Holy Ghost, bestowed upon us by our gracious God, and through faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, who gave himself for us. 12. With respect to eating of meats, with which some of your pretenders to wisdom hold fornication equally indifferent, I allow that, whatever is not directly or indirectly forbidden by Christ in his Word, is lawful in itself; but it is not in every circumstance conducive to good purposes, but may be very injurious to others. I therefore allow myself to do, or not to do, what is indifferent in itself, precisely as it tends to promote good or bad ends; but will not suffer myself to be enslaved by any ungovernable passion for it, nor would I submit to the arbitrary imposition of it upon my conscience by any man. 13. Yea, all kinds of food are formed answerable to our belly, and our belly to them; though we shall soon have no need of them, being removed to the eternal state.—But fornication is a thing of a quite different nature. God never intended nor formed our body for it; but to be used for the honour and in the service of Jesus Christ, as redeemed by, united to, and to be glorified together with him; 14. And God has raised up the dead body of the Lord Christ from the grave as a pledge, earnest, and security, that he will in due time, by the same almighty power, raise up the dead bodies of his true members to a like blessed and glorious immortality. 15. Know ye not then, that your bodies, being constituent parts of your persons united to Christ, must, as his members, die and sleep in him, and be raised to glory with him? How shameful then, how wicked, and dishonourable to him and to his law, would it be to alienate them from his service and honour, and, as it were, rend them off from him; and by committing uncleanness, render them the members of a lewd woman! 16. Do not ye, who pretend to so much knowledge, understand that the man who unites himself in criminal affection or conversation with a harlot disgraces himself, and becomes one body with her, in a sense extremely vile and abominable? 17. But, on the contrary, he who is vitally united to the Lord Jesus as his Head and Husband, partakes of, and is animated by, that very same divine Spirit which dwells in Christ; and so, being mystically one Spirit with him, every affront done to that man's body must be an affront to Christ himself. 18. Abhor therefore, and resolutely abandon, all manner of uncleanness, and keep at the greatest distance from it. Watch and pray against all inclinations, enticements, and all appearances and occasions of it. For he that is guilty of it not only sins against God, his soul, or his neighbour, as in other sins, but debases his body, and unworthily sacrifices it to the most brutish and abominable lust. 19, 20. Know ye not that, if ye be true believers, your bodies, through their union to Christ, are a sacred, dedicated, and appropriated habitation of God the Holy Ghost, who is freely and divinely bestowed upon you, in which his person dwells, and his sanctifying influences are exerted. And ye are not your own property, to dispose of your bodies according to any brutish inclinations; but ye were redeemed from the curse of the law, and from sin, Satan, and everlasting ruin, and secured, for the service and enjoyment of the holy and blessed God, through faith in his Son: labour therefore, through grace, to yield your bodies and all their members, as well as your souls, with all their faculties, as instruments of righteousness to God, that ye may never alienate and debase his peculiar property, but in all things obey and glorify him with that which he hath created, preserved, redeemed, and sanctified.

Ver. 18. Idolatry (1st, 2d, and 10th commandments) is 'without the body,' always worshipping something outward. Profanity (3d commandment) rests in the mind and word. Sabbath-breaking (4th commandment) consists in the disregard of an outward institution. Disobedience to parents, killing, and stealing (5th, 6th, and 8th commandments), are all sins against others, and the soul which it debases. But fornication (7th commandment) is a sin directly against the body which it degrades. -C.

REFLECTIONS.—Great shall be the honour of the saints to sit with Christ on his throne at the last day, and as assessors to concur in the condemnation of devils and wicked men! And it is shameful, then, if they cannot adjust trifling disputes without going to law one with another. How much more like Christians, as well as profitable, would it be to settle them by kind arbitration, than by litigious lawsuits! And it is very base for professed Christians to act as if they neither regarded the honour of Christ nor his people, if they can but secure external advantages to themselves. It is absurd to hope for heavenly happiness, without being weaned from our lusts and reformed from our gross sins. Jesus' word, blood, and Spirit make a most evident and important change upon the most notorious sinners. And how blessed, how deeply indebted to free grace, are the partakers of it! It is absurd for such to disturb their consciences with scruples about meats and drinks, or such like trifles, or to enslave them to human impositions; and more base immoderately to indulge their sensual appetite in the use of meats and drinks, which will soon be entirely useless. Infinitely detestable is every form of uncleanness; and contrary to the law of nature and marriage, to the noble purposes for which our bodies were designed, and to which those of saints shall be raised at the last day. Yea, much more so to our relation and intimate union with Christ as his members, and his right of securing our souls and bodies to be eternal instruments of glorifying God. It is highly dishonourable to his name, and debasing, to ourselves, and a vile indignity to the Holy Ghost, who dwells in our bodies, as well as in our souls.

* The meaning of this verse has been grievously misunderstood by 19 sects and commentators. The 'permission' refers not to the authority by which the apostle speaks, but to the recommendation he gives in ver. 5; and this recommendation all depended on the possibility of their being tempted by incontinence. Paul gives it not as an absolute command to be obeyed in all cases, but as an allowance for those to whom he was writing. The real sense of the verse is:—'But this I say by way of allowance, or permission for you, under your peculiar circumstances, and not by way of express command, designed for all under every circumstance.'—P.

14 For⁹ the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified by the husband: else were your children¹⁰ unclean; but now are they holy.

15 But if the unbelieving depart, let him depart. A brother or a sister is not under bondage in such cases: but¹¹ God hath called us to peace.¹

16 For⁷ what knowest thou, O wife, whether thou shalt save thy husband? or how knowest thou, O man, whether thou shalt save thy wife?

17 But⁷ as God hath distributed to every man, as the Lord hath called every one, so let him walk. And¹² so ordain I in all churches.

18 Is⁴ any man called being circumcised? let him not become uncircumcised. Is any called in uncircumcision? let him not be circumcised.

19 Circumcision¹³ is nothing, and uncircumcision is nothing, but the keeping of the commandments of God.

20 Let⁷ every man abide in the same calling wherein he was called.

CHAPTER VII. Ver. 1-6. With respect to your question proposed to me in your letter, The unmarried state, in such times of persecution and uncertainty, is preferable to the married. But it is far better to marry than to expose one's self, or any other, to temptations to uncleanness; and married persons ought to take all proper opportunities of testifying their relation and affection to each other. And that Satan may have no occasion to tempt them to unchastity, let even their withdrawal from one another, for the purpose of solemn fasting and prayer, be with mutual consent, and for short times. But this I, as an inspired apostle, advise to, as most agreeable to your holy profession in your different circumstances, not as an express command of Christ. 7-9. For I could wish that every unmarried Christian could live as contented in a single life as I do; but every man must act according to his own temper, disposition, and situation, and the gifts and abilities with which God hath furnished him for the ends of his glory. If such as are unmarried can continue such without danger of uncleanness, they will, in these troublesome times, find many advantages for the service of God. But if, by the grace which they have received, they cannot duly restrain their animal inclinations, it is better for them to marry some proper object; it being far more wise, dutiful, and comfortable to do so, than to live under the tormenting or inflaming power of impure desires of unlawful enjoyments. 10, 11. And for directing such as are married, there is no need of further inspiration; the Lord Jesus having expressly commanded that wives should never voluntarily depart from their husbands, nor husbands put away their wives, except for the cause of fornication before, or adultery after, marriage; or, if they voluntarily part, both parties should live single, or rather study to be reconciled one to another. 12-14. And, as inspired by God, I charge you, that no Christians think of parting from those husbands or wives with whom they were married before their conversion, on account of their continuing heathens, as the Jews were commanded to do in the time of Nehemiah, but dwell with them in the most friendly, peaceable, and engaging manner: for even heathens are separated to a holy use, by having Christian wives or husbands: and hence the children begotten between them are held by God, not as unclean heathens, but as externally, relatively, and federally holy; entitled to all the privileges of the new covenant equally as if both parents had been Christians. 15, 16. But if their heathen yoke-fellows, notwithstanding all prudent means to prevent it, will obstinately desert them, Christians are not obliged to enslave their consciences to their humours, or to continue in marriage relation to such as obstinately break the bond and defeat the ends of that relation. Meanwhile, they ought to do everything consistent with truth and holiness, in order to engage these heathen consorts to live with them:—for none knows but, by their meek and kind behaviour, through the blessing of Christ, and working of his Spirit, they may be rendered instrumental in gaining them to Christ for the salvation of their souls. 17-19. And whatever the event be, let every one of you, and of other churches, study to walk in a course of holiness and virtue answerable to the condition or relation in which he stood when converted. Never trouble yourselves whether ye were originally Jews or Gentiles: for it is of no account with God whether ye be circumcised or not; but whether, according to his commandments, you receive the Lord Jesus, and walk in him righteously and godly. 20-22. And as redeeming grace was never intended to alter the stations or duties of secular life, but to enforce the improvement of them in the manner most conducive to the glory of God, study to rest contented with those very stations in which you were before your conversion: and if you were converted in the station of a servant or slave, be not uneasy, as if that servile condition would render you less acceptable to God or honourable to your Christian faith or fellowship; yet, if you can have your freedom by fair means, thankfully accept and faithfully improve it: for a converted slave is as much freed from the bondage of sin, Satan, and the broken law, as any other; and a converted freed man is under as deep obligations to serve Christ as if he had been a servant or slave to men. 23, 24. Since therefore your spiritual and religious freedom, secured by Jesus' infinitely precious blood, is perfectly equal, resolutely maintain this, and never serve the lusts or sinful commandments of men, nor suffer the duties of your civil relations to hinder your service of him; and in whatever station you were converted to the Christian faith, rest contented with it, as ordered for you by the providence of God; and study to fulfil the duties of it as under his eye, in obedience to him, by assistance from him, and in fellowship with him. 25-28. With respect to persons who were never married, the Lord Jesus indeed left us no express command on this point; but I, as his faithful apostle, directed by his inspiring Spirit, advise, that if they can remain unmarried, without endangering their chastity, they should do so, for their greater convenience in these perilous times. But let such as are married study, with cordial affection and contentment, to bear the encumbrances which attend their state; and let such as are unmarried beware of marrying rashly, lest they involve their wives and children in trouble along with themselves. Nevertheless, if any find marriage a necessary mean of preserving their chastity, they may lawfully enter into it; only it will in these times expose them more to anxiety and trouble. But I shall add no more, lest I should discourage some who are married, or hinder some from marriage whose natural inclinations call to it, or make any to think the unmarried state more holy in itself. 29-31. But what I now subjoin is of infinite importance, that in a very little time all earthly stations, relations, sorrows, and comforts will leave us, and we shall be launched forth into an eternal state; it is therefore proper that our hearts should sit loose to them as quite unsubstantial and transitory, and only so far to be accounted of as they are God's gifts to be improved for his honour, and as means of preparing us for eternal fellowship with him. 32-35. The reason why I have preferred a single state of life to the married, is, that I would have you as much as possible freed from all the anxious cares and perplexing encumbrances of this present world, that ye may, with less hindrance and distraction, attend the service of God, and pursue the salvation of your souls; for they who are unmarried have most liberty to lay out all their thoughts, time, and labour about what pertains to the service and fellowship of God; whereas they who are married must be employed in providing for their families, and rendering themselves agreeable and helpful to their yoke-fellows.—My whole aim is the advantage of your souls, not to ensnare any into unchaste inclinations or practices;

21 Artst thou called being a servant?² care not for it: but if thou mayest be made free, use it rather.³

22 For^y he that is called in the Lord, being a servant, is the Lord's freeman:⁴ likewise also he that is called, being free, is Christ's servant.

23 Ye^z are bought with a price; ^abe not ye the servants of men.⁵

24 Brethren, ^{let} every man, wherein he is called, therein ^{abide} with God.

25 Now^d concerning virgins I have no commandment of the Lord: yet I give my judgment as one that hath ^{obtained} mercy of the Lord to be faithful.⁶

26 I suppose⁷ therefore that ^{this} is good for the present distress;⁸ I say, that it is good for a man⁹ so to be.¹

27 Art thou bound unto a wife?² seek not to be loosed. Art thou loosed from a wife?³ seek not a wife.

28 But^h and if thou marry, thou hast not sinned; and if a virgin marry, she hath not sinned. Nevertheless such shall have trouble² in the flesh: but I spare you.³

29 But this I say, brethren, ^{the time is} short:⁴ it remaineth, that ^{both} they that have wives be as though they had none;

30 And they that weep, as though they wept not; and they that rejoice, as though they rejoiced not; and they that buy, as though they possessed not;

31 And they that use this world, as not abusing it: for the ^{fashion} of this world passeth away.

32 But I would have you ^{without} carefulness.⁵ Heⁿ that is unmarried careth for the things that belong to the Lord,⁶ how he may please the Lord:

33 But he that is married careth for the things that are of the world, how he may please his wife.

34 There is difference also between a wife and a virgin. The unmarried woman careth for the things of the Lord, that she may be holy ^{both} in body and ⁱⁿ spirit: but ^{she} that is married careth for the things of the world, how she may please her husband.

35 And this I speak for your own profit; not that I may cast a snare upon you, but ^{for} that which is comely, and that ye may attend upon the Lord without distraction.

36 But if any man think that he behaveth himself uncomely⁷ toward his virgin, if she pass the flower of her age, and need so require, let him do what he will, he sinneth not: let them marry.

37 Nevertheless he that standeth steadfast in his heart, having no necessity,⁸ but hath power over his own will, and hath so decreed in his heart that he will keep his virgin, doeth well.

38 So^r then, he that giveth her in marriage doeth well; but he that giveth her not in marriage doeth better.

39 The^s wife is bound by the law as long as her husband liveth; but if her husband be dead, she is at liberty to be married to whom she will; ^{only} in the Lord.

40 But^a she is happier if she so abide, after my judgment: and ^{I think} also that I have the Spirit of God.

2 And^d if any man think that he knoweth any thing, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know.

REFLECTIONS.—Persons married or unmarried, bond or free, should labour to live contented with their lot, and always to the glory of God. And with great prudence should they marry or remain single, as best tends to prevent sinful impurities and promote their more active and undisturbed service of God. In marrying, Christians should make conscience of choosing none but such as appear to fear God, and of entering into that relation with much serious consideration and solemn prayer. And married persons should cultivate the most endeared mutual affection, and live together as heirs of the grace of life, as not only their temporal but their own and their children's spiritual and eternal happiness depend so much thereon. A deep sense of the vanity and shortness of time, and of the importance and length of eternity, ought always to regulate our affections and conduct. That is always best for us that is best for our soul; and whether single or married, our chief aim and endeavour ought to be to please the Lord, and to be holy both in body and spirit.

CHAPTER VIII. Ver. 1. With respect to what but that, in the most easy and becoming manner, ye may have abundant liberty for waiting upon, keeping close to, and serving the Lord Jesus, and God the Father through him, in all religious duties, without disquiet, perplexity, and wandering of heart. 36-38. But if any parent or guardian find that the restraint of his daughter or pupil from marriage beyond the flower of her age is calculated to ensnare her; or if a young man find that his temper, honour, or chastity call for it; it is very lawful and commendable that they should marry: but if they have no such call to marriage, it is still more advisable and commendable to refrain from it in these persecuting times. Thus parents who give their children in marriage, and children who, having gained their consent, enter into it, act a wise and lawful part; but if, without danger of sin or infamy, they continue unmarried, they better provide against the inconveniences of these troublesome times, and for a more uninterrupted liberty of serving God. 39, 40. But let the state of the church be as difficult as it will, the law of God and nature, and the marriage vow, bind a wife to abide with and cleave to her husband, till death part them, unless he voluntarily and resolutely leave her, or be guilty of adultery; but if he die before her, she may then marry another, but let it always be one who makes a credible profession of Christianity, and with whom she may expect the approbation, presence, and blessing of God in their conjugal relation, that they may dwell together, worshipping God, and religiously training up their children. But, indeed, I think that if she continue single, she will find it most convenient in these dangerous times, and best on religious accounts.—And whatever your new teachers insinuate, I know I have suggested these admonitions under the special direction of the Holy Ghost.

Ver. 14. Sanctified is applied either to persons rendered absolutely holy by the renewing of the Spirit of God, or to those who are merely separated and dedicated to the service of God, without any spiritual change; and in this latter application it must here be understood.—New are they holy. Dedicated to God by virtue of the conjugal covenant. C.

Ver. 15. Some think this liberation from bondage means—that the marriage is dissolved by the act of desertion, and that the brother or sister is free to marry another. This, however, seems decidedly at variance with our Lord's decision, Mat. 5. 32, and the apostle's own direction, ver. 10, 11-39. Ro. 7. 1-3. The 'bondage' from which the believer is freed is not therefore the marriage vow, but the following of husband or wife in a false religion. But while difference of religion does not dissolve the marriage bond, if the dissatisfied or irritated unbeliever will separate, the believer may blamelessly submit—remembering, however, that the call of God is not to separation, but rather to the cultivation of domestic affection and 'peace'. C.

never profit our souls or recommend us to God, and our prudent refraining from it can do us no hurt. 9. It is therefore certainly your duty carefully to avoid all use of your freedom, or right to eat of these things, which tends to insnare such as are weak in knowledge or faith, and make them sin in doing that with a doubting or superstitious mind which ye do safely and without any doubt. 10. For if such weak persons see you feasting upon these meats in an idol's temple, will they not be emboldened to eat them with an idolatrous veneration of the idol? 11. And thus, through your knowledge leading you to an imprudent use of your liberty, your weak, mistaken, and doubting brother, for whom you charitably believe Christ laid down his infinitely precious life, is led into damnable sin, or to destroy his own inward peace and comfort. 12. Now, while you thus lead your Christian brethren into sinful and idolatrous practices, and wound, disturb, and defile their tender and unsettled consciences, ye sin not only against them but against Christ, whose members they are; and ye attempt to defeat the designs of his love, in what he suffered for their comfort and salvation. 13. This consideration bears such weight with me, that, if my eating of flesh offered to idols, or even of common flesh, should disturb the conscience of my Christian brother, or occasion his falling into sin, I would never indulge myself in eating any more as long as I live.

Ver. 7. The idol feasts were held in the temples, and the offerers were accustomed to invite their friends to partake with them. To these feasts, it appears, the Corinthian Christians were sometimes invited, and that some went through habit contracted in their heathenism; some, to avoid offence, or retain the favour of idolatrous neighbours; and others, because they knew the idol to be a mere stock or stone, and no god—so that the feast appeared to them no act of religion, but a mere social gathering. Still, as this use, or rather abuse, of the temple might lead the ignorant to conclude that such as attended the festivals venerated the idol, the apostle protests against such compliances of the well-instructed, because they might lead the ignorant into sin. See ver. 10. C.

Ver. 10. See there who hast knowledge that the idol is a mere stone, or other material substance, and no god. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Fine and extensive notions in our head, without love to God and men in our heart, do but puff us up with self-conceit, and render us detestable to God. And nothing more plainly manifests our want of solid knowledge than our contempt of others

CHAPTER IX. Ver. 1, 2. It was for this very purpose of avoiding offence that I forbore taking my necessary and due subsistence from you. How absurd then is it to infer from this circumstance that I am not an apostle, when no one can be produced that has more evident claim to that high office! for did not I receive my commission and instruction immediately from Christ himself when he appeared to me? And are not ye Corinthians, who were converted many of you by my ministrations, an evident proof that Christ hath sealed mine office in your conversion, and your enrichment with many excellent gifts and graces? 3-6. I therefore boldly interrogate your new proud preachers, who dare to question my authority. Have I not a divine right to necessary subsistence, not only for myself, but also for a family, if I chose to have one, as well as James, Jude, Peter, or any other apostle? Am I and Barnabas, who were so expressly appointed to the apostolic work by the Holy Ghost, and no other preacher, obliged to maintain ourselves by the labour of our hands? 7. What can be more unreasonable? Have common soldiers, labourers, or shepherds a universally allowed claim at least to a reward of necessary food and raiment? And must we, who, under Christ as our Captain, fight his battles, pull down the strongholds of sin, Satan, and captivate multitudes of

For our sakes, no doubt, this is written: that he that ploweth should plow in hope; and that he that thresheth in hope should be partaker of his hope.

11 If we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing if we shall reap your carnal things?

12 If others be partakers of this power over you, are not we rather? Nevertheless, we have not used this power; but suffer all things, lest we should hinder the gospel of Christ.

13 Do ye not know, that they which minister about holy things live of the things of the temple? and they which wait at the altar are partakers with the altar?

14 Even so hath the Lord ordained, that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel.⁶

15 But I have used none of these things: neither have I written these things, that it should be so done unto me: for it were better for me to die,⁷ than that any man should make my glorying void.

16 For though I preach the gospel, I have nothing to glory of: for necessity is laid upon me; yea, woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel!

gospel of Christ without charge, that I abuse not my power¹ in the gospel.

19 For² though I be free from all men, yet have I made myself servant unto all, that I might gain the more.

20 And unto the Jews I became as a Jew that I might gain the Jews; to them that are under the law, as under the law, that I might gain them that are under the law;

21 To³ them that are without law,⁴ as without law, (being not without law to God,⁴ but under the law to Christ,) that I might gain them that are without law.

22 To⁵ the weak became I as weak, that I might gain the weak.⁵ I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some.

23 And this I do⁶ for the gospel's sake, that I might be partaker thereof with you.

24 Know⁷ ye not that they which run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize? So run, that ye may obtain.

25 And every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things. Now they do it to obtain a corruptible crown; but we an incorruptible.

26 I therefore so run, not as uncertainly;⁸ so fight I, not as one that beateth the air:

dealing with weak Christians, who are apt to be easily grieved or stumbled, I condescend to their weakness, and forbear even things which are in themselves lawful and innocent, that I may prevent their taking offence, and may establish them in the more important points of faith and holiness. In fine, by all lawful expedients, I suit myself to men's diversified tempers and circumstances, in order that, in the hand and by the blessing of Christ, I may be instrumental in delivering them from under the slavery of sin, Satan, and the broken law, and bringing them to share the blessings of spiritual and eternal salvation. 23. All this I do from a sincere and zealous concern to prevent unseasonable exceptions against the gospel of Christ, and that I may recommend and propagate it among persons of every character, that in fellowship with you and others I may share the special benefits of it. 24. To take therefore a hint from your own Grecian races, in which many run while they know that one only shall obtain the prize, let us, by diligent receiving of the Lord Jesus, and walking in him, run our Christian course, in which not one, but all who run, shall receive the gracious reward of eternal life and honour. 25. And as by great moderation in diet the wrestlers and boxers prepare themselves for their public combats, so ought we to mortify every worldly and sinful affection that would hinder us in our Christian warfare; and the rather as our crown of glory is infinitely more excellent and durable than their garlands of flowers, pines, myrtles, olives, bays, laurels, or the like. 26. 27. Under this apprehension I labour to run my Christian race, and fight the good fight of faith, in a most careful and judicious manner, directed by the law of God, and in good earnest against my spiritual enemies.—As combatants strive to beat down and conquer their antagonists, so do I, by faith, repentance, watchfulness, fastings and prayer, mortification and self-denial, labour to subdue my inward corruptions, lest after preaching the gospel to others, instead of sharing with them in the blessed fruits of it, I should, in the last judgment, be esteemed as one whose works are unfit to be rewarded.

REFLECTIONS.—It is a great comfort to ministers

CHAPTER X.

1 The sacraments of the Jews 6 are types of ours, 7 and their punishments 11 examples for us. 14 We must flee from idolatry. 21 We must not make the Lord's table the table of devils: 24 and in things indifferent we must have regard of our brethren.

MOREOVER, brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea;

2 And were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea;

3 And did all eat the same spiritual meat;

4 And did all drink the same spiritual drink; for they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them: and that Rock was Christ.²

5 But with many of them God was not well pleased; for they were overthrown in the wilderness.

6 Now these things were our examples,* to the intent we should not lust after evil things, as they also lusted.

7 Neither be ye idolaters, as were some of them; as it is written, The people sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to play.

8 Neither let us commit fornication, as some of them committed, and fell in one day three and twenty thousand.

9 Neither let us tempt Christ, as some of them also tempted, and were destroyed of serpents.

10 Neither murmur ye, as some of them also murmured, and were destroyed of the destroyer.

11 Now all these things happened unto them

12 Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall.

13 There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man: but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptator also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it.

18 Behold Israel after the flesh: are not they which eat of the sacrifices partakers of the altar?

19 What say I then? that the idol is any thing, or that which is offered in sacrifice to idols is any thing?

20 But I say, that the things which the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice to devils, and not to God: and I would not that ye should have fellowship with devils.

when they have full evidence of the Lord Christ's calling them to their work, and granting them success in it. And readily ought they to forego their own liberties or claims if it tend to the success of the gospel. But if they do this, it is base to revile their persons or deny their rights on that account. Nothing can be more evident than that ministers have a divine right to a sufficient maintenance from their hearers. Yet never ought the procuring of that to be their great aim, but the glory of God in the conversion and edification of souls; and every form of lawful condescension is to be practised so far as best answers that end. With great faithfulness, care, and pains ought ministers and others to run their Christian course, and fight their spiritual warfare, according to God's Word, and duly to govern their passions, appetites, tempers, and conduct. And with humble and holy jealousy ought ministers to take heed to themselves, their doctrines and practices, that neither they nor their labours may be disapproved and rejected by Christ at his second coming.

CHAPTER X. Ver. 1-5. And to awaken you to run your Christian race with care, diligence, and resolution, and to guard against every idolatrous or other deviation from it, observe, with the utmost attention and deepest concern, the fate of God's highly favoured Israelitish nation;—how, after he had conducted them by a pillar of fire and cloud, and led them through the Red Sea, thereby solemnly initiating them into a peculiar covenant relation with himself by the mediation of Moses, and nourished them with excellent manna from heaven, and water from flinty rocks, which prefigured Christ, and followed them through the Arabian wilderness; and which, as symbols, represented the light, comfort, and deliverance of the gospel church, their solemn instalment in their happy state, and their marvellous and unceasing nourishment,—he was so offended by their apostasy, unbelief, idolatry, murmuring, and other provocations, that almost that whole generation were cut off by miserable deaths in the wilderness, falling short of the promised Canaan, and many of them of the heavenly inheritance. 6-10. Now these things happened to them, and are recorded in Scripture as awful examples, representing to us what fearful judgments we may look for, in time and eternity, if we indulge ourselves in the like murmuring against what God provides for us, or in desiring what he forbids. Let none of you, therefore, like them at Sinai, partake of idolatrous feasts, or in any direct or indirect acknowledgment of heathen idols, lest God's wrath overtake you, as it did them. Neither indulge yourselves in uncleanness, as some of them committed whoredom with the Midianitish women, and were punished by the death of 23,000 in a plague, and 1000 more in a legal process of the magistrates. Neither let any of you distrust the power, faithfulness, and grace of Christ, to help you under difficulties and discouragements, or, through presumptuous sinning, try his patience or defy his power and justice, as they did, and were destroyed by fiery serpents. Neither indulge dissatisfaction and repining complaints of the dispensations of God, or of the afflictions which ye suffer for Christ, or against the persons, dutiful behaviour, or did in the wilderness, and were destroyed by one judgment after another. 11. Now all these public calamities happened to God's ancient professing and favourite people as examples of what we may expect if we imitate them in wickedness: and they are recorded in God's word for warnings to us who live when the Jewish dispensation is just ending, and under the last dispensation of grace which God intends for his church in this world, that we may avoid their sins, in order to escape their punishment. 12. Let therefore self-conceited professors, who pride themselves on their gifts, privileges, attainments, strength, and stability, watch and pray, and, in a dependence on God's grace, use every other mean of his appointment, to prevent backsliding and apostasy. 13. And let those of you who, having no confidence in yourselves, trust wholly to Jesus Christ, and his free grace, for your preservation in the way of duty, remember that no afflictions or temptations have happened to you but such as are common to men in this evil world and imperfect state, and may, through divine help, be borne or overcome; and that God, who has granted you so many promises of support and deliverance, will infallibly fulfil the same, and will not suffer you to be troubled or tempted beyond the measure of strength which he bestows upon you; and knowing that ye cannot always bear up under them, or struggle with them, will in due time grant you an honourable and complete deliverance from them. 14. Therefore, my dear fellow-Christians, awed by these alarming examples on the one hand, and encouraged by the hopes of all needful assistances on the other, detest and avoid to the utmost all idolatry, and all appearances of it, or approaches to it. 15. These solemn warnings I give you, as persons who are acquainted with Christian principles, and even value yourselves upon your superior wisdom and knowledge; and I appeal to your own reason and conscience, and desire you to ponder the weight of what I am going to say. 16. Is not our partaking of the consecrated bread and wine in the Lord's supper an open profession, token, and mean of our joint holy fellowship with Christ, in the benefits of his incarnation, obedience, and suffering,—and a public acknowledgment of our obligations and purpose to yield all holy obedience to him? 17. And does not our partaking of the same loaf or cup signify, that, however different our persons or circumstances be, we are all spiritually connected in the mystical body of Christ's church? 18. And did not the ancient priests and Israelites, by eating their respective shares of the peace-offerings, profess their joint fellowship with and dedication to that God to whom part of it was burned on the altar? 19. I do not, by these instances, insinuate that the nominal gods of the heathens have any real divinity in them, or that meats are made any worse in themselves by being offered to them. 20. But what I intend to suggest is, that the heathens, by sacrificing to these idols, and feasting on their sacrifices, do really worship and hold fellowship with devils: and I would by no means have you to hold fellowship with these unclean spirits or their worshippers. 21. For ye cannot, in consistency with the honour of Christ and his Father, or with your 6 It appears that the Christian women at Corinth claimed for their sex an equality with the other, by the doctrine of Christian freedom, and abolition of sexual distinctions in Christ. Ga. 3.28. The gospel unquestionably did much for the emancipation of women, who in the East were kept in unworthy dependence. But the women in Corinth overstepped the bounds of their sex, in coming forward to pray and to prophesy, as their brethren did, and in the assembled church with uncovered heads. Both of these the apostle disapproved,—as well their coming forward to pray and to prophesy, as their removing the veil; here, however, he blames the latter practice only, and reserves for the former till ch. 14. 24. In order to confine the women to their true limits, he reminds them of their subjection to the man, whom again he assigns his place in the spiritual order of creation, and traces his pre-eminence up to God himself. De l'etere.—P.

CHAPTER XI.

1 He reproveth them, because in holy assemblies 4 their men prayed with their heads covered, and 6 women with their heads uncovered; 17 and because generally their meetings were not for the better, but for the worse, as 21 namely in profaning with their own feasts the Lord's supper. 25 Lastly, he calleth them to the first institution thereof.

BE ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ.

2 Now I praise you, brethren, that ye remember me in all things, and keep the ordinances,¹ as I delivered them to you.

3 But I would have you know, that 'the head of every man is Christ; and 'the head of the woman is the man; and 'the head of Christ is God.

4 Every man praying or prophesying, having his head covered, dishonoureth his head.

5 But every woman that prayeth or prophesieth with her head uncovered, dishonoureth her head: for that is even all one as if she were shaven.²

6 Forⁱ if the woman be not covered, let her also be shorn: but if it be a shame for a woman to be shorn or shaven, let her be covered.

7 For a man indeed ought not to cover his head, forasmuch as 'he is the image and glory of God: but 'the woman is the glory of the man.

8 For 'the man is not of the woman; but the woman of the man.

9 Neither^a was the man created for the woman; but the woman for the man.

Christian profession or edification, at once hold fellowship with Christ and his people in his holy supper, and with devils and their worshippers in their idolatrous feasts. 22. Should we then, who are espoused to Jesus Christ as our spiritual Husband, dare to provoke his jealousy by honouring pretended deities? Are we more able to escape or resist the almighty strokes of his wrath than the Israelites were? 23. No pretence of the indifference of things offered to idols, or of our intending no respect for the idols thereby, can warrant our eating of them: for things very lawful in themselves may become very inexpedient and unedifying in some circumstances, by stumbling others, and drawing them into sin. 24. In such cases Christians must not do what serves their own pleasure, honour, or temporal benefit, but what will tend most to the real and lasting advantage of their neighbours. 25. But though it would be highly criminal and dangerous for any of you to eat meats offered to idols in their temples or idolatrous feasts, yet ye may freely eat whatever is sold in the public market, without any scruple or inquiry whether it has been offered to an idol or not. 26. For God, who is Creator, Proprietor, and Governor of the whole earth and of all its produce, and has now, under the gospel, abolished the ancient typical distinction of meats, allows you to eat whatever can contribute to your health. 27. If therefore any of your heathen neighbours invite you to a meal with them in their own houses, and regard to good manners, and an intention to promote their spiritual edification, incline you to go, eat freely whatever is set before you on the table, without any scrupulous thought or inquiry whether it has been offered to an idol or not. 28. But if he who invited you to the entertainment, or any other, by telling you that it had been offered to an idol, should hint that your eating of it would be a practical allowance of some honour to the idol; then, that neither his, nor your own, nor any other's conscience may be defiled or wounded, and to testify your high detestation of idolatry, eat not of it: for God, who is the proprietor of all the animal and vegetable food on earth, has granted you enough beside what has been offered to idols. 29. Nor ought ye in such points chiefly to regard your own conscience, but the consciences of your neighbours, that they may not by your conduct be grieved, or emboldened to anything unlawful to them: for why should you or I, by an imprudent and unseasonable use of our Christian liberty, tempt other men's consciences to pass a wrong judgment upon our conduct? 30. For if, through the bounty of God's providence, I have an opportunity, and, through the grace of the gospel, have liberty of feeding indifferently upon whatever food is presented to me, yet why should I indulge myself so far as to give any one occasion to reproach me for eating such meats as I receive with prayer to him for his blessing on them, and with religious thankfulness to him for providing and allowing them to me? 31. To close this argument with some important rules:—Not only in your eating and drinking, but in all your conduct, civil or religious, keep the glory of God before you as your principal and last end, and behave as is most conducive toward this. 32. Always carefully avoid whatever can prejudice the minds and hinder the conversion of either Jews or heathens, or may stumble either Jewish or Gentile Christians, or grieve, discourage, or pervert any church-member, strong or weak. 33. And, on the contrary, in Jesus' strength, labour, after my example, to deny yourselves, and study to do or forbear things, as is best suited to the peace, comfort, spiritual advantage, and eternal salvation of all around you.

Ver. 1. The object of the apostle seems to be twofold:—1. To contrast the Jewish with the Christian ordinances and privileges, and possession of privileges, so far from securing church-members from rejection, may aggravate their guilt and their punishment.—Ignorant. Rather, 'unmindful.' C.

Ver. 2. By following Moses into the cloud, and through the sea, they acknowledged his divine mission, and received a Jewish baptism, typical of that Christian baptism which the Corinthians had received.—Note, Here there is a baptized church, including both the adult and the infant. C.

Ver. 7. Play. The original is a word of very general import, and is applied to leaping, dancing, singing, and all other kinds of festive sport. C.

Ver. 9. Some MSS. have 'Lord,' others 'God,' instead of 'Christ,' but they are few, and of little authority. The exhortation affords an irresistible argument for the Godhead of Christ; as it places the temptation of JEHOVAH in the wilderness and of CHRIST in his church upon equal footing. C.

Ver. 11. The ends of the world. The Jews divided the duration of the world into three aeons or ages:—1. Before the law. 2. Under the law. 3. Under Messiah—the last dispensation of God to men. C.

Ver. 17. The words may be rendered, and perhaps more intelligibly, 'for as there is one loaf, we being many are one body; for we all partake of that one loaf.'—Note, The Jewish paschal loaf, or rather cake, was thin and large, so that a great number might partake of one. See Mat. 26. 26. C.

REFLECTIONS.—No visible relation to God, no sacramental privileges, can screen idolaters, fornicators, tempters of Christ, unbelieving murmurers, or any similar transgressors, from his just wrath. And instances of other men's sins and punishment should deter us from sinful indulgences or self-confidence, lest we fall into the like condemnation. Great is the mercy that God's faithfulness and grace secure for his watchful and humble saints, mitigation of, support under, and seasonable deliverance from all their troubles and temptations; that our Redeemer is so mighty, that we may safely trust him; and that he knows best what afflictions we need, and how long we should be exercised with them.—What a great and holy God we have to do with—infinite jealousy of his own honour! And highly do we affront him if in the least we countenance the worshipping of vain idols and impure spirits in them. Marvellous is his condescension and kindness in allowing us intimate fellowship with himself, and appointing solemn ordinances for that purpose. And totally inconsistent with our communion with Christ, and one another as his members, are the very smallest approaches towards fellowship with devils or lusts, or towards giving occasion of grief or sin to the weakest saints or neighbours. Things that are lawful in themselves must never be needlessly

10 For this cause ought the woman to have power³ on her head, because of the angels.⁴

11 Nevertheless, ^{neither} is the man without the woman, neither the woman without the man, in the Lord.

12 For as the woman is of the man, even so is the man also by the woman: but ^{all} things of God.

13 Judge^a in yourselves: is it comely that a woman pray unto God uncovered?

14 Doth not even nature⁵ itself teach you, that if a man have long hair, ^{it is a shame} unto him?

15 But if a woman have long hair, it is a glory to her: for her hair is given her for a covering.⁶

16 But ^{if} any man seem to be contentious, we have no such custom,⁷ neither the churches of God.

17 Now in this that I declare unto you, ^I praise you not, that ye come together, not for the better, but for the worse.

18 For first of all, when ye come together in the church, I hear that there be divisions⁸ among you; and I partly believe it.

19 For there must be also heresies⁹ among you, that they which are approved may be made manifest among you.

20 When ye come together therefore into one place, this is not to eat¹ the Lord's supper.²

21 For^a in eating, every one taketh before other his own supper: and one is hungry, and another is drunken.³

or unseasonably used to the ensnaring of others. God, to whom all things pertain, has given them to be used freely, or with restraint, as best tends to edification. And his glory therefore, and the spiritual advantage of our neighbours, ought to be our leading aims in all our actions, natural, civil, or religious.

CHAPTER XI. Ver. 1. Carefully therefore follow my directions, and imitate my example, in condescension to the weaknesses and prejudices of others for their good; and in everything else which I copy after the perfect pattern of our great Lord and Master Jesus Christ. 2. And indeed, my dear brethren, I cannot but commend you, that, notwithstanding all that your false teachers have done to corrupt you, the better part of you still discover the most dutiful regard to my apostolic authority, reputation, and comfort, and to the most important doctrines which I preached to you, and observe most of the rules relative to worship which I taught you. 3. Many irregularities, however, have been introduced into your church. Some of your women, under the pretext of praying or prophesying by immediate inspiration, appear in your public assemblies unveiled, and thus assume an undue authority over the men, or imitate the heathen priestesses. I beg you would seriously consider, that by divine appointment, suited to the nature of things, the Son of God, who created all things, is made head over his church, and over all men for her benefit; and husbands, according to the superiority of their sex, are the head of government to their wives; and God the Father, who has put all things under Christ, has, in that view, an authority over him as man and mediator. 4. Now the veiling of the head being a badge of modesty and subjection, and uncovering of it a token of superiority, in your country and many others, every man, who, by an extraordinary influence of the Spirit, leads your public worship in praying or preaching with a veil on his head or face, dishonours Jesus Christ, from whom he received his authority. 5. But every woman, who,

by the special influence of the Holy Ghost, pours out her prayers to God, or delivers exhortations to the people, with her head unveiled, shows a disrespect to her husband and his whole sex; for that is all one in signification as if she wore her hair short in the manner of a man. 6. If therefore women will throw off their veils, those badges of modesty and subjection, let them cut their hair short as men do: and if, as every one must, they think that immodest and contrary to custom, let them keep on their veils. 7. For men, being the honourable representations of God's supreme and glorious dominion over all, ought to mark their head with no token of subjection; but women's subjection to men being their distinguished honour, they ought, in all public assemblies, to mark their heads with the tokens of it. 8. For, in the original creation of mankind, Adam was not created out of the substance of Eve, but she was formed of one of his ribs. 9. Nor was Adam originally created for the sake of Eve, who then had no existence: but she was created to be a helpmeet for and comfort to him; plainly intimating that the woman, who was last formed, and out of the man, for his use, ought to live in all reasonable subjection to him. 10. Therefore, especially in acts of public worship, women, in deference to the superiority of those messengers whom Christ hath sent to preach the gospel, as well as in reference to holy angels present—and that evil angels may have no occasion given them to suggest anything proud or immodest—ought always to have their heads veiled, as a token of men's superiority and power over them. 11. Nevertheless, no man must look on himself as an absolute lord over a woman, to command and rule her in a harsh and tyrannical manner, according to his will and pleasure; as now a man can no more be independent of the woman than she of him, both being equally necessary and useful to one another, and mutually obliged to study and promote each other's comfort and advantage; and both, without any alteration of their natural or relative duties, being equally the subjects of Christ's spiritual kingdom, and 22 What! have ye not houses to eat and to drink in? or despise ye the church of God, and shame them that have not? What shall I say to you? shall I praise ye in this? I praise you not.

23 For ^I have received of the Lord that which also I delivered unto you,⁵ That^a the Lord Jesus, the same night in which he was betrayed, took bread:

24 And when he had given thanks, he brake it, and said, ^{Take, eat; this is my body, which is broken for you: this do in} remembrance of me.

25 After the same manner also he took the cup, when he had supped, saying, This cup is ^{the new testament in my blood: this do ye, as oft as ye drink} it, in remembrance of me.

26 For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show⁷ the Lord's death ^{till} he come.

27 Wherefore, ^{whosoever} shall eat this bread, and drink this cup of the Lord, unworthily, shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord.

28 But ^{let} a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup.

29 For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation⁸ to himself, not discerning the Lord's body.

30 For this cause ^{many are} weak and sickly among you, and many sleep.

31 For ^{if} we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged.

sharers of spiritual blessings. 12. For as the woman at first was formed out of the man, so all the sons of Adam are conceived and born by women, the two sexes being thus the reciprocal means of each other's being and happiness. And it is God who makes each of the sexes what they are to one another, that they may discharge their mutual duties in the most affectionate manner. 13. I appeal then to your own unbiassed judgment, whether any inspiration from God can ever render it decent for a woman to invert the natural order of her appointment, and publicly mark herself as if equal in authority to a man. 14. Does not even nature itself, which has prompted all civilized nations to preserve an apparent distinction of the sexes, teach you, that, according to the custom of your country, it would be reckoned effeminate in a man to wear his hair in the length and form of a woman's? 15. And that, on the other hand, it is an honour for a woman to distinguish herself from the superior sex by the length and form of her hair, as it was given her by God for this very end.—It therefore follows, that veils, or any mode of dress which betokens modesty or subjection, ought always to be worn by your women in your religious assemblies. 16. But if, after all that I have said, any of your new teachers will contend for such a preposterous practice, know that no such thing is allowed by any apostle of Christ, or used in any New Testament church, whether of Jewish or Gentile converts.—17. Meanwhile, notwithstanding my having justly commended you for following my instructions and pattern, I must with regret reprove your disorderly behaviour in your religious meetings, which makes them turn out to the dishonour of Christ and your spiritual hurt: 18. For I am informed, and I fear too justly, that when ye meet together for the celebration of Christ's ordinances, to the breach of order, peace, and brotherly love, ye fall into parties and unchristian divisions; 19. For, considering the depravity of human nature, and how busy Satan and his instruments are to promote everything dishonourable to God and destructive to at most can only form a conjecture. I offer the following as a possible explanation, which is substantiated by the same as is suggested by Stanley, Alford, and others:—

1. On this account (on account of the statements made in the preceding context) the women ought to have power on her head (i.e. the sign or symbol of the man's power over her, which is, according to eastern custom, the veil on account of the angels) (because angels are present in Christian assemblies, and they, when in the presence of God their Head, veil their faces).—P.

34 And if any man hunger, let him eat at home; that ye come not together unto condemnation.⁹ And^j the rest will I set in order when I come.

1 Spiritual gifts 4 are divers, 7 yet all to profit withal; 8 and to that end are diversely bestowed: 12 that by the like proportion, as the members of a natural body tend all to the 16 mutual decency, 22 service, and 26 succour of the same body; 27 so we should do one for another, to make up the mystical body of Christ.

8 For^d to one is given, by the Spirit, the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge, by the same Spirit;

men, there cannot fail to be offences, factions, schisms, and great corruptions of doctrine and worship in the church, which God, by his providence, overrules for the trial and honourable manifestation of sincere believers, and the detection of hypocritical professors. 20, 21. And this factious spirit has introduced such profane disorder amongst you in the celebration of the Lord's supper, as hath transformed it into a kind of tumultuous revel, and a feast for your bodies, rather than a solemn ordinance of Christ, appointed for an affectionate and brotherly fellowship with and commemoration of him. They who come first, bringing their provisions with them, fill their bellies without waiting for their brethren: they who bring much with them, like heathens at their idolatrous revels, eat and drink to the full, if not to excess; while the poor, who bring nothing with them, get nothing to eat or drink. 22. Think how absurd and scandalous this conduct is! If ye intend merely to satisfy your animal appetites, have ye not your own houses to eat and drink in? Or do ye aim at pouring contempt upon Christ's ordinances and church, and exposing and discouraging his poor members? 23. Ye cannot but know that it is contrary to the appointment of the Lord Jesus Christ; for, as taught by his own immediate revelation, I declared and recommended to you, that he, as sole King and Head of his church, having a right to institute ordinances, or demand obedience to them, and power to bless them for our spiritual edification, did,—for the sealing of his testament, the confirmation of our faith, and that he might show his constant affection to and great care of his people, and his infinite willingness and steadfast resolution to suffer for them, and that he might the more effectually engage our love to him and regard to this ordinance,—on the very night before his death, in which Judas betrayed him, take a part of the bread which they had left at the paschal supper; 24.

And having prayed over it for a blessing on it, with thanksgiving to God for the riches of his love and grace, and so set it apart for the intended holy use, he brake it, and gave each of his disciples a small piece of it, requiring them to take and eat it as a token and mean of their receiving by faith, and feeding on, his person God-man, which was quickly to suffer and die that he might save them;—and to do all in a believing, humble, joyful, thankful, and obedient remembrance of his person, dying love, extreme sufferings, the blessings thereby secured, and of their obligations to love and duty thereby constituted. 25. In the same manner, after the passover supper, he took a cup with some wine in it, and, setting it apart to a holy use by solemn prayer and thanksgiving, he intimated that this consecrated liquor was to be a standing symbol and mean of applying his blood, or complete sacrifice, by which the conditions of pardon was fulfilled, its blessings secured, and promises confirmed; and required them all to drink it in a humble, affectionate, penitential, grateful, and self-dedicating remembrance of his bleeding love, and tremendous sufferings for their redemption. 26. For as often as ye eat and drink these consecrated elements, ye publicly avow to God, to your consciences, and to the world, that ye glory in your crucified Redeemer, believe and rest upon his death as the only ground of your pardon and reconciliation with God, and of all your hopes of eternal life,—and that in the firm faith of his appearance to judge the world. 27. Whoever therefore shall, contrary to the nature and design of this solemn ordinance, partake of it in an ignorant, irreverent, factious, uncharitable, carnal, and sensual manner, he shall be held guilty of profaning and pouring contempt upon the person and righteousness of the Lord Jesus, and, as it were, crucifying him afresh. 28. In order therefore to a safe and proper partaking of this ordinance, every person ought necessarily to examine his own state before God, his knowledge of the nature, use, and ends of the ordinance, — and his faith, repentance, love, and new obedience; and to discern the Lord's body; — and with these serious inquiries, and in the exercise of these graces, to partake of the consecrated bread and wine in obedience to Christ's appointment, and as his instituted means of fellowship with himself.

29. For he who, neglecting such preparation, eats and drinks this supper of the Lord Jesus Christ from carnal principles and views, with an unfriendly and contentious spirit, or in a hypocritical or irreverent manner, does thereby deserve, and expose himself to, the just judgments of God in this life and that which is to come, as he does not spiritually discern the person and righteousness of Christ, God-man, represented in these elements, but considers and uses them as common food.

30. And it is on account of your shameful disorders in temper and practice, in the partaking of this solemn ordinance, that God has rendered many of you Corinthian professors weak and sickly, and has cut off others by death.

31. Did we indeed seriously and conscientiously search our own hearts and behaviour, and condemn and repent of whatever we found amiss, we should escape God's severe chastisements.

32. And if any of us believers be terribly afflicted on earth, we are therein wisely and mercifully chastised by the Lord Jesus Christ as our Father, that we may be thereby restrained from such sinning as would be inconsistent with a gracious state, and that our future condemnation with the wicked world may be prevented.

33. Wherefore, my dearly beloved brethren in Christ, study for the future to avoid all profanation of this solemn ordinance; and when ye assemble to partake of it, wait for one another, that ye may all communicate together at the same table in truly Christian fellowship with Christ, and with one another as his children and 23 And those members of the body, which we think to be 'less honourable, upon these we bestow² more abundant honour; and our uncomely parts have more abundant comeliness.

24 For our comely parts have no need: but God hath tempered the body together, having brethren. 34. And if any of you be hungry, satisfy your craving appetites at home, never at the Lord's table, which was appointed not for satiating natural appetites, but for the spiritual refreshment of souls;—that so ye may no more meet to hurt and endanger yourselves by an uncharitable, carnal, and factious profanation of that holy supper.—Some lesser disorders I expect to rectify when I pay you another visit.

Ver. 2. All things—with the exception of the neglect and error specified, ver. 17.—Ordinances—directions, injunctions, deliverances, whether written or oral (2 Th. 2. 15), or traditions, as in the margin: but this affords no countenance to the Romish doctrine of tradition, for these apostolic traditions regard merely external order; but the Romish traditions relate to doctrines, many of which are represented as kept, as it were, in private reserve for centuries, until a time come for their public revelation. C.

Ver. 3. The head of every man is Christ—believers (the brethren spoken of, ver. 2) being united to him by one Spirit and one human nature.—The head of the woman is the man—she being united to him by one covenant and one common nature: and the head of Christ is God, that is, the Father, Mat. 16. 20; they being united by one spirit and one divine nature. C.

Ver. 4. Covered (that is, with a veil), dishonoureth his head. Some think, his head literally, which he dishonours by dressing as a woman. It seems better to understand it of Christ, whose superiority, in his absence, he thus emblematically assumes. C.

Ver. 5. But every woman . . . with her head uncovered (by a veil) dishonoureth her head. Some think, her head literally, which she thus immodestly exposes—others, her husband, whose superiority, in his presence, she thus emblematically denies. C.

Ver. 18. These 'divisions' (excesses) are not separations from the church, but parties in it—not formed by differences of faith, but by the neglect of apostolic order, the adoption of human devices and self-will in the observance of ordinances, and the absence of brotherly-kindness between the rich and the poor. C.

Ver. 24. This is my body. That is, in the same sense as 'that Rock was Christ,' see ch. 10. 4; or, as the original literally has it, 'that Rock was the Christ,' unquestionably meaning a type, emblem, or figure of him: and even so was bread broken an emblem of Christ's body and memorial of his death. C.

Ver. 27. Unworthily. A messenger or letter may be treated 'unworthily' by neglect, contempt, or injury. The bread and wine being the representatives of Christ's body and blood are treated 'unworthily,' when the end of the ordinance—remembrance of a crucified Redeemer, and self-examination—are neglected. C.

Ver. 29. As in the heavens the natural eye 'discerns' nothing but sun, moon, and stars, while yet the intellectual eye 'discerns' the glory of God, Ps. 19. 1; so in the communion the natural eye 'discerns' nothing but bread and wine, while faith in the representative 'discerns' the body and blood of the Lord.—Note. There are two sins peculiar to an unholily communicant and to the unholily neglecter of the communion: (1) Self-unexamined; (2) Christ's body undiscerned. C.

REFLECTIONS.—In Christ alone we find example without defect, and authority without restriction. But whatever is good in his servants or people ought to be carefully imitated; and his ordinances should be conscientiously received from the hand of his ministers. With exact care ought all to observe the natural order of things, and to study a modest decency of dress, especially in worshipping assemblies. And it is hurtful to the interests of religion when church-members fall into a contentious and uncharitable temper and conduct towards one another. Great is the mercy that God overrules this, as well as the heresies, the doctrines, which Satan and his instruments introduce into the church, for the improvement of true believers and the detection of hypocrites. In great kindness hath Jesus appointed his sacramental supper for the spiritual refreshment and mutual fellowship of his people on earth. And it ought to be observed in a simple, but judicious, obedient, believing, and devoutly solemn manner, and for the most important ends. Serious examination of our state, nature, and practice, and of our condition, frame, and ends, should always precede our approaches to it; and in a distinct discernment of Jesus Christ as God-man and the Lord our righteousness, and in delightful but reverential views of his second coming, ought we to receive it.—Heinous is the sin and fearful the danger of unworthy communicating. And often God severely chastises his own

1 The tenderest, and, in that sense, the most 'feeble' member of the body is the eye; yet its importance both to bodily and mental attainment and enjoyment needs no proof. So the weakest believer, with little knowledge, and with the most sensitive trembling conscience, and that shrinking piety that shies upon the least sin, and dares scarcely look up to God (Lu. 18. 13), and merely ventures to pray 'God be merciful (through Christ) to me a sinner,' may,

CHAPTER XII. Ver. 1. Now, with respect to the distinguished gifts of wisdom, knowledge, prophecy, working of miracles, or the like, which have been abundantly bestowed on some of you by the Spirit of God, I would have you to consider their true origin, nature, and end, that ye may no longer make them occasions of pride, envy, and strife. 2. You cannot pretend that you deserved them, when ye were so lately drowned in ignorance, idolatry, and other wickedness, seduced by Satan and your priests to worship lifeless images and fancied deities; nor can ye pretend that such idols could bestow such gifts upon you. 3. To check your own pride, prejudice, and envy, and that ye may discern the difference of your spiritual gifts from all delusive and magical operations, observe that no man who thinks or acts under the influence of the Holy Ghost, whose design and work is to promote Christ's honour, can reject or represent Christ as an impostor, abandoned of God; nor can he work a miracle to confirm such blasphemy: and that no man can heartily acknowledge Christ for the great God, and his only Saviour, Lord, and Master, or preach him as such, and work any miracles to confirm his doctrine, but by the power of the Holy Ghost. 4. To manifest their true origin, and also to direct you to the proper use of them, observe further, that though the kinds and degrees of the gifts bestowed upon church-officers and private believers be very diversified and numerous, yet it is the same divine Spirit who bestows and enables rightly to use them all. 5. And that though there be a great diversity of offices and services in the Christian church, yet it is one and the same Lord Jesus who has instituted all these offices, and who calls and qualifies such particular persons to execute them; and they all act under his authority and by his influence, as their Head, Lord, and King. 6. And though there be divers miraculous operations performed in the exercise of these gifts and discharge of these offices, it is the one divine Father who, with the Son and Holy Spirit, grants all these abilities, and the good effects thereof. 7. And to prevent your abuse of these spiritual gifts and offices, always remember, that all these demonstrations of the peculiar presence, light, and power of the Holy Ghost, and of the Father and Son along with him, are not granted to those who receive them for their own private advantage or honour, but for the instruction, edification, and confirmation of the whole church or mystical body of Christ. 8. For this common end the same Holy Spirit endows one with a clear understanding of the doctrines of the gospel, and skill duly to preach and apply them to his hearers, that they may know and believe them to their own salvation; he endows another with a deep insight into the types and predictions of the Old Testament, and an ability to explain them to others, and show how they are fulfilled in Christ, and what relates to him. 9. To another he freely grants a most assured persuasion of the truths of the gospel, an undaunted boldness in preaching them, and an unshaken dependence on Christ for that assistance which is necessary in any dangerous or difficult service. To another, for the confirmation of the gospel, he grants a power of healing all manner of bodily distempers in an instant, without the use of ordinary means. 10. To another he gives a power of inflicting plagues on notorious offenders, or of raising the dead, or of conferring miraculous powers on others. To another he grants an ability to foretell future events, which, when fulfilled, tend to the confirmation of the gospel. To another he gives an ability to discern whether other men be actuated by the Spirit of God or by the devil; and whether their tempers, designs, and qualifications render them fit for being employed in any public affairs of the church. To another he gives an ability to speak whatever foreign languages are necessary for the propagation of the gospel. And, in fine, to another he gives an ability to interpret, with propriety and exactness, whatever is said in an unknown tongue, to such as do not understand it. 11. But whatever be the diversity of the gifts in their kind or degree, or of the persons to whom they are granted, or of the noble purposes for which they are designed, they are all conferred by the same Spirit of God, who, for the general benefit of the church, bestows his gifts upon particular persons, in whatever form or degree, or with whatever success, is best. 12. For as our head, eyes, ears, hands, feet, and other parts of our outward man, do all concur to form one body, actuated by one soul, so, in the church of Christ, all the members unnumbered, in their inexpressibly diversified stations and conditions, do, in union with Jesus Christ their Head, form one complete mystical body, or catholic church. 13. For without any regard to our being Jews or Gentiles, slaves or freemen, or any other condition of outward life, we are all, by these gifts, and by our participation of baptism and the Lord's supper, and by the renovation which we have experienced, and the spiritual nourishment we receive, divinely connected into one Christian church, and entitled to all the blessings and privileges thereof. 14. And as in the natural body, so in the spiritual body of Christ, many members, some of superior, and others of inferior excellence and use, do all necessarily conduce to the perfection and beauty of the whole; 15, 16. How absurd were it to pretend that any particular member is not a part of our body, because it is not some other more excellent and useful member! And no less absurd were it to pretend that those members of the church whose gifts and graces are of an inferior degree, are of no necessity or advantage to the whole church of Christ, or the advancement of his glory. 17. If all our bodily members were fitted for one use, we must want all the senses but one; and if all the members of the church had but one sort of gifts and graces, the beauty, pleasure, and advantage of its rich variety would be lost, to the great detriment, or rather ruin, of the whole. 18. But as in the natural body, so also in the church, God has placed and connected every member to the best advantage, and furnished it with proper powers, which must be exercised for the common benefit of the whole. 19-22. Nay, there could not be either a human or a spiritual body unless there was a variety of members fitted for different purposes, and wisely connected together, so that the members which have superior excellence or usefulness as necessarily depend on the inferior ones as they on them.—Yea, the very weakest members of our body, such as the organs for digesting our food, or circulating our blood and animal spirits, are more necessary to the life and vigour of our body than some of the strongest; and so weak Christians are often more useful than some apparently stronger. 23-25. And as we bestow more pains to conceal and finely cover some uncomely parts of our body, so, in this imperfect state, the less graceful members of the church ought to have their infirmities covered with a mantle of love; for as our face, hands, and other comely parts of our body, need not to be adorned or concealed, but only those which are less graceful, so, in the church, while the more eminent ministers and Christians easily approve themselves to the consciences of all around, the Lord requires that 29 Are^o all apostles? are all prophets? are all teachers? are all workers of miracles?

30 Have all the gifts of healing? do all speak with tongues? do all interpret?

31 But^p covet earnestly the best gifts: and yet show I unto you a more excellent way.

3 And^a though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing.

9 For^k we know in part, and we prophesy in part.

others who are weaker, but sincere and faithful, should have their infirmities tenderly concealed and borne with, and that they should be assisted and encouraged in everything good.—26. God has thus adjusted the excellency, usefulness, strength, or honour of the different members of the body, natural or spiritual, that there might be no discord, alienation, or disrespect among fellow-members, but all solicitously care for one another's welfare; and that the union and mutual sympathy might be such, that the griefs, pleasures, honours, or dishonours of every particular member might affect the whole. 27. Now, to apply all this to our present purpose—ye, considered in your church state, are a mystical body, of which Christ is the Head, and connected in holy fellowship not only with your fellow-Christians at Corinth, but with all those who anywhere profess their union and communion with Jesus Christ, and therefore ought, in your several stations, to employ all your offices, gifts, and graces for the good of the whole, and to sympathize with one another in trouble, and rejoice in the prosperity of others as if it were your own. 28. And for the edification of the church God has appointed in her officers of many diversified forms—such as, (1) Apostles, who receive their commission immediately from Christ, are infallibly furnished with wisdom and knowledge, are founders of churches, and have authority over the whole visible church; (2) Prophets, who either foretell future events, or explain dark passages of the Old Testament, by the word of knowledge; (3) Teachers, whether evangelists, who are fixed to no particular church, but are itinerant assistants of the apostles; or fixed pastors, who have particular charges; or preachers, who authoritatively proclaim Christ's messages to men; (4) Workers of miracles in general; (5) Miraculous healers of the sick; (6) Deacons, who assist church-rulers in providing for the table of the Lord, the ministers, and the poor; (7) Ruling elders, who, without preaching, inspect the manners of the people, censure offenders, and govern the affairs of congregations, in sessions, presbyteries, or synods; and, in fine, speakers in foreign languages, or interpreters thereof. 29, 30. To pretend that all the members, or even all the officers of the church ought to be apostles, prophets, preachers, workers of miracles, speakers with tongues, or interpreters, would be as absurd as to pretend that all the members of our human body should be of one sort, or fitted for every use, to render all the rest needless. But God hath so diversified these stations, offices, and qualifications, and yet so connected them, that none may either neglect, despise, or envy another. 31. It is indeed laudable, with humble submission to God's will, to desire earnestly the most eminent gifts, in subordination to Christ and his grace; but it is far better to improve whatever gifts God gives you, be they more or less, with a spirit of love for each other's edification.

Ver. 13. By one Spirit are we all baptized. The apostle is treating of persons amply endowed with various spiritual gifts: consequently the baptism of which he speaks is not the mere 'outward and visible sign' of water, but 'the inward and spiritual grace' thereby represented, and conferred on the believer by the operation and gift of the Spirit of God.—All made to drink into one Spirit. That is, communicants at the Lord's supper have not merely drunk of one cup, but by faith have been made partakers of one Spirit—one Spirit of truth, grace, holiness, comfort, supplication, unity, and love. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Great is the stupidity of men if left to their own hearts' lusts. And alarming was the wickedness and wretchedness of the Gentile world when God called them by his gospel and grace. Very necessary is the indwelling operation of the Holy Ghost to procure Christ his due honour and obedience. And manifest is his supreme Godhead, who supplies the whole church with furniture, miraculous or gracious. With great wisdom and tenderness he bestowed his extraordinary influences for the confirmation and spread of the gospel in the primitive church, and continues his ordinary gifts and graces in the church till the end of the world. And all his gifts are given not so properly for the receiver as for the glory of God, in the conversion and edification of others. Marvellously are church members and officers connected into one body under Christ their head. And mutual usefulness, love, and sympathy ought to spread through the whole. The very meanest member should be esteemed and honoured as dear to Christ and useful to the church. No necessary office or officer is wanting in her; and all ought to remember that a gracious principle of love to Christ and his people is more excellent than any gifts whatever.

CHAPTER XIII. Ver. 1. Such is the transcendent excellency and necessity of that true Christian love which, from regard to Christ, and in obedience to his commands, earnestly seeks the good of others, that though I or any other could, by the special gift of the Holy Ghost, speak all the languages of mankind with the eloquence of angels, we should be as a mere empty noise or useless show if we were destitute of this. 2. Had we the gift of prophecy, qualifying us to foretell all future events, or explain and apply all the predictions of the Old Testament; or had we the clearest insight into the sublime mysteries of the gospel or revelation, and the greatest compass of human knowledge that ever a mere creature attained; and had we the strongest faith of miracles that we could remove mountains at pleasure; yet, without this true Christian love to God, and to men for his sake, we could not exercise these gifts for his glory and their good; nay, could have no real grace, no true Christianity. 3. And though we were so liberal as to dispose of all that we have in the world for the relief of the poor, and showed so much zeal, fortitude, and self-denial, as to suffer the most cruel martyrdom for the truths of Christ, yet if we had not sincere love to him, and his members, interests, and honour, it would be of no advantage to our spiritual or eternal happiness, but merely procure a transient and empty character among men.—4. This true Christian love of which I speak is a most amiable, generous, and operative grace: it endures injuries, affronts, and provocations, with great patience and long-suffering; it is always courteous, affable, and beneficent, ready on every account to do good; it never grudges nor murmurs at the prosperity, riches, honours, gifts, or graces of others; it never behaves with insolence, contempt, or scorn towards persons of inferior rank or attainments, nor acts rashly or perversely to the hurt of others; nor does it fill a man with proud conceit of his own person, gifts, graces, or worldly privileges. 5. It never disposes men to act anything indecent, base, vile, or unsuitable to their station, age, calling, or Christian profession; it never aims at nor pursues any private personal advantage, to the hurt of others, nor inordinately seeks after riches, honours, or pleasures, at the expense of others; it is not angry without cause, nor easily provoked with the greatest injuries, nor disposed to any unchristian resentment; it is never ready to suspect evil of others, or to put the worst construction upon their conduct; much less does it seek to find fault, to aggravate what is really amiss, or to devise mischief of any kind. 6. It takes no pleasure in falsehood or unrighteousness, either in ourselves or others, but grieves at our and their sins and failures, and rejoices in their just and regular deportment, and in our own sincere and faithful behaviour towards God or men; and delights to see the truth of the gospel, and real, vital, and practical religion flourish in ourselves or others. 7. It covers the faults of others, as far as can be done without sin; bears their infirmities, and suffers many injuries, rather than requite them: it is inclined to believe good of every one, till it have convincing evidence to the contrary; and even where things look suspicious, it hopes the best as long as it can, and that, by the grace of God, what is wrong may be afterwards amended; and it continues steadfast, patient, and Christianly brave, under all the hardships and ill-usage it meets with. 8. This super-excellent grace of love to God, to Christ, and to his people is never utterly lost out of the heart, and is of perpetual use in every circumstance of life in this world, and in the other it will be perfected, and shine forth in all its glory; whereas the gifts of foretelling future events, speaking with divers tongues, or of immediate inspiration in the mysteries of the gospel for the instruction of others, are only useful for a little while in the church on earth, and will be of no use at all in the eternal state. 9, 10. For even the best and wisest of us have here but a very imperfect knowledge of the divine mysteries or future events represented to us in the Word of God; but when we arrive at the heavenly state of perfection for which we are looking, hoping, and longing, all the defects which attend our own knowledge, or communication of it to others, will be removed, and we shall have as plain and extensive views of things present and future as the most perfect happiness of the most exalted creatures can require. 11. For as when we grow up to manhood we put away our childish, weak, confused, crude, and mistaken notions, and our silly and trifling manner of speaking of things, so, when we arrive at the state of perfect men

10 But 'when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away.

11 When^a I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought⁵ as a child; but when I became a man, I put away childish things.

12 For^e now we see through a glass, darkly;⁶ but then face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known.

13 And now ^aabideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but ^athe greatest of these is charity.

CHAPTER XIV.

1 Prophecy is commended, 2, 3, 4 and preferred before speaking with tongues, 6 by a comparison drawn from musical instruments. 12 Both must be referred to edification, 22 as to their true and proper end. 26 The true use of each is taught, 29 and the abuse taxed. 34 Women are forbidden to speak in the church.

FOLLOW after^a charity, and ^bdesire spiritual gifts, but rather that ye may prophesy.

2 For^e he that speaketh in an unknown tongue, speaketh not unto men, but unto God: for^d no man understandeth¹ him; howbeit² in^e the spirit he speaketh mysteries.

3 But ^ahe that prophesieth speaketh unto men to edification, and exhortation, and comfort.

4 He that speaketh in an unknown tongue edifieth himself; but he that prophesieth edifieth the church.

in Christ, we shall correct multitudes of our present mistakes, and shall have inexpressibly more just and clear apprehensions of divine things than in our present state of childhood on earth. 12. For in this mortal state of imperfection we obtain no more through the Word and ordinances of God than an obscure, confused, and perplexing view of the mysteries of his nature, perfections, purposes, and works of creation, providence, and redemption; but in the state of glory above we shall know these matters in the most immediate, clear, distinct, perfect, and satisfying manner—like to that in which we are now known by our most familiar friends, or shall be known by God, angels, and glorified saints. 13. Not only is this Christian love preferable to every spiritual gift, but even to every saving grace; for in this present life, faith, hope, and love constantly reside in us, and ought to be exercised by us, as all absolutely necessary in our salvation; but love is the most excellent, as it relates not only to God and ourselves, but also to our neighbours: it is the evidence of true faith and hope; it is our brightest conformity to God, who is love; and when faith and hope shall, as it were, give place to immediate vision and full enjoyment, love to God, to Christ, to saints, and holy angels will for ever flame with the most disinterested and delightful ardour, as a great part of our happiness.

Ver. 5. Unseemly. In a manner unnecessarily offensive to the opinions, habits, or even the prejudices of others.—Seeketh not her own, exclusively, selfishly; but pays an equal attention to the prosperity and comfort of others.—Thinketh no evil. Does not note down or journalize, as it were, injuries received—does not impute them; that is, forgives them. C.

Ver. 7. Beareth. Kather, covers, conceals, all the errors of men that it is right to hide.—Believeth all things that have any reasonable evidence; whereas prejudice and malignity will not believe 'though one rose from the dead.' C.

Ver. 12. That glass, such as the moderns possess, was manufactured by the ancients, is now beyond dispute; the only difference being that the moderns have attained the art of rendering it more transparent. The apostle therefore intimates that spiritual objects are now seen as natural objects through a dim or dingy glass, but that they soon will be seen as distinctly as those who see each other 'face to face.'—Lord, hasten the time of this blessed vision! C.

Ver. 13. 'The foregoing passage stands alone in the writings of St. Paul, both in its subject and in its style. This epistle finds its climax here, as that to the Romans in the conclusion of ch. viii., or that to the Hebrews in ch. xi. Whatever evil tendencies he had noticed before in the Corinthian church, met their true correction in this one gift. . . . Unlike the mere rhetorical panegyrics on particular virtues which are to be found in Philo and similar writers, every word of the description tells with double force, because it is aimed against a real enemy. It is as though, wearied with the long discussions against the sins of the Corinthian church, he had at last found the spell by which they could be overcome, and uttered sentence after sentence with the triumphant cry of eureka! (Stanley). The language is beautiful, approaching the highest standard of Attic purity; the rhetorical structure is conceived with the most consummate skill; the imagery and rhythm are chaste, musical, and wonderfully impressive. None can read this noble passage without feeling that the highest human genius is here inspired with a power greater than human. P.

REFLECTIONS.—Men may make splendid and pompous appearances in the church, and yet be destitute of real principles of grace. No gifts, however miraculous; no liberality, however extensive; no sufferings for the cause of Christ, can avail, unless they be connected with a principle of saving faith in Christ, and love to him and to his people. Marvellous is the excellency and usefulness of true evangelical love. What benevolence, meekness, patience, humility, forbearance, candour, willingness to believe and hope the best; what disinterested sympathy and generosity; what tender and friendly care it produces! It is much more durable than all spiritual gifts, and, in some sense, than its sister graces of faith and hope, which are so useful in this world. And thrice happy will it be when saints arrive at a perfect knowledge of God; and when love, for the promoting of which faith and hope were but means, shall eternally flame in all our breasts to JEHOVAH, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, as our ALL and IN ALL, and towards our fellow-sharers in happiness on his account.

CHAPTER XIV. Ver. 1. Let me therefore earnestly entreat and charge you to cultivate, improve, and exercise this important grace of Christian love; and in subordination to it be zealously concerned to abound in spiritual gifts, provided it be with a view to glorify God and edify your neighbour: and I recommend to you chiefly the gift of prophecy, by which, under the direction of the Holy Ghost, ye may explain and apply the oracles of God, for instructing, edifying, and confirming one another upon the principles and in the exercise of Christian love. 2. For as to the gift of speaking unknown languages, which some of you are he that prophesieth than he that speaketh with tongues, except he interpret, that the church may receive edifying.

6 Now, brethren, 'if I come unto you speaking with tongues, what shall I profit you, except I shall speak to you either by revelation, or by knowledge, or by prophesying, or by doctrine?'³

7 And even things without life, giving sound, whether pipe or harp, except they give a distinction in the sounds,⁴ how shall it be known what is piped or harped?

8 For if the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself to the battle?

9 So likewise ye, except ye utter by the tongue words easy⁵ to be understood, how shall it be known what is spoken? for ye shall 'speak into the air.'

10 There are, it may be,⁶ so many kinds of voices in the world, and none of them is without signification.

11 Therefore if I know not the meaning of the voice, I shall be unto him that speaketh a 'barbarian; and he that speaketh shall be a barbarian unto me.'

12 Even^a so ye, forasmuch as ye are zealous of spiritual gifts,⁷ seek that ye may excel to the edifying of the church.

13 Wherefore let him that speaketh in an unknown tongue, pray⁸ that 'he may 'interpret.

so fond of, it is much less useful; for let a man deliver the most important and seasonable truths, under the immediate direction of the Spirit of God, in a language which his hearers understand not, they are nothing instructed or edified by all that he says. 3. But he who explains the Old Testament types or predictions, or publishes articles of gospel truth, in plain language, speaks to his audience in a manner calculated to enlighten their understanding, awaken their conscience, warm and comfort their heart, and direct and excite them to the duties of holiness. 4. He who speaks to an audience in the now disused Hebrew, or any other unknown language, or in a style above their capacity, may express what tends to his own spiritual edification; but he who explains the Scripture, and makes known the will of God relative to the salvation of men, not only profits his own soul, but becomes instrumental in the conversion of new members to the church, or in promoting the knowledge, faith, love, and holy obedience of those formerly converted. 5, 6. I could heartily wish that ye could all speak foreign languages, but much rather that ye were skilful in explaining and applying the doctrines of divine revelation; for it is of far greater use and importance plainly to explain the mysteries and predictions of God than to discourse of his most wonderful works in a language which the hearers cannot understand. 7-9. For (to illustrate the point by similitudes) as a pipe or harp cannot excite the different passions, or direct different motions in mourning or mirth, unless the sound be made distinct and answerable to them; nor can a trumpet direct the march, the charge, or retreat of soldiers in war, unless it be distinctly and answerably sounded; so, your words are all lost unless you speak in intelligible language; and ye might as well speak to the wind if your hearers do not understand you. 10. There are perhaps as many different languages in the world as there are different nations in it, and all of them useful to convey ideas to such as understand them, but to none else. 11. If I then should meet with one who talks in a language which I do not understand, and who understands nothing of mine, neither of us could instruct, or be instructed by, or even sensibly answer one another, any more than if we were wild savages of different nations; and this will be the very case with you, if

* It appears from the whole scope of the passage that some had the gift of speaking in other tongues—so as to convey definite ideas to those who understood the language spoken—while the speaker himself did not understand the meaning of what he said. He was an instrument miraculously employed by the Spirit of God. Paul did not set a high value on this gift by itself. Except an instrument of prayer, present, it was useless; a mere exhibition of miraculous power

20 Brethren, be not children⁴ in understanding: howbeit in malice be ye children, but in understanding be men.⁵

21 In the law it is written, With men of other tongues and other lips will I speak unto this people; and yet for all that will they not hear me, saith the Lord.

22 Wherefore tongues are for a sign, not to them that believe, but to them that believe not: but prophesying serveth not for them that believe not,⁶ but for them which believe.

23 If therefore the whole church be come together into one place, and all speak with tongues, and there come in those that are unlearned, or unbelievers, will they not say that ye are mad?

24 But⁷ if all prophesy, and there come in one that believeth not, or one unlearned, he is convinced of all, he is judged of all:

deliver divine truths to others in an unknown language. 12. Let me then beseech you who are so zealous to obtain spiritual gifts, to be less careful in speaking strange languages, and more earnest for such gifts as may increase the number and promote the knowledge, faith, and holiness of your fellow-Christians. 13. And if any be still fond of a miraculous speaking of foreign languages, let him supplicate God for ability to interpret what he says to his hearers in their mother tongue, that they may be profited by the discourse. 14. For if I or any other should pray as the mouth of a company who understand not my words, my own heart might be engaged in the prayer, but the impression of what I say on my own mind could be of no use to them who know not the meaning of my words. 15. It is therefore manifestly proper that in leading the prayers and praises of a congregation, not only I myself should understand and be affected with what I utter, but that my language should be plain to all who profess to join with me, that they may with understanding heartily join in the work. 16. Or else if any of you, under the immediate direction of the Holy Ghost, offer thanksgiving and praises to God in a public assembly in an unknown language, he who understands nothing but his mother tongue, and comes to learn by your administrations, can never give his assent or consent, either in heart or voice, because he knows not the meaning of your words. 17. You may have performed this part of worship in a very judicious, spiritual, heavenly, and affectionate manner; but the hearers, who do not understand what you say, cannot be profited by it. 18, 19. For my part, I thank God that, in the extensive course of my ministry, I have been enabled to speak, as occasions required, in many more foreign languages than any if not all of your teachers. But instead of priding myself in this talent, I had rather utter a few plain words, calculated for the instruction and edification of my hearers, than make ten thousand discourses in a language which they do not understand, and so cannot be profited by them. 20. Never, my brethren, show yourselves weak and childish in affecting novelties or pompous appearances; as, for instance, the speaking of unknown languages. Be like children in the meekness, harmlessness, and humility of your disposition and behaviour, and in freedom from all malicious, proud, and envious designs; but in knowledge, judgment, and discretion, especially in your apprehensions and management of spiritual things, it becomes you to think and act like men grown up to ripeness of understanding. 21, 22. To make you less fond of speaking in unknown languages, and that you may use them only in a proper manner, remember that God threatened to punish his incorrigible people by nations whose language they understood not, as well as to enable his ministers to speak in divers languages, without any happy effects.—The being spoken to in unknown languages is therefore but an occasional mean of punishing obstinate unbelievers, or a miraculous mean of converting heathens to Christ at first, by manifesting the power of God; whereas the explaining and applying the doctrines of the Old Testament is, by the ordination and blessing of God, a standing mean of gaining sinners to Jesus Christ, and of building up saints in holiness and comfort through faith unto complete salvation. 23. If then, while ye or other churches are met for worshipping God in your public assemblies, and every one that speaks, in preaching, prayer, or praise, is using an uninterpreted language which the audience does not understand, some heathen, who knows not a word of what is said, should come in, would your use of unknown languages be a likely mean of convincing or converting him; or would he not rather condemn you, as a number of frantic enthusiasts, or men possessed by the devil, rather than conducted and influenced by the infinitely wise Spirit of God? 24, 25. But if, where every minister preaches or prays plainly in a well-known language, a heathen or ignorant person come in, he has, in every discourse, a fair opportunity to be, by the Spirit of God, effectually convinced of his sin and misery, and made to condemn himself as guilty. Thus his state and secret dispositions, thoughts, and actions, being exactly laid open to his conscience by the preachers, struck with a reverential awe of God's majesty, he will be constrained, with brokenness of heart, to a deep humiliation for sin and supplication for mercy, and will report to his friends that God attends his ordinances among you with extraordinary power and influence. 26. How absurd is it, brethren, that in your meetings for public worship one of your public teachers should raise a psalm, another tender an instruction or exhortation, another speak in an unknown language, another deliver some immediate inspiration, another interpret what is delivered in an unknown tongue—perhaps all at once, or as if each were fond first to display his talents! Let these gifts of the Spirit, and everything else, be used in such an orderly and seasonable manner as to prevent all confusion, and as may be most effectual for enlarging the church of Christ, and promoting the spiritual growth of every member of it. 27. And if, after all that I have said, some of you will use foreign languages, let it be at suitable times, and in a regular manner, so that there may not ordinarily be above two or three speakers at a time, and they one after another; and let one faithfully interpret what they have said in the vulgar tongue, that all may receive instruction. 28. And if no one present can interpret it, let none use his gift of tongues, as the assembly cannot be profited by it; and let him be contented to use it in his own secret devotions.—29. And with respect to the gift of prophecy, let but two or three of them who have it speak at one of your public meetings, and that in an orderly manner, without interrupting or interfering with one another; and as many false prophets are gone abroad in the church, let everything uttered by one prophet be carefully examined and tried whether it agree with the tenor of Old Testament predictions and New Testament revelations. 30. And if any important intimation of God's mind be made to another prophet who is in the assembly as a hearer and judge, let the speaker, upon a proper signal given, stop, and give him an opportunity to declare it. 31. In this orderly manner all your teachers may have successive opportunities to declare the truths of Christ, for the instruction and comfort of one another and of the whole church. 32. And it is certain that no inspiration of the Holy Ghost can render men frantic or disorderly, as diabolic influences render the heathen priests; but it leaves every one to govern himself becomingly, either as to the matter, manner, or time of his discourse. 33. For that infinitely wise God who inspires them can never be an author, abettor, or encourager of any disorderly, unseasonable, and tumultuous conduct in his worship; but, as the God of peace and order in all the assemblies of sanctified believers, he is the commander, approver, promoter, and author of everything regular, pacific, and edifying. 34. And as for your women, let them never, except in extraordinary cases of inspiration, speak at all in your public assemblies, but learn, according to the law of God, to discover the utmost humility and modest subjection to the other sex. 35. And if they want more thorough information about anything said in public, let them ask their husbands at home concerning it; for it is unbecoming the modesty of women, except when inspired, to presume to discourse or debate in public religious assemblies. 36. Why should ye indulge practices different from those of all other Christian churches? Ye cannot pretend that ye are the only or even the first planted church from which the truths of the gospel, and an original pattern of conduct, were conveyed to others. Are ye not then equally tied down to the institutions of Christ, the common King and Head both of you and them? 37. If any of your high pretenders to an uncommon share of spiritual gifts think himself authorized to give laws to your church, let him know that the directions which I have given you were communicated to me by the Spirit of Christ, and are founded in the general rules which he laid down in his personal ministry. 38. And if any one will perversely persist in his ignorance, contempt of, or opposition to these rules, let him do it at his peril before God, whose mind I have declared. 39. On the whole, I advise you to be most desirous of the gift of prophecy, which is most useful for general edification; and, nevertheless, I do not forbid nor discourage the regular use of the gift of tongues. 40. But in everything carefully avoid all appearance of childishness, frenzy, or other indecency, in the public worship of God, and labour to perform it in a manner exactly answerable to the commands now given you from Christ, which will most glorify God, honour his doctrines, ordinances, and ways, and edify the souls of his people.

Ver. 34. This prohibition seems to contradict ch. 11. 5, 13, where the prophesying of women appears to be taken for granted. The simplest solution of the difficulty seems to be—that the speaking here prohibited is not praying or prophesying, but asking questions and entering into discussions in the church (see ver. 35)—a custom that prevailed in the Jewish synagogues between the rabbis and the people: which had been thence transfused into the Christian church, and which, under the proper management of humility and love, seems still well calculated for the public edification. C.

REFLECTIONS.—What diversified gifts God bestowed upon his Christian church in her infant state! And those gifts which are most useful and edifying ought to be chiefly prized and sought after. What is most showy is ordinarily least useful. And every gift 25 And thus are the secrets of his heart made manifest; and so, falling down on his face, he will worship God, and report that God is in you of a truth.

26 How is it then, brethren? when ye come together, every one of you hath a psalm, hath a doctrine, hath a tongue, hath a revelation, hath an interpretation. Let all things be done unto edifying.

27 If any man speak in an unknown tongue, let it be by two, or at the most by three, and that by course; and let one interpret.

28 But if there be no interpreter, let him keep silence in the church; and let him speak to himself, and to God.

29 Let the prophets speak two or three, and let the other judge.

30 If any thing be revealed to another that sitteth by, let the first hold his peace.

31 For ye may all prophesy one by one, that all may learn, and all may be comforted.

32 And the spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets.

33 For God is not the author of confusion, but of peace, as in all churches of the saints.

34 Let your women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak: they are commanded to be under obedience, as also saith the law.

35 And if they will learn any thing, let them ask their husbands at home: for it is a shame for women to speak in the church.

* This is an important testimony to the plenary inspiration of Paul's epistles. Paul himself had no doubt upon the subject. He was fully convinced that what he was writing was from God; and he here lays it down as a general rule that everything purporting to be divine in its origin, or binding upon the church, should be tested by his writings. 36 What! came the word of God out from you? or came it unto you only?

37 If any man think himself to be a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord.

38 But if any man be ignorant, let him be ignorant.

39 Wherefore, brethren, covet to prophesy, and forbid not to speak with tongues.

40 Let all things be done decently and in order.

CHAPTER XV.

3 By Christ's resurrection, 12 he proveth the necessity of our resurrection, against all such as deny the resurrection of the body. 21 The fruit, 35 and manner thereof, 51 and of the changing of them that shall be found alive at the last day.

MOREOVER, brethren, I declare unto you the gospel which I preached unto you, which also ye have received, and wherein ye stand;

2 By which also ye are saved, if ye keep in memory what I preached unto you, unless ye have believed in vain.

3 For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures;

4 And that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the scriptures;

5 And that he was seen of Cephas, then of the twelve:

6 After that, he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once; of whom the greater ing and assisting grace of God:—11. But whether ye ascribe your conversion and edification to me, or to any other instrument, the doctrine of the death and resurrection of Christ is what we all preached, and ye always professed to believe and depend on, as the sole ground of your eternal salvation. 12. Now, if the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead to immortal life and glory, as the Head of the church, has been so uniformly preached with undoubted evidence of its certainty, how absurd is it for any who bear the Christian name to pretend that there neither is, nor can be, a real and proper resurrection of men's dead bodies to eternal happiness or misery! 13. For if there be no resurrection of the dead, then, contrary to the most abundant and incontestable evidence, Christ himself cannot have risen from the dead, as the earnest, pledge, pattern, cause, and first-fruits of them that sleep in him. 14. And if Christ be not risen as the public Head of his people, the whole gospel of salvation, which we apostles and others preach, is a mere fable, unworthy of regard, and your faith in it and in him is a mere empty conceit. 15, 16. Nay, if Christ be not risen from the dead, we who have testified his resurrection at the hazard of all that was dear to us in the world, and with the greatest simplicity and integrity, must be the most impious and abandoned miscreants, who have forged lies for God, and have wilfully published a damnable falsehood in his name, as if he had raised up Christ from the dead;—when it is certain he neither did nor could raise him up, as a public person and Head of his church, if his members are not to rise after him, and in virtue of his resurrection. 17. And if it were true that Christ still continues in the state of the dead, your faith in him is quite useless, and it is absolutely foolish to expect any benefit from his crucifixion. For unless he has not only suffered death for your sins, but risen again for your justification, ye must remain for ever under the guilt and power of your sins, and thus shut up to the guilt of eternal sin. 18. And in this case, they who have died in the closest union to and fellowship with him, and in the most assured hopes of eternal life through him, or who have ought to be improved for the good purposes for which God bestows it upon men. It is absurd to preach or pray in a language which the assembly do not generally understand; and both absurd and criminal to preach in an uncertain general manner that can neither distinctly inform the mind nor closely impress the conscience. Those discourses are best which are calculated to penetrate into the hearts and consciences of hearers, the most ignorant not excepted.—The envy, malice, and self-conceit of members, especially of preachers, are highly injurious to any church. But it is very becoming and happy when all are humbly inclined to learn, careful to keep their own station, and zealous in their exact adherence to all the ordinances of God, without any mixture of human inventions.

CHAPTER XV. Ver. 1, 2. Moreover, with respect to the resurrection of the dead and the certainty of a future state, I will again set before you the great fundamental truth—which I preached unto you, and which ye were convinced of, and embraced as the foundation of all your hope towards God; and in the profession and faith of which the generality of you still persevere, notwithstanding all the pains of false teachers to corrupt you; and by means of which all of you who truly believe were brought into a state of salvation, having already the beginning and earnest, and a full security for the complete perfection of it:—3, 4. This great and fundamental truth, which I received from God by immediate inspiration, and first and chiefly delivered unto you in my preaching as a most sacred and valuable trust, to be inviolably kept by you, was, that Jesus Christ, the Son of God in our nature, according to the manifold types and predictions of the Old Testament, died in our stead, to make atonement for our sins and reconcile us to God, and was buried by Joseph of Arimathea and other friends; and by his own, his Father's, and the Spirit's almighty influence, rose from the dead on the third day. 5-7. And that, to manifest the absolute certainty of his resurrection, and instruct his apostles concerning the form of his New Testament church, he continued on earth forty days, and appeared, on several occasions, to the most unexceptionable witnesses, who could neither be deceived themselves, nor were under any temptation to deceive others.—Thus, on the very day of his resurrection, he appeared to Peter, and at night to ten of his disciples, and that day seven-night to eleven of them. Some time after he appeared to five hundred of his followers in Galilee; most of whom still live to attest it, though some of them have, by death, fallen asleep till the general resurrection. After that he was seen of James the son of Alphaeus, his kinsman according to the flesh, and then of all the apostles, if not also the seventy disciples, just before his ascension to heaven.—8. And after all these repeated and undoubted appearances to his friends, several years after his ascension, he appeared to me in an extraordinary manner, that, as an eye-witness, I might be able to attest his resurrection; though, alas, I was not among his followers during his life, but was converted and called to the apostleship out of the ordinary time, and by an uncommon extension of free grace! 9. For however remarkably Jesus Christ has enriched me with qualifications for, and success in, the apostolical work, I was utterly unworthy of that office, or even of the smallest mercy, because, during my ignorance of Christ, instigated by a furious zeal for the Jewish religion, I outrageously persecuted the church, which God intended to organize in Christ, and which he owns and blesses, and in and by which he will be forever glorified.—10. But by the free, tender, infinite, and transcendent favour of God, I, a blasphemer, persecutor, and injurious person, have found Christ, and am qualified with every proper endowment; and that grace and apostleship, freely bestowed upon me, was not unprofitable: for under a deep sense of his marvellous grace, I have unweariedly, and amidst difficulties and sufferings unnumbered, exerted myself and all my gifts and graces, for his honour and the good of souls, more than any other apostle did. I mention this to confute my reproachers; but do not attribute my diligence and success to any excellency or care of mine, but wholly to the lov-

God and his perfections manifested in the gospel. And this hint ought to make them ashamed of themselves, and you ashamed of countenancing them. 35. Perhaps, indeed, some of your self-conceited doctors will ask me how men's dead bodies can be raised to life, after rotting into dust, and being scattered and intermingled with bodies unnumbered? Or in what form, power, or capacity they will be raised, answerable to the happiness of the glorified souls reunited to them? 36. How foolish and absurd is it to set up your weak notions in opposition to the power and wisdom of God!—Even in common things, do we not see that seeds cast into the earth spring not up till they first rot and die under the clouds? 37, 38. And do we not see, that however many forms God causes the bare grains of wheat, &c., to assume in their growth and ripening, yet they at last produce a body answerable to the seed? 39–41. And is it not evident, that out of the same original dust God forms animals, whose flesh and qualities are extremely different; and that of the same matter he hath formed bodies, some grosser, others more refined; and that the properties and glories of the heavenly luminaries, though all sprung from one original, are extremely different? 42, 43. In like manner the wisdom and power of God operate in the resurrection of the dead, particularly of the saints, rendering their bodies fit companions for their souls in the glorified state. In this world their bodies are frail, mortal, and, by death, subjected to putrefaction; but they shall be raised free from all corruptibility, dissolution, or decay, and rendered immortal, never more to die. In this world they are mean, contemptible, liable to deformity and defilement, and feeble and weak, liable to sickness, pain, weariness, fainting, and death, incapable of defending themselves from surrounding evils;—and being laid in the grave, become no other than carcasses, an easy prey to the weakest worm; but they shall be raised, beautiful, glorious, and shining as the sun or stars; and with such vigour, health, and strength as will enable them to keep pace with their glorified souls in every operation. 44. In this world they must be maintained by food, sleep, and air as the bodies of brutes, and in the grave they are quite destitute of sensation: but in their resurrection, the Holy Ghost dwelling in them shall so refine them, as to make them need no animal refreshments, and render them inexpressibly light and active. 45. Thus the diversified conditions of our bodies will answer to our two different covenant heads; the first Adam being made a living soul, which could communicate sensitive life to his own body, or that of his seed; whereas Christ, the second Adam, is a quickening Spirit, who conveys spiritual and immortal life to the bodies of his saints at the resurrection, by his Spirit dwelling in them. 46. Nay, these conditions of our bodies will answer to the very order in which Adam and Christ are connected with us; that which is natural and excellent, according to God's ordinary method, preceding that which is spiritual and inexpressibly the first-fruits;⁸ afterward they that are Christ's at his coming.

24 Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom⁹ to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule and all authority and power.

25 For^a he must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet.

26 The^b last enemy that shall be destroyed is death.

27 For he hath put all things under his feet.

But when he saith, All things are put under him, it is manifest that he is excepted which did put all things under him.

28 Andⁱ when all things shall be subdued unto him, then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him that put all things under him, that God may be all in all.

29 Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? why are they then baptized for the dead?

30 Andⁱ why stand we in jeopardy every hour?

31 I protest ^{by your¹ rejoicing²} which I have in Christ Jesus our Lord, ^{I die daily.}

32 If after³ the manner of men⁴ I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me, if the dead rise not? ^{Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die.}

33 Be^a not deceived: evil communications corrupt good manners.

34 Awake^a to righteousness,⁵ and sin not;⁶ for some have not the knowledge of God: I speak this to your shame.

35 But some man will say, How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come?

36 Thou^a fool! that which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die:

1 ch. 3.7. Ge. 1.11. 12. Ps. 104. 3. Ge. 1.16-26. 2 Ps. 19.4.5.

2 In the interpretation of this passage it is necessary to keep in view the subject which Paul is discussing—it is the nature of the resurrection body as compared with the present mortal body. Both are material, they are not necessarily the same. He illustrates this by the fact that there are various kinds of flesh, and that in nature there are great differences of appearance and constituent elements. In different bodies. From this observed fact he concludes that the resurrection body may be essentially different from the present body. It will be observed that there is not in this passage the slightest reference to different degrees of glory among the saints in heaven.—P.

5 Lu. 24.31. Jn. 20.19. 26. 9 Of the nature of a spiritual body no man can speak certainly, except that it will be fashioned like unto Christ's glorious body (Phi. 3.21), and that probably it means a body rendered as obedient to spiritual laws as now it is obedient to mechanical laws. The Lord knows what blessed are all who wait and watch for his appearing.—C.

37 And that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be, but bare grain, it may chance of wheat, or of some other grain:

38 But^a God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed his own body.

39 All^b flesh is not the same flesh: but there is one kind of flesh of men, another flesh of beasts, another of fishes, and another of birds.

40 There are also celestial bodies, and bodies terrestrial: but the glory of the celestial is one, and the glory of the terrestrial is another.

41 *There*² is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars: for one star differeth from another star in glory.⁷

42 So^a also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown⁸ in corruption; it is raised in incorruption:

43 It is sown in dishonour; it is raised in glory: it is sown in weakness; it is raised in power:

44 It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body. There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body.⁹

45 And so it is written, The first man Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening spirit.

46 Howbeit that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterward that which is spiritual.

47 The^a first man is of the earth, earthy: the second man is the Lord from heaven.¹

48 As^a is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy: and as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly.

49 And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly.

50 Now ^{this} I say, brethren, that flesh and excellent and glorious. 47. For the first Adam was formed out of the dust, and was of an earthly constitution; whereas the second Adam is the eternal Son of God, who, descending from heaven, assumed our nature, into a union with his person, and who will at the last day descend from heaven to raise the dead bodies of his saints, and receive them to himself. 48. They who descend from the earthly Adam derive from him an earthly, animal, and mortal body, such as he had in his fallen state: and they who are spiritually begotten by Christ, born from above, and formed with heavenly dispositions for heavenly enjoyments, shall derive a spiritual, heavenly, and immortal body from him, such as he has in his exalted state. 49. And as we believers bear the debased image of our first father and covenant head in the earthly, animal, sickly, and mortal state of our bodies, and in their putrefaction and corruption in the grave; so, by virtue derived from Christ our new-covenant Head, our bodies, at the resurrection, shall be conformed to his immortality, strength, glory, and honour, that we may for ever bear his image in our whole person. 50. And indeed this great alteration of our bodies is absolutely necessary, as in their present gross, animal, sluggish, and corruptible nature, they could neither share the visions and pleasures, nor join in the services of the heavenly state, where God is ALL and IN ALL. 51-54. And, to inform you of a thing never before plainly revealed, the bodies of all believers shall not die or rest in graves, but some shall undergo a surprising and glorious change, equivalent to dying and rising again. For in that moment in which Christ shall awfully and efficaciously call up the dead bodies from their graves, the living ones shall be changed from corruptible and mortal to incorruptible and immortal, answerably to the everlasting glories given through faith.—And when our bodies shall be thus glorified and immortalized, death, that formidable tyrant, who had so long conquered and reigned over the believers' outward man, shall, with respect to every one of them, be finally conquered and totally abolished. 55. In the view of these things all real Christians may now by faith triumph over death and the grave, as things which can do them no real hurt, and which shall be obliged, by Jesus Christ, to restore them back with inexpressible advantage. 56. It is the unremoved guilt, power, and pollution of sin which renders death either hurtful or painful; and it is the holy law of God, which, by condemning to death, spiritual as well as temporal and eternal, in a mysterious but awful manner, founds and fortifies the reigning, enslaving, and destructive power of sin. 57. But thanks be to God, who, through the merits and power of Jesus Christ as our loving Head, gives us deliverance from the guilt, power, and pollution of sin, and a complete victory over death and the grave, and every other opposer.—58. In the views then of all that has been taught you concerning the death and resurrection of Christ, and our glorious resurrection to eternal life through him, let me beseech you, as beloved of God, and dear to my soul, to excite, animate, and encourage yourselves to a firm and constant steadfastness in the faith, hope, and holy profession of the gospel, and to be invariably increasing and abounding in every good work towards God or men,—fully persuaded that your almighty, gracious, and faithful God will, through Christ, assist you in your obedience and suffering, and freely reward you with endless life and glory.

Ver. 5. The apostles, after the fall of Judas, are distinctly called 'the eleven,' Mat. 28.16: Mar. 16.14: Lu. 24.9. 33: Ac. 1.26: 2.14. Guyse and others suppose that 'the twelve' having been the original name of the apostles taken collectively, they still retained it when their number was reduced to eleven, as a centurion, ruler of a hundred, would still retain his title were his company reduced to a few, or altogether cut off: and this mode of speech is certainly common in history. But this supposition is not necessary: for Matthias, who was subsequently numbered with 'the eleven,' may have been actually present with them when our Lord appeared. This view is rendered highly probable, if not certain, by Lu. 24.9. 33. C.

Ver. 22. All men are in Adam as branches are in a tree; and as the root died, so must all the branches; and as many as are in Christ—being born of the Spirit,—because he lives, they shall live also. This does not preclude or gansay the resurrection of the wicked, which is elsewhere most plainly revealed, Da. 12.2. Jn. 5.28. 29. But the apostle here speaks merely of the resurrection of 'all' that are 'in Christ,' a distinction which our Lord was also accustomed to make. See Jn. 6.40. 44. C.

Ver. 28. The difficulty in this passage will be removed by considering that, so long as men are sinners, 'Christ is all in all,' Col. 3.11. But when sinners shall have been converted and delivered to the Father 'as dear children,' then shall Christ cease to be 'all in all'; and God, that is, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, to whom the name of 'God' is alike common, will be 'all in all.' C.

Ver. 32. Fought with beasts, might figuratively signify contests with men as unreasonable and savage as beasts. But, in that case, why particularize Ephesus, seeing he had met with such cruel men in many other places? See Ac. xix.: 2 Co. 1.9. 10. It is much more likely that the apostle had been literally condemned to fight for his life with beasts in the amphitheatre—

57 But^a thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

CHAPTER XVI. Ver. 1. As to the charitable collection desired of you for the Christians in Judea, who, through persecution and the public calamities of their nation, have been reduced to great poverty, I give you the same directions which I gave to the Christian brethren of Galatia, whose ready compliance therewith will, I hope, excite you to benevolence, who are much their superiors in temporal wealth, as well as in spiritual gifts. 2. Upon every first day of the week, when you, as other Christians, assemble for public worship in commemoration of our Saviour's resurrection, let every one of you, according to his income, or the success of his business, lay by him a certain proportion, and put it into the common stock for the poor, that when I come to visit you, and receive it, everything may be ready. 3. And whomsoever of your brethren ye think most proper, prudent, compassionate, and faithful, I will readily concur at their being appointed to carry it to our brethren in Judea: 4. And if it be 8 But I will tarry at Ephesus until Pentecost.

10 Now if Timotheus come, see that he may be with you without fear:³ for he worketh the work of the Lord, as I also do.

11 Let no man therefore despise him: but conduct² him forth in peace, that he may come unto me: for I look for him with the brethren.

12 As touching our brother Apollos, I greatly desired him to come unto you with the brethren: but his will was not at all to come at this time; but he will come when he shall have convenient time.

13 Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong.

14 Let all your things be done with charity.

15 I beseech you, brethren, (ye know the house of Stephanas, that it is the first-fruits of

¶ The first epistle to the Corinthians was written from Philippi by Stephanas, and Fortunatus, and Achaicus, and Timotheus.

to encourage and promote it, and see that the liberality of churches under their care be duly applied. And in proportion as God succeeds our temporal affairs, we should join in it, and even beforehand provide for it; yea, all ought cordially, and from love to Christ, to vie with one another in it according to their ability. And as a part of worship, collections for the poor should attend our public devotions.—Ministers ought to go or stay wherever Christ in his providence calls them; and to rejoice in great opportunities of preaching the gospel, whatever opposition from adversaries attend them. Devoid of jealousy or envy, highly should they honour one another, and readily receive such as appear faithful and heartily devoted to the service of Christ. Inexpressible need have real Christians to be always watchful and steadfast in the faith, profession, and practice of the gospel. And it is delightful when in all their conduct they appear closely united in cordial affection one to another, and when the gracious influences of Christ qualify them for every necessary duty. But, alas, dreadful is the end which awaits those who, under the gospel dispensation, continue enemies to our gracious Redeemer! And most terrible to such is his blessed coming.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE FIRST EPISTLE TO THE CORINTHIANS.

It is impossible to read the foregoing epistle without remarking how early self-will and heathenish customs began to deform the Christian ritual, and error to infect the apostolic creed.

The invasion of the ritual may be seen most remarkably in the case of the Lord's supper, ch. 11. 17; in which case a heathenish custom had expelled the holy ordinance of the Lord, and obliterated the instructions of Paul as to its origin, order, and intention. The Corinthians, like some other Greek cities, had been accustomed, during their heathen state, to celebrate frequent public festivals; to which every family brought their own provisions, and in which the will or taste of individuals was the only check upon indulgence. At these feasts, it would appear, the poorer citizens were originally provided for by the rich. But, as luxury soon begets selfishness, and selfishness soon extinguishes charity, it also appears that while the custom of feasting was continued, the provision for the poor began to be neglected. Accordingly, it is recorded of Socrates, that when, at a public feast at Athens, he saw the rich citizens feasting, and the poor neglected, he distributed among them all the provisions he had brought for himself and his friends, and reproved his fellow-citizens for their inhospitality. The custom of the Corinthians seems to have been exactly similar; and to the same level they appear to have reduced the Lord's supper:—"Every one took before others (not the Lord's, but) his own supper: and one was hungry, another was drunken." To this downward tendency there is no competent restraint beyond a strict adherence to apostolic example and simplicity. The moment human will and national or local customs are permitted, in the smallest degree, to encroach upon and model Christian ordinances, that moment a principle is admitted that, while it pretends merely to accommodate itself to prejudice, and render Christianity more acceptable, must, in the end, overwhelm it in superstitious rites or heathen principles and practices.

The infection of the apostolic creed may be seen in the fifteenth chapter: whence it appears that the plainest and most palpable of all Christian doctrines, the resurrection of Jesus Christ and the final resurrection of his saints, was cast aside by the authority of a vain philosophy. And yet few things can appear more unlikely than that any doubt should arise concerning this doctrine. Nothing could be more conclusively attested as a fact—nothing could appear more necessary as an evidence of life and immortality—nothing more analogous to the annual resurrections (as they may justly be called) which an observant philosophy must have witnessed through so many departments of nature. Yet some among the Corinthians utterly denied the resurrection of the dead—a heresy the existence of which would be scarcely credible were it not attested upon apostolic authority. Its origin, however, is easily accounted for.—Some of the systems of heathen philosophy had pronounced material substance to be essentially evil, and incapable, by any process, of being rendered good; and relying upon this dogma of philosophy, they rejected the authority of the Word of God, which foretold the resurrection of Christ, and the testimony of apostles, who had witnessed it. This fact stands forth as a beacon light to all who study the Scriptures. How near was the Corinthian church to making total shipwreck of the faith! And why? The admission of one single unsupported dogma in opposition to a fact implies such a surrender of sound judgment as breaks down the walls of truth, and opens the way for the introduction of any and every error. Christianity lays its foundations in facts, not in dogmas. These facts can never be historically gainsayed or rationally disproved—upon these facts, as precious stones, it builds its temple of doctrine; and rejects 'the wood, hay, and stubble' of a fanciful and arbitrary philosophy. Not that philosophy is to be underrated, despised, or rejected. On the contrary, philosophy rightly defined is, in all its departments, the handmaid of Christianity. But philosophy, the love of wisdom, is not the love of one department of evidence and truth, but of all departments; it does not seek its lights from one source of evidence and truth, but from all sources; above all, it does not set up human dogmas in opposition to divinely-attested facts; and, in depths which it cannot fathom, and in heights to which it cannot soar, it thankfully acknowledges the aid of that 'wisdom which cometh down from above,' which has God for its author and salvation for its end. Nor, God alone is the giver of every good gift, and he will not suffer his people to be tempted by any means, but the gifts of believers are administered by others. Believers thankfully receive each others' graces, and defects, so that they may be increased; let them tenderly consider each others' errors and defects, and pray that they may be corrected and let them sympathize with each other, let them sympathize with each other, let them consider each others' temptations, dangers, and afflictions, and let them have patience and deliverance to those that are afflicted.

Grant comforts as your condition shall require it.—8. Passing over many other afflictions which we have met with, ye perhaps have heard that we were so terribly persecuted and cruelly abused for preaching the gospel in Lesser Asia, that we had scarcely any hopes of escaping with our life. 9. But God reduced us to this apparently desperate extremity that we might learn to live by faith on him, and have no dependence on our own wisdom or strength, or the favour or influence of friends, but only upon his life-giving, preserving, and restoring power, goodness, wisdom, and faithfulness, for our protection and deliverance. 10. And we firmly trust that this God who, by marvellous interpositions, did, and still does, preserve us in life amidst the greatest dangers, will continue to deliver us from doing evil ourselves, or being hurt by the wickedness of others, and enable us to reach his heavenly kingdom: 11. And that, in answer to your prayers, as well as our own, such marvellous preservations and deliverances, procured by many prayers, and intended for the spiritual edification of multitudes, may issue in abundant thanksgivings of men to God. 12. For what 14 As also ye have acknowledged us in part, that^s we are your rejoicing, even as ye also are ours in the day of the Lord Jesus.

15 And^t in this confidence I was minded to come unto you before, that ye might have a second benefit;⁶

16 And to pass by you into Macedonia, and to come again out of Macedonia unto you, and of you to be brought on "my way toward Judea.

17 When^e I therefore was thus minded, did I use lightness?⁷ or the things that I purpose, do I purpose according to the flesh, that with me there should be yea yea, and nay nay?

18 But "as God is true, our word^s toward you was not yea and nay.⁹

19 For the "Son of God, Jesus Christ, who was preached among you by us, even by me and^t Silvanus and Timotheus, "was not yea and nay,¹ but in him was yea.

CHAPTER II.

1 Having showed the reason why he came not to them, 6 he requireth them to forgive and to comfort that excommunicated person, 10 even as himself also, upon his true repentance, had forgiven him, 12 declaring withal why he departed from Troas to Macedonia, 14 and the happy success which God gave to his preaching in all places.

BUT I determined this with myself, "that I would not come again to you in heaviness.

2 For "if I make you sorry, who is he then ever reproaches and troubles I and my faithful fellow-preachers of Christ have met with, we have in our own breasts the heart-ravishing and triumphant testimony of our consciences, in every reflection upon our principles, tempers, motives, views, and conduct, that with an ingenuous undisguised sincerity and singleness of heart, and with the most upright aims to promote the glory of God—not with any cunning artifices of carnal policy, or selfish or secular designs or motives, but by a governing principle of grace which God hath wrought in our hearts, and by the gracious directions and assistance which he, in tenderness, continually affords us—we have conducted ourselves in the whole of our ministerial and personal behaviour, and in a particular manner towards you. 13, 14. What I have now hinted is nothing more than ye have read in my former letter, and which I understand ye generally acknowledge to be true; and I hope that, by the grace of God, ye shall never have occasion to think otherwise; even as the better part of you have already, with great pleasure, honourably acknowledged me and my fellow-preachers to have been the instruments of your conversion and spiritual comfort: and we have rejoiced on account of the gifts and graces bestowed upon you, and expect to see you presented, as the seals of our ministry, before our Lord Jesus Christ in the last judgment.—15. And being satisfied of our having mutual comfort in one another, I truly intended to have made you a second visit before now, that, by my preaching and conversation, ye might be further refreshed and built up in Christ, and others converted to him. 16. I intended not indeed to visit you on my way to Macedonia, as then I could have merely seen you, but to continue with you some considerable time after my return from thence, and that some of you should help me forward in my way to Judea with the collection for the saints there. 17. In forming this design, which has not yet been accomplished, I did not, as your new preachers pretend, act inconsiderately or lightly, regardless of what I said or did; nor was it a compliment to flatter and deceive you; nor did I alter my resolution without sufficient ground, or as influenced by any carnal and secular considerations; nor did I, like a wicked man regardless of his word, affirm and deny the same things by turns. 18, 19. No; I dare appeal to the infinitely true and faithful JEHOVAH, that in my whole conduct I have acted consistently with truth and sincerity, and that the subject of my own and my brethren's ministrations are the stable and unchangeable truths of God; for with uniform evidence of certainty we preached Jesus Christ, the eternal Son of God, in his person, offices, and benefits, which are for ever invariably the same. 20. For in him, the faithful and true Witness, all the great and precious promises of the new kingdom given forth by the unchangeable God, and clearly exhibited under the New Testament dispensation, are infallibly and invariably the same—all established and put in force by his death, that they may be gloriously and completely fulfilled in their proper time and order to his people, to the praise and glory of God's truth, faithfulness, and grace, by our ministrations. 21, 22. And it is this great and unchangeable God who establishes and strengthens us, ministers and people, to abide in the truth through virtue of our union to Christ, and by his Spirit furnishes us with all necessary gifts and grace; who has also graciously distinguished, marked, and blest his followers; confirmed his promise to us, assured us of our interest in it, and imprinted his holy image upon us; and has given us his Spirit to dwell and shed abroad his love and influence in our hearts, as a pledge and earnest of our eternal inheritance.—23. And I dare appeal to him in the most solemn manner that I delayed my visit to you merely from tender affection to you, that I might come, not to exercise my power in censuring and reproving you, but in kind and meek encouragement and comfort. 24. Not that I or any other minister of Christ have any right to domineer over your faith by requiring you to believe or practise anything in religion which is not required by Jesus Christ, the only Head of the church; but we are authorized by God, and sincerely desire and endeavour, to promote your spiritual comfort, by recovering you from what would hinder it, and by establishing your faith in Christ, and the promises which are confirmed in him; for it is by such a divine faith, founded on God's own authority and faithfulness, that ye have stood, and may continue to stand, in your state of grace to eternal salvation.

Ver. 13. It is not improbable that some factious members, seeing that he had not come according to his purpose, 1 Co. 4. 19, had accused him of ambiguity—of writing one thing and meaning another; or of holding some private intercourse with one party which was withheld from the others. C.

Ver. 20. For how many soever be the promises of God, in him (Christ) is the yea, and in him the amen.—Yea, the answer to the question, Is it so? Amen, the declaration that the answer is truth. C.

REFLECTIONS.—An unbounded source of mercies and blessings is a reconciled God in Christ. And delightful is it to have the God and Father of Christ ours also. Faithful ministers and Christians may expect to meet with great troubles on earth. But it is enough if God proportion their comfort to their tribulations, and make all to issue in the edification of his church. Yea, thus God often delightfully prepares his ministers, by their own trials and comforts, to comfort others. It is happy to see all our troubles and comforts wisely ordered by God, to draw us off from resting in creatures to a sole dependence on himself; and to be enabled so to live amidst reproaches and persecutions as our consciences cannot but attest our uprightness and holiness.—Joint fervent prayers bring down remarkable blessings upon ministers and others. And if God answer our prayers in remarkable benefits to many, abundant thanks should be rendered to him for his kindness. Happy is it when ministers earnestly pray, faithfully preach, and prudently vindicate their own character, in order to promote the remarkable edification of the church. And wonderful is the blessed provision which God hath made in promises and spiritual influences for the instruction, comfort, establishment, and eternal salvation of all people.

CHAPTER II. Ver. 1. From a tender and affectionate regard to you I chose rather to delay my promised visit, that your having rectified your disorders before I came might render it more welcome to you and agreeable to myself. 2. For if by sharp reproofs and censures I had grieved any of you, nothing but the deep repentance and remarkable reformation of those very persons could have turned my sorrows into joy. 3. And for this reason I did, and do now again, write to you, that all your disorders may be rectified before I come, that I may not have my mind burdened with grief by you, whose steadfastness in the faith, holiness, and order of the gospel, should be a comfort to me; and I hope that everything relative to the glory of Christ and the good of his church will be your joy as well as mine. 4. For it was in great distress of spirit, on account of their deplorable and dangerous condition, that I directed you to excommunicate the incestuous person, or other manifest apostates from Christ. And I mention it now, not to awaken and renew your grief, but to manifest my deep concern for you and other Christians, and for the repentance and salvation of the most notorious delinquents. 5. But if the incestuous person, or others notoriously scandalous, have, by their drawing upon themselves that awful censure, given uneasiness to me, or to such of you as are conscientiously concerned for the glory of God or good of their soul (for I did not intend in my former epistle to charge you all as connivers at his criminal conduct); 6, 7. Yet now, when the censure passed upon him by your church-rulers, according to my direction, has been blessed by God to render him deeply penitent, ye ought to regard him as pardoned by God, and to encourage, comfort, and restore him to your church-fellowship, and behave towards him in the most compassionate manner, lest, through the overwhelming distress of his mind, he sink into utter despair. 8. I did not more earnestly charge you to censure him when he was persisting in his wickedness than I now beseech you to restore him to your religious fellowship, and behave towards him as a brother, that he may plainly see that your censure of him proceeded from your earnest care to promote his spiritual advantage. 9. And by your restoring as well as excommunicating him you will give full proof of your submission to my apostolic authority, which indeed was a part of my end in writing to you. 10. And to encourage you to this restoration of him to church-fellowship, I, who concurred in his excommunication, hereby declare myself satisfied with his repentance; and to testify my concern for his and your order, peace, and comfort, I do, in the name and as in the presence of Jesus Christ, declare him forgiven by God, and fit to be restored to the communion of the church. 11. And I am the more concerned for his being kindly and speedily restored, lest Satan, who envies the success of my ministry, the recovery of offenders, and the edification and increase of the church, should take occasion to prejudice any against us, as if we were of a rigid and unforgiving temper, or to discourage other offenders, and hurry them into despair or apostasy; for we have had much experience of his malicious designs and subtle stratagems to hinder the success of the gospel, and the peace and prosperity of the church. 12. 5 Not³ that we are sufficient of ourselves to think any thing as of ourselves; but our sufficiency is of God:

6 Who also hath made us able ministers of the^a new testament; not of the letter, but of the spirit: for the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life.³

7 But if the ministration of death, written and engraven in stones, was glorious, so that the children of Israel could not steadfastly behold the face of Moses for the glory of his countenance; which glory was to be done away;⁴

8 How shall not the ministration of the Spirit be rather glorious?

9 For if the ministration of condemnation be glory, much more doth the ministration of righteousness⁵ exceed in glory.

10 For even that which was made glorious had no glory in this respect, by reason of the glory that excelleth.⁶

13 Paul draws a comparison between the law and the gospel. The former was a ministration of death, because it convicted of sin, and declared death to be sin's necessary punishment. The latter is a ministration of the Spirit, and imparts life from Him who is the source and author of life. If, therefore, the glory of the law was great, much greater must be the glory of the gospel.

He replies that he needs no commendations from men. The fruits of his labours were sufficient evidences of his apostleship.—P.

11 For if that which is done away was glorious, much more that which remaineth is glorious.

12 Seeing then that we have such hope, we use great plainness⁷ of speech:

13 And not as Moses, which put a vail over his face, that the children of Israel could not steadfastly look to the end of that which is abolished:

14 But their minds were blinded;⁸ for until this day remaineth the same vail untaken away in the reading of the old testament; which vail is done away in Christ.

15 But even unto this day, when Moses is read, the vail is upon their heart.

16 Nevertheless, *when it*⁹ shall turn to the Lord, the vail shall be taken away.

17 Now the Lord is that Spirit: and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty.

18 But we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord.¹

CHAPTER IV.

1 He declareth how he hath used all sincerity and faithful diligence in preaching the gospel, 7 and how the troubles and persecutions which he daily endured for the same did redound to the praise of God's power, 12 to the benefit of the church, 16 and to the apostle's own eternal glory.

THEREFORE, seeing we have this ministry, as we have received mercy, we faint not;

2 But^b have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty,¹ not walking in craftiness, nor hand-

tion;—but ministers of the gospel, which, by the marvellous agency of the Holy Ghost, is powerful for the quickening, converting, comfort, and eternal life of men, Gentiles as well as Jews. 7, 8. Now, if the law, the ministration of which tended to condemnation, death, and destruction, and which was written on tables of stone, was delivered at Sinai with so much glorious pomp and awful majesty, and attended with a transient impression of glory on the face of Moses, who conveyed it to the people, how much greater glory, and that of a spiritual nature, must there be in the delightful dispensation of the gospel, by which the Holy Ghost conveys his enlightening, quickening, sanctifying, and saving influences into such multitudes of souls; and how much more excellent that abiding glory which it imprints upon the duly qualified, authorized, and faithful ministers of it? 9. For if the ministration of the law and legal ceremonies, which left men under a sentence of condemnation and death, was attended with such awful glory and majesty, the ministration of the gospel, in which the righteousness of God for the justification of believers is revealed and offered, and by means of which the faith whereby we believe unto righteousness is exercised by us, must be much more abundantly transcendent in its endearing excellency and honour. 10. Nay, the legal dispensation, which was introduced with so much glorious pomp at Sinai, has no glory at all when compared with the glory of the gospel dispensation of light and grace. 11. For if that legal dispensation, which is now abolished and set aside as weak and imperfect, was so glorious, much more must the New Testament dispensation, which is so excellent in itself, and abides till the end of time unalterable in its privileges and ordinances, be truly, emphatically, and beyond all comparison glorious! 12. Being therefore, upon such considerations, fully persuaded of the superior worth and excellency of the gospel above the legal dispensation, and humbly trusting to the Lord to make it powerful for the salvation of souls, we are emboldened to use great freedom, openness, and plainness in our preaching this word of his grace, without any reserve, fear, or disguise on the one hand, or any embellishments of human art on the other. 13. We do not wish in any manner to conceal its intrinsic native beauties, as Moses covered his shining countenance with a vail to hide it from the Israelites—intimating that, partly through the obscurity of his dispensation, and partly through the carnal blindness of their own minds, they could not distinctly by faith behold the true scope and design thereof in Jesus and his work thereby typified. 14. And indeed both the ancient and modern Jews have been generally so blinded and hardened in their hearts that they did not conceive the proper meaning of the Old Testament types and predictions. Yea, it is only by the manifestation of these things in the gospel and in the heart that those things can be understood. 15. And even to this day most of the Jews, when they read the law of Moses and the prophets, do not discern their true reference to Christ any more than their fathers discerned the glory of Moses' face through the vail that covered it. 16. Nevertheless, as Moses took the vail off his face when he went in before the Lord, so, when the generality of that nation shall be converted to the Lord Jesus Christ, the vail of ignorance shall be removed from their hearts, and their understandings shall be enlightened to discern how all the types, figures, and predictions of Scripture have their complete and glorious accomplishment in Christ and his work of redemption. 17. Now the Lord Jesus, who will thus remove their vail of ignorance, is a divine, a quickening spirit, and the words which he speaks are spirit and life. He is the spirit and substance of all those ancient laws and ceremonies, and he conveys the Holy Ghost to all the people, to help their dead souls live by means of the gospel; and wherever the Spirit of Christ is truly accepted savingly in the heart, there is enjoyed a blessed freedom from natural ignorance of spiritual things—from the bondage of the legal dispensation—from the law as a covenant, and from the guilt and power of sin; and a holy and delightful freedom of access to God and communion with him. 18. And all of us who are endowed with this Spirit, and brought into the open light and full liberty of the gospel dispensation, do now, by faith, in a manner far more clear than under the law, and yet far short of the heavenly vision, behold the unveiled glory of the Lord Jesus, in whom the law is fulfilled, and all the divine perfections illustriously displayed and harmoniously exalted; and are by these views gradually and graciously rendered more and more like to him in grace and holiness, in a manner answerable to the love, grace, power, and influence of the Holy Ghost, who is himself a divine Person, and is sent by Jesus Christ for the conversion of men.

Ver. 6. Not of the letter, but of the spirit. Rather, 'not of letter, but of spirit.' Not of mere outward ceremonial observances, but of their internal spiritual import and design—the guidance of man to Christ Jesus, 'the end of the law for righteousness.' Note, Πνευμα being without the article, is thus translated. See Middleton on Gr. Art. p. 167, sect. 4, and comp. Ja. 4. 24; 6. 63, last clause.—The spirit giveth life. Πνευμα has here the article prefixed, and, according to Middleton's doctrine of 'renewed mention,' is to be understood and translated as in the former occurrence. (See Gr. Art. p. 46, sect. 1; p. 167, sect. 5.) But the action of quickening here ascribed to 'the spirit' seems rather to point to the Holy Spirit personally. See Middleton, Gr. Art. p. 371, edit. 1808. C.

Ver. 8. The gospel is called 'the ministration of the Spirit,' because its distinguishing characteristic was the promise, not of an earthly inheritance, as was the case with the law, but of the gift of the Spirit of God, as an earnest of a heavenly kingdom. Jn. 14. 16, 17, 26; 15. 26; 16. 7-15; Ac. 2. 16-21; 2 Co. 5. 5. C.

Ver. 10. That which was made glorious was the face of Moses.—The glory that excelleth was the glory of God, from which the glory of Moses was a derivative. See 2 Pe. 1. 17. C.

Ver. 13. Moses did not put on the vail to prevent them from seeing; but typically to intimate that, as his countenance presented a reflected glory which the weakness of vision prevented them from steadily examining, so the law, beneath its types and requirements, contained an essential glory—an end—even Christ—which an evil heart of unbelief would prevent themselves or their posterity from discovering. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Thrice happy are those ministers whose remarkable success in the conversion of sinners attests their call to their office; whose care is not to please men's humours, but to awaken the conscience and touch their heart; and who, in proportion to the success of their ministry, become more humble and sensible of their insufficiency for their work! And happy are those hearers whose hearts are by the gospel powerfully conformed to Christ! It is a mercy that we

5 For we preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord; and ourselves your servants for Jesus' sake.

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 1. Since therefore this dispensation of the gospel, which is so glorious in itself, and so efficacious and transforming in the hearts of true believers, is committed to me and my fellow-labourers, we are animated by the grace of God bestowed on us, and his mercy towards us, amidst all our weakness, tribulation, and reproach, to discharge our important trust without despondence, cowardice, or shrinking. 2. And notwithstanding manifold temptations, we have with abhorrence kept at the remotest distance from all secret and dishonourable artifices and contrivances, and all overreaching and insinuating the souls of men by sly, subtle, and false pretences; and all attempts to corrupt or falsify the Word of God, or to accommodate it to the depraved taste of our hearers; and have endeavoured to preach the gospel, and nothing else, with the greatest simplicity and upright freedom, answerably to every one's case and conscience, as in the sight of that all-seeing and heart-searching God to whom we must at last give an account of our conduct. 3. But if, notwithstanding our plain and faithful publication of the gospel, any of our hearers still remain ignorant of its attracting glory and saving power, it is merely because, by their wilful obstinacy and unbelief, they continue in their natural, lost, and perishing estate, in which, if they persist, they must be inevitably undone for ever. 4. And because the devil, whom the idolatrous Gentiles worship, and carnal men everywhere serve and obey, has, by the malignant influence of his allurement, terrors, and delusive suggestions, increased and confirmed the natural blindness and stupidity of their minds, and led them into wrong notions concerning the things of God and their eternal interests, that so the bright discoveries of the glory of Christ,—who, as the Son of God, is the express image of his Father's person, and as Mediator, God-man, is the representative image of God, in which all his perfections appear harmoniously exalted and illustriously displayed,—may not, by this gospel, penetrate through their natural ignorance and error, enlighten their hearts, and dispose them to abandon the slavery of Satan, and receive Jesus Christ by faith. 5. For in preaching the gospel, we do not conceal the glory of it by attempting to promote our own honour or interests, authority or inventions, passions or prejudices; but labour plainly to exhibit the person, offices, relations, righteousness, grace, and government of Jesus Christ, the only Saviour of lost sinners and Lord of all, and to represent ourselves as no more than servants, who are called by him to consider your weakness, wants, temptations, and dangers, and to labour by all means to promote your spiritual and eternal welfare, to the praise of the glory of his grace. 6. For God, who in the creation of the world did, by his own powerful and efficacious word, cause light to shine out of the dark chaos, has graciously enlightened the minds of us apostles and ministers, and even ordinary believers, with discoveries of his own being, perfections, purposes, and will, relative to our eternal salvation, as they are displayed, with the most endearing lustre, in the person, offices, relations, states, and work of Jesus Christ our Redeemer. 7. And he has committed the ministration of this infinitely precious and enriching truth and grace of the gospel to us, who are but frail, contemptible, mortal, and sinful men like yourselves, that the transcendent excellency and infinitely powerful influence which attend it for the conversion, comfort, and sanctification of men, may appear to be wholly of God, and in no respect or degree from us the preachers of it, who, on account of weakness, persecution, and trouble, need his almighty power to support and preserve us. 8. We are oppressed with manifold afflictions from all quarters, and by all means that men or devils can invent; yet neither straitened in our minds, oppressed with anxiety, hindered from preaching, or irrecoverably entangled.—We often know not what course to take in present dangers, or how to avoid further trials; but are never left to distrust or despair of God's wisdom, power, goodness, and truth, to uphold us under, carry us through, and in due time deliver us from all our troubles, and make them work for his own glory and our good.—9. We are persecuted for righteousness' sake in our persons, characters, liberties, and properties, by every method of reproach and violence; but never left to ourselves, abandoned by our God, or deprived of his acknowledgment, assistance, and comfort.—In our wrestling with sinful lusts, seducing devils, unreasonable men, or even our own infirmities, we are sometimes dejected, foiled, and cast down; but by faith we rise again, and neither we nor our cause are slain or defeated.—10. In these daily and severe hardships and sufferings which we endure for Christ, we carry about an external resemblance of those which he endured for the salvation of men; while, by our fellowship with him in the virtue of his death, resurrection, and eternal life, we are enabled to bear them with faith, patience, constancy, and courage.—11. For we who live spiritually, by quickening influence derived from him as our vital Head, and in conformity to him as our great Pattern, and who, by his marvellous providence, are still preserved in our natural life, are perpetually betrayed and delivered up by our restless enemies into the hands of secular powers or outrageous mobs, and are always surrounded with dangers and exposed to death for preaching and professing our faith in Christ as the only Saviour—in order that our wonderful preservations and deliverances, and our continued boldness in preaching the gospel with divine energy, may be an evident demonstration of the great power and glory by and to which our living Redeemer was raised from the dead, and that his holy and heavenly life may be conspicuously exemplified in our holding fast our faith, and holding on in our ministrations and holy practice with submission, patience, and undaunted resolution, amidst all the infirmities and oppressions which attend our abiding in mortal flesh.—12. Thus we ministers are exposed to distress and danger in the most hideous forms, while ye, my Christian friends, dwell in safety, and enjoy all the comforts of life; and all the troubles which we endure in preaching the gospel, and for the confirmation of it, are, by the power and wisdom of Christ, made means for promoting your spiritual and eternal life. 13. But whatever difference there be in our outward circumstances, yet, being animated by the same lively principle of faith, helped by the Holy Ghost, as you and the Old Testament saints were influenced by we, after their example, having firmly believed the gospel revelations, and experienced them to be faithful and true, do persist in boldly preaching them, and openly avowing our hopes of complete deliverance and eternal life according to them; 14. Being fully assured that God, who raised up Jesus Christ from the dead, as an evident testimony of his having perfectly fulfilled his law and fulfilled his justice for the sins of the world, will, for and through Jesus Christ, by his Spirit, raise us up to a blessed immortality at the last day, and will solemnly approve and present us faultless before an assembled world with exceeding joy. 15. For all the labours and sufferings of Christ's ministers or people, and everything else relative to the gospel dispensation—yea, all the providential dispensations of God—are by him intended, ordered, and made powerful for your spiritual edification and eternal salvation, that the overflowing streams of his grace and mercy might, through Christ, issue in abundant grateful acknowledgments, thanksgivings, and praises of converted multitudes to himself as the Father of mercies and God of salvation. 16. And these realizing views and contemplations of the blessed fruits of our ministrations bear up our spirits amidst every danger or distress; and though, by numberless fatigues and hardships, our mortal bodies and outward enjoyments gradually decline and waste, yet our immortal souls, as regenerated by the grace of God, are daily revived and strengthened in holiness and comfort by fresh supplies from Christ's fulness of grace, and gradually increase in desire of and meekness for the heavenly perfection. 17. For however burdensome and tedious our multiplied tribulations may appear to carnal men, yet to our faith, and in comparison of that important and endless happiness which we look for, they appear extremely light and momentary; and meanwhile, by the all-gracious management of Providence without us, and the sanctifying influence of the Holy Ghost within us, they all, in a marvellous connection, issue in and prepare us for an incomparable, inexpressible, inconceivable, and everlasting glory and happiness, in the full enjoyment of God in Christ, as our ALL and IN ALL. 18. While, in order to promote this astonishing co-operation of our troubles, we, by faith, overlook the visible and transient things of this world, as altogether unsuitable and insufficient to be a portion for our souls, and intently look at, desire after, and hasten towards the invisible things of heaven, which, like God himself, shall for ever endure in their glory and delightful usefulness.

Ver. 2. Renounced. Rather, according to Doddridge, 'set at defiance;' for the apostle, even when a persecutor, acted not from any dishonest motive, but merely from a mistaken principle (Ac. 23. 1; 1 Ti. 1. 13), and therefore could not 'renounce' principles and practices he had never adopted or followed. C.

Ver. 4. God of this world—Satan, whose lies unbelievers receive, while they reject the testimony of God.—Christ, the image of God. Christ is 'the image of God,' as he is God the Word speaking to men; as he is 'the God manifest in the flesh,' and seen of angels and men (1 Ti. 3. 16; Jn. 1. 14), by rendering visible, as Mediator, the almighty power, unerring wisdom, spotless holiness, and eternal love of the Father. See ver. 6: Jn. 14. 9. C.

Ver. 10. Exhibiting in our bodily afflictions a distant likeness of the persecutions and death of Jesus—that the fact of his resurrection and life might be seen in the power by which he sustains our faith and patience. C.

Ver. 15. For all things are for your sakes. All these sufferings and perils we have borne and encountered 'for your sakes,' for your example, for your encouragement, 'lest you should be weary or faint in your minds.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—Happy are they who are divinely called to, qualified for, supported under, and rendered faithful in the gospel ministry! It is not enough to begin well, but they must courageously persevere unto the end. And in all things they must recommend themselves to the gracious approbation of God and to the consciences of their hearers, by a candid and open publication of truth. Not themselves, but Christ in dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our body.⁷

11 For^a we which live are alway delivered unto death for Jesus' sake, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our mortal flesh.

12 So then 'death worketh in us, but life in you.⁸

13 We having 'the same spirit of faith, according as it is written, 'I believed, and therefore have I spoken; we also believe, and therefore speak;

14 Knowing^a that he which raised up the Lord Jesus shall raise up us also by Jesus, and shall present us with you.

15 For^a all things are for your sakes, that the abundant grace might, through the thanksgiving of many, redound to the glory of God.

16 For^a which cause we faint not; but though our outward man perish, yet 'the inward man is renewed day by day.

17 For^b our light affliction, which is but for his spiritual characters, must be the matter and end of their preaching; and they must take pleasure in serving the spiritual and eternal interests of his church for his sake. How excellent is the gospel treasure, which is put into weak, despicable, mortal, and sinful ministers, for the enriching of themselves and others! And wisely hath God thus ordered it, that all the good found in or done by them may appear to be by faith. With great subtlety, labour, and force Satan strives to hold fast his slaves of mankind through their ignorance of the gospel. And nothing can more clearly discover men in a lost and perishing estate than obstinate ignorance of gospel truths. Thrice happy then are those who have had its illustrious, amiable, and penetrating light shed abroad in their hearts by the Holy Ghost! Like Christ, their sufferings may be great and many, but they shall be supported and honourably carried through them all. If, like the ancient prophets and saints, they stand fast in the faith, no tribulation shall overwhelm or cause them to faint. While bodily troubles waste their outward man, Jesus' Spirit makes their inward grace increase, and their souls to advance in spiritual strength and ripeness for glory. Never should saints murmur at their troubles, when they are so light and transient, and yet so inexpressibly useful. But how inconceivably delightful and glorious is our eternal felicity! And the more we set our eyes and affections on things above, the more remarkably will our troubles prepare us for, as they bring us nearer to, this eternal happiness.

CHAPTER V. Ver. 1. What encourages us thus to look at things eternal, and to bear up cheerfully and labour diligently under our innumerable afflictions, is that, from the testimony of God's Word, and the witnessing of his Spirit with our spirits, we are assured that whenever this frail, mean, and changing body, in which our soul dwells during our present state of pilgrimage and warfare, shall be dissolved by death, our soul shall immediately enter into a far more fixed, lasting, glorious, and happy state, prepared by God, in his infinite wisdom, power, and grace, in his own immediate presence in heaven; and at the last day our body, being raised in glory, shall be rendered immortal, that, in union with our soul, it may be for ever with the Lord. 2. And in the believing views of this inconceivable happiness, we, being oppressed by manifold troubles and indwelling corruptions, do often, in extreme anguish, sigh, mourn, and groan under them, and vehemently desire and long for our heavenly home, in which we shall be clothed with light, holiness, and joy, and our body at last put on immortality and honour: 3. And the rather because, being then surrounded, adorned, and rendered safe and happy with this glory, we shall never more be exposed to any want, misery, defilement, or shame. 4. For in our present mortal state we cannot but earnestly long to be fully delivered from all our burdens of trouble, and especially our sinful corruptions, which so offend our gracious God and hinder our fellowship with him—not that we would be rid of our body, or chiefly desire to get out of this evil world, but that we may enter into the full possession of perfect holiness and happiness; and that all our natural and sinful infirmities may be, as it were, drowned and lost in the transcendent and undefiled felicities and glories of the future state. 5. Now, for the further confirmation of our faith and hope, God hath not only revealed and promised this future blessedness, but, by his regenerating and sanctifying grace, hath formed in our hearts spiritual and holy dispositions and desires to make us meet for it; and by the inhabitation, comforts, and witnessing of his Spirit in us, hath given us an earnest, pledge, token, and foretaste of it, to ascertain our speedy entrance on the full enjoyment of it. 6. And in the views, and under the influence of these things, we are always enabled to face our trials, sufferings, or death, with undaunted courage, and unshaken hopes of a glorious deliverance from them—knowing that, while we continue dwelling in these mortal bodies, we live like persons in a state of pilgrimage and warfare, at a great distance from the immediate presence of our dear Saviour and Lord, Jesus Christ. 7. For in this present mortal state of afflictions, we live and regulate all our behaviour by faith in Christ and his promises, which overcomes this world, and is the evidence of things not seen; and not by the immediate sight and enjoyment of God any more than by carnal sense or spiritual feelings. 8. But bearing up under all our hardships and dangers, and having unshaken hopes of their happy issue, we would be glad to leave our present mortal body and life, with all the natural and sinful infirmities attending them, in order to enter into the immediate presence of Christ, and be perfectly transformed into his image, by seeing him as he is. 9. Having therefore these satisfying hopes of and earnest desires after the heavenly blessedness, we zealously labour that, whether we die or live, all our services and sufferings, as well as our persons, may be graciously accepted by Christ, through our living faith, at his tribunal. 10. For in a little time all of us, ministers or people, Jews or Gentiles, must personally appear before him at the last judgment, when our whole state, qualities, and works shall be impartially laid open before the world and our own consciences, that every one of us, saint or sinner, may have the eternal gracious reward of our good deeds, or the just punishment of our sins, assigned to us, in proportion to the degree of the habitual and governing turn of our thoughts, words, or actions, in which we lived and died. 11. Being therefore convinced, from the Word of God and our own experience, of the inexpressible terribleness of that future judgment to hypocritical and unregenerate men, we compassionately labour to a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory;

18 While 'we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are 'eternal.

CHAPTER V

1 That in his assured hope of immortal glory, 9 and in expectation of it, and of the general judgment, he laboureth to keep a good conscience, 12 not that he may herein boast of himself, 14 but as one that, having received life from Christ, endeavoureth to live as a new creature to Christ only, 18 and by his ministry of reconciliation to reconcile others also in Christ to God.

FOR^a we know,¹ that if ^bour earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have ^ca building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

2 For ^din this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven:

3 If^e so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked.

4 For^f we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened: not for that we would beseech and persuade men to flee from their natural, sinful, and dangerous estate, by receiving Jesus Christ the Judge for their full and everlasting salvation; and whether they hear or forbear, we can appeal to God that we have been sincere and earnest therein, and can appeal to many of your consciences, who have observed our preaching, sufferings, and conduct. 12. Indeed, after the experimental knowledge which ye have had of our faithfulness and diligence, we have no need to recommend ourselves to you; but we suggest these things that ye may have occasion to rejoice and glory in the favour which God hath vouchsafed to us, and may thereby silence the vain boasts of your judaizing teachers, who, without any just consciousness of their own sincerity, talk proudly of their mere appearances of religion. 13. For in my own and my faithful fellow-ministers' zealous vindication of our character, and fervent contentings for the equal admission of believing Gentiles as well as Jews to all the privileges of the gospel church, and in our self-denial and calm instructions and entreaties, we have only aimed at manifesting the riches of God's grace, and promoting men's eternal salvation, particularly that of the Gentiles. 14, 15. For the faith and sense of the exceeding greatness, freeness, and endearments of Christ's dying love, powerfully draw, excite, incline, and aid us, as it were, by a holy and delightful constraint, to do all that we can in imitation of and obedience to him, for the glory of God, in the salvation of Gentiles as well as Jews; for we thus think and judge that if, according to the gospel revelation, Christ, the only Saviour, died in the stead and for the salvation of sinful men, Gentiles as well as Jews, then both parties were, by nature, equally condemned in law, and dead in trespasses and sins, none having more right to or fitness for gospel privileges than another; and that he died for sinners of all nations, that all they who accept Christ in justification, and are quickened by the Holy Ghost, should no longer pursue their own carnal, selfish, or secular aims, nor indulge their own lusts and passions, nor make their own honour, ease, or pleasure the chief end of their living in this world, but wholly devote themselves to the service and glory of their great Lord and Saviour, who died to atone for their sins, and rose again for their justification and eternal life. 16. For this reason we, faithful ministers of the gospel, think ourselves bound to preach it to all nations, Gentiles or Jews, poor or rich; nay, though some of us once viewed and valued Christ as a circumcised Jew or temporal Deliverer, being now enlightened by the gospel, we view and value him only as the spiritual, the divine Prophet, Priest, and King of the new kingdom of grace, for men's spiritual and eternal salvation. 17. It is therefore the principal point of the Christian religion, that if any man, Jew or Gentile, be in Christ by vital faith, as well as by external profession, ^{an} entire change of his state, nature, and practice hath

The contrast is very striking; and the whole passage is one of the most beautiful in the Bible.—P.

Wherefore, as his highly dignified messengers, sent to deal with you in his stead, we do, in the name and authority of Christ and his Father, beseech and entreat you, by everything endearing or awful in heaven, earth, or hell, and in time or eternity, to consider and accept of God's graciously prepared, dearly secured, and freely offered peace, favour, and friendship, and to surrender up yourselves to him, to be espoused to Christ, saved by him, and entirely and heartily devoted to him and his service. 21. For in justice to himself, his law, and government, and in rich mercy and grace to Jews and Gentiles, God the Father hath saved from sin by his own perfectly holy and only-begotten Son, as our Saviour, and hath fully laid them on

REFLECTIONS.—Frailty, sinfulness, and sorrows attend the best of men on earth. But happy they who have a blessed assurance of eternal fellowship with Christ in heaven! No wonder they long for it, and groan to be delivered from their present pressures and plagues. And happy they who are fitted for it, and have the Holy Ghost dwelling in their hearts as an earnest of it, and who are by faith daily walking forward to it, and diligently finishing the work which God hath allotted them in this life! How tremendous will be the last judgment, in which all men that are, have been, or shall be, must appear together before Christ, and have their eternal state publicly and irrevocably fixed, according to their qualities and works!—In a most conscientious and active manner ought ministers and others to behave in the view of it. And slumbering sinners must be awakened by these terrors of the Lord. But it is most deplorable to be persuaded by the faith and sense of Jesus' love to live and labour always for his glory and the salvation of men. And 21 For^e he hath made him to be sin for us, who ^gknew no sin; ^hthat we might be made the righteousness of God in him.

1 That he hath approved himself a faithful minister of Christ, both by his exhortations, 3 and by integrity of life, 4 and by patient enduring all kinds of affliction and disgraces for the gospel. 10 Of which he speaketh the more boldly amongst them, because his heart is open to them, 13 and he expecteth the like affection from them again, 14 exhorting to flee the society and pollutions of idolaters, as being themselves temples of the living God.

WE then, as ^aworkers together with ¹him, beseech you also that ^bye receive not the grace of God in vain.

2 (For^e he saith, I have heard thee in a time accepted, and in the day of salvation have I succoured thee: behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation.)

never ought he or his blessings to be viewed in a carnal manner. No profession or practice, without new principles of grace in our heart, can prove us united to him; and nothing less can answer the design of the gospel, or of God's gift of his Son as our only Saviour. Now think, my soul, what God hath done, and doth, and speaks, and is to me; and let me not persist a moment longer in opposition to, in rebellion against, such amazing kindness and condescension.

CHAPTER VI. Ver. 1. We gospel ministers being therefore joint labourers with God, and uniting with one another in this great work, under his direction and influence, earnestly exhort, entreat, and beseech you, Corinthians and others, that ye do not lightly esteem these glad tidings and offers of reconciliation with God, or receive them only in notion and profession, and so render them ineffectual for conveying God's blessings, gifts, or graces, to the saving of your soul, and unfruitful for the production of true holiness. 2. But as God, according to his ancient promise by Isaiah, hath, in answer to the requests of his Son, seasonably assisted him in his work of securing our redemption, and accepted his sacrifice, in the room of Gentiles as well as Jews, let me beseech you, in this noted period of Christ's publishing, offering, and applying his salvation, to make sure your interest in and enjoyment of it. 3. In fulfilling this our infinitely important ministerial work, we have been divinely enabled to behave with such circumspection and caution towards all men as to give no just offence even to our enemies, and have done nothing tending to draw reproach on our office, dishonour on Christ, or to mar the success of his gospel; 4, 5. But in all things have approved ourselves to Christ and the consciences of his people, as diligent and faithful ministers, who have our commission from God, and are employed and owned by him in his service, and

3 Giving^d no offence in any thing, that the ministry be not blamed:

4 But ^ein all things approving² ourselves as the ministers of God, in much patience, in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses,

5 In^o stripes, in imprisonments, in tumults,³ in labours, in watchings, in fastings;

6 By^h pureness, by knowledge, by long-suffering, by kindness, by the Holy Ghost, by love unfeigned,

7 By^t the word of truth, by the power of God, by the armour of righteousness on the right hand and on the left,

8 By^j honour and dishonour, by evil report and good report: as deceivers, and yet true;

9 As^k unknown, and yet well known; as dying, and behold, we live; as chastened, and not killed;

CHAPTER VII.

1 He proceedeth in exhorting them to purity of life, 2 and to bear him like affection as he doth to them. 3 Whereof lest he might seem to doubt, he declareth what comfort he took in his afflictions, by the report which Titus gave of their godly sorrow, which his former epistle had wrought in them, 13 and of their loving-kindness and obedience towards Titus, answerable to his former boastings of them.

HAVING^a therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God.¹

pursue the great designs of salvation, by our abundant meekness and patience towards men, and calm resignation and submission to the will of God, in the manifold tribulations which we suffer for Christ's sake, and in our extreme want even of necessary provisions, and the great straits and perplexities to which we have been often reduced—in our enduring ignominious and painful scourgings; in hard imprisonments under the custody of cruel officers; in outrageous insurrections of insulting and furious mobs; and in the want of ordinary sleep and food. 6. Which patience hath been promoted by and carried on in great integrity, in preaching the gospel with a single eye to the glory of God and the good of precious souls; and in a modest and chaste behaviour, and purity of doctrine and manners; in a believing acquaintance with gospel truth, and a spiritual wisdom and understanding answerable to it; in such lenity and forbearance as to put up with affronts, and bear calmly every provocation; in such kindness of temper as makes us to delight in doing good to all, and rendering good for evil; and by the special assistance of the Holy Ghost, in his gifts and graces, which furnish us for, direct and animate us in, the work of the Lord: 7. By the light and comfort of the gospel which God, who cannot lie, hath published; and which we believe without doubting, and preach without any mixture of error; and by the almighty power of God, which assists and supports us under all our trials and labours; and, in fine, by the whole armour of God, by which we are completely furnished, to war valiantly, acceptably, and successfully against all our spiritual enemies, of every kind, and on every side. 8. And being thus fortified against all our trials, we, with steadiness of temper, go through every change and form of our much diversified lot; through the good esteem of some, without being puffed up; through the contempt and abuse of others, without being dispirited; through hard speeches and slanders, without being discouraged; and through commendations and applause, without being proud of them. For, in the holy providence of God, we are represented as hypocritical impostors who seduce mankind; and yet, as true servants of Christ, we are sincere and faithful in preaching the gospel in all that we say or do. 9. Some, ignorant of our true character, represent us as mean, worthless, and obscure; others, from their own experience of our powerful ministrations, holy conversation, and unshaken patience in suffering, and from the information of such as have experienced the like, know us to be highly honoured of God. We are in perpetual jeopardy, as persons in the jaws of death, and yet God wonderfully preserves us in life and comfort. We are severely chastened by the hands of both God and men, and yet both our lives and hopes are maintained. 10. In outward appearance we are in a very melancholy and miserable condition; and yet we are inwardly full of the joys of faith and of a good conscience, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God. We are indeed poor with respect to this world, having none of its affluence or accommodations; and yet we are instruments in Christ's hand of making many rich towards God in faith and good works, and heirs of his kingdom, along with ourselves. We scarcely possess any earthly enjoyments, and look down upon them with holy indifference; and yet we have all things spiritual, temporal, and eternal in Christ our Head, who hath received them for our use. 11. My dear Corinthians, we thus freely open our mind to you that ye may be encouraged by thus hearing of our behaviour, supports, and consolations under all our sufferings for Christ, and be able to vindicate our character against those who reproach us; and our hearts are so full of affection to you, and concern for your spiritual edification and eternal salvation, that we think nothing too much for promoting them. 12. There is no want of love in our heart or zeal in our work to promote to the utmost your establishment and growth in light, faith, love, comfort, and holiness; nor is there any deficiency in the gracious doctrines, promises, and privileges which we preach; but there are some of you whose hearts, through the working of unbelief, carnality, and coolness of affection, are shut against us, and against the consolations which are in Christ for you. 13. But now, in return for our great love to you, and our earnest desires and labours to promote your spiritual welfare, I beg that ye, as loving children, would enlarge your affection towards us, and cheerfully receive the truths and blessings of the gospel which we recommend to you.—14. And I earnestly insist that ye never intermarry with such as appear destitute of the knowledge and grace of the gospel; never cultivate any unnecessary familiarity with them; and, above all, never join with them in any of their idolatrous worship, which would amount to a practical renouncing of your communion with Christ. For what holy and delightful friendship can there be between one who is renewed and sanctified and one who remains under the dominion of sin? What religious fellowship can there be between a savingly enlightened Christian and one who knows nothing of God, of Christ, or the gospel, but is plainly a subject of Satan, the prince of darkness? 15. What harmony can there be between the true members of Christ and the manifest children of Satan, that lawless arch-rebel against God? Or what comfortable joint portion can one who believeth in Christ have with one who in profession and practice rejects him? 16. And what proper agreement can there be between you who are the divinely consecrated temples of God, and, according to his promise, honoured with his special presence, as your God, Master, and Lord, and them who are the temples of idols and devoted to their service? 17. Remember therefore, that as God required his ancient people the Jews to improve their distinguished privileges in abstaining from all unnecessary connection with idolaters, so he requires you and other Christians, whose privileges are much more glorious, to renounce all the unfruitful works of darkness, and have no fellowship with idolatrous or profane persons beyond what the civil duties of life require. 18. To encourage you to which, he promises to make up all your losses, by allowing you the most familiar fellowship with himself here and hereafter, and with all the kindness of a divine Parent blessing you, as heirs of himself, with all spiritual blessings in Christ.

REFLECTIONS.—It is very honourable to be a faithful minister, a worker together with God, in that glorious cause which is founded on Christ's suffering with the Father, that sinners might be accepted in him. And earnestly should we improve present opportunities in receiving Christ and his fulness, since they may quickly be irrevocably ended and gone. Ministers have need of much grace in them and much prayer for them, that they may approve themselves faithful to God in all their labours, and under all their manifold sufferings. And it is shameful when their affectionate regard to their hearers is rewarded with neglect and contempt.

2 Receive^b us; 'we have wronged no man, we have corrupted no man, we have defrauded no man.

3 I^a speak not this to condemn you; for I have said before, that ye are in our hearts to die and live with you.

4 Great^c is my boldness of speech toward you, great is my glorying of you: 'I am filled with comfort, I am exceeding joyful in all our tribulation.

5 For,^a when we were come into Macedonia, our flesh had no rest, but we were troubled on every side; without were fightings, within were fears.

6 Nevertheless 'God, that comforteth those that are cast down, comforted us by the coming of Titus;

7 And not by his coming only, but by the consolation wherewith he was comforted in you, when he told us 'your earnest desire, your mourning, your fervent mind toward me; so that I rejoiced the more.

8 For^k though I made you sorry with a letter, I do not repent, though I did repent:² for I perceive that the same epistle hath made you sorry, though it were but for a season.

9 Now^l I rejoice, not that ye were made sorry, but that ye sorrowed to repentance: for ye were made sorry after a godly manner,³ that ye might receive damage by us in nothing.

10 For^a godly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation not to be repented of:⁴ but^c the sorrow of the world worketh death.

11 For behold this self-same thing, that 'ye sorrowed after a godly sort, what 'carefulness⁵ it wrought in you, yea, what 'clearing of yourselves,⁶ yea, what 'indignation,⁷ yea, what 'fear, yea, what vehement 'desire,⁸ yea, what 'zeal, yea, what 'revenge!⁹ In all things ye have 'approved yourselves to be clear¹ in this matter.

12 Wherefore though I wrote unto you, 'I did it not for his cause that had done the wrong, nor for his cause that suffered wrong, but that our care for you in the sight of God might appear unto you.

13 Therefore we were comforted in your comfort: yea, and exceedingly the more joyed we for the joy of Titus, 'because his spirit was refreshed by you all.

14 For 'if I have boasted any thing to him of you, I am not ashamed; but as we spake all things to you in truth, even so our boasting, which I made before Titus, is found a truth.

15 And his inward affection² is more abundant toward you, whilst he remembereth the 'obedience of you all, how with fear and trembling ye received him.

16 I^a rejoice therefore that I have confidence in you in all things.

Great care is necessary in Christians to keep at a proper distance from wicked persons and things. And if God graciously become ours, and make us his, and dwell in and with us, no idol ought to be harboured in our heart.

CHAPTER VII. Ver. 1. Having therefore an interest in, and in some measure the possession of, all these exceeding great and precious promises, let us, my dear brethren, in a dependence on God's promised grace, and in hopes of his promised glory, by believing applications of Jesus' word, blood, and Spirit, and by careful watchfulness over our hearts and lives, and impartial mortification of our indwelling corruptions, labour to purify ourselves from all uncleanness, drunkenness, intemperance, and other fleshly lusts which render us like to brute beasts; and from all falsehood, pride, malice, and other vices which immediately pollute our souls and render us like devils; and let us press after universal perfection in holiness, under the influence of a holy and filial reverence of God in his greatness, majesty, and mercy.—2. And to return to the point in hand, see that ye receive us faithful ministers into your most cordial affection, embrace the doctrine which we preach in Christ's name, and submit to the authority which we have received from him; for God and your consciences know that we never wronged your persons, characters, or estates, nor ever corrupted your minds by errors, flatteries, or bribes, nor ever overreached you for our own secular advantage. 3. I do not mention these things as if I thought the better part of you had ever reproached us with them; for, as I have already hinted, such is our ardent affection to and entire confidence in most of you, that we could venture our character and life in your hands; and if God did not call us to labour in other places, we could willingly spend and be spent for you, and cheerfully live and die with you, as our beloved and affectionate friends. 4. It is from a tender concern for you that I so plainly warn you against every disorder; and it is from the firm confidence that I have in the generality of you that I so rejoice in and glory of you as my obedient children in Christ; and amidst all my reproaches and sufferings it is an inexpressible comfort to my spirits that things are much better among you than I feared. 5. For when I came in great anxiety from Troas to Macedonia to find Titus, and be by him informed concerning your spiritual estate, the anxiety I felt from not finding him, the fears I had concerning you, and the contests I endured with surrounding adversaries, rendered me for a time restless in both body and mind. 6. But at length our gracious God, the Father of mercies, who always takes a peculiar pleasure in comforting those who are dejected and distressed, greatly comforted me by the seasonable and happy arrival of Titus. 7. Not so much indeed by his safe return as by the delightful accounts of his satisfactory reception among you, and how earnest ye were to comply with the injunctions I sent you, and of your deep lamentations over the offences which had happened among you, and of your affectionate zeal for and regard to my person, character, and authority as an apostle of Christ. 8. For though it was with no small concern that I wrote my former reproofs, and not without great fear lest some might abuse them to their own hurt and the dishonour of Christ, yet, now that they have produced such happy effects, I do not repent the freedom which I used; for though it pained you at first, it nevertheless quickly influenced you to rectify your disorders. 9. I therefore now heartily rejoice, not in your vexation and grief, but that it issued in an ingenuous and sincere repentance for the evils amongst you; for, like true penitents, ye mourned with a self-abasing and heart-broken sense of your sin as against God, and with hatred and humble confession of it, and a full purpose to turn from it to him, by the assistance of his Spirit, and to the glory of his name. Thus, instead of being either provoked or discouraged by my letter, ye were greatly profited by it. 10. For spiritual apprehensions of the mercy of God in Christ, affects persons with a sense of their sins as committed against God and his law, and works that thorough change of mind, heart, and life which issues in, and gradually prepares for, a complete deliverance from sin and misery, and advancement to perfect and eternal holiness and happiness; and so ye will never need to repent of it, but to rejoice in and bless God for it: but the anxiety, trouble, and vexation of spirit which unregenerate men have on account of their worldly losses and troubles—on account of apprehended wrath and undoing for their sins, promote spiritual death, prepare for eternal death, and even hasten natural death, by methods more or less violent. 11. But think what blessed fruits demonstrate the gracious and acceptable nature of your repentance; what care and diligence to rectify what was amiss! what concern to manifest your aversion at the least fellowship in sin! what hatred of and warm resentment against everything sinful, and what loathing of yourselves on account of it! what holy awe of God and his righteous judgments! what earnest desire to have your hearts, lives, and church purged from everything sinful, and to perform whatever tends to the glory of God, or your own or others' edification! what holy zeal for the honour of God, and the purity, peace, and order of his church! what holy resentment against yourselves, or the scandalous offenders! Thus ye have manifested that your hearts are purged by the blood of Christ, and that as a church ye are no more chargeable with your former disorders. 12. This cannot but exceedingly delight me; for though I wrote unto you with some sharpness, particularly about the incestuous person, I did it from no angry resentment at him, or partial regard to his father, who had been so horribly injured; nor was it barely to reclaim the one and do justice to the other, but principally from a deep concern that God and Christ might be honoured, and your church preserved from that infection and reproach which his continuance among you might have occasioned. 13. We were therefore greatly refreshed to hear that, for your own peace and comfort, ye had in an orderly manner communicated that heinous transgressor, and rectified your other disorders, and to find that Titus, your most affectionate friend, had been so greatly revived, cheered, and delighted with your reformation and Christian behaviour. 14. And as I always in the greatest sincerity preached to you the pure truths of the gospel, I am now extremely glad that your conduct hath answered to the high commendations which I had given of you to Titus; 15. Whose very heart and bowels of love are warmed as often as he thinks on your ready obedience to my injunctions, and on my deep concern that he might not meet with anything to grieve his spirits in any contempt of his faithful, kind, and tender advices to you. 16.

CHAPTER VIII.

1 He stirreth them up to a liberal contribution for the poor saints at Jerusalem, by the example of the Macedonians, 7 by commendation of their former forwardness, 9 by the example of Christ, 14 and by the spiritual profit that shall redound to themselves thereby: 16 commending to them the integrity and willingness of Titus, and those other brethren, who upon his request, exhortation, and commendation, were purposely come to them for this business.

MOREOVER, brethren, ¹we do you to wit² of the grace of God bestowed on the churches of Macedonia;

2 How that, ³in a great trial of affliction, the abundance of their joy and their deep poverty abounded unto the riches of their liberality.³

3 For⁴ to their power, I bear record, yea, and beyond their power, they were willing of themselves;

4 Praying us with much entreaty⁵ that we would receive the gift, and take upon us the fellowship of the ministering to the saints.

5 And⁶ this they did, not as we hoped,⁴ but⁷ first gave their own selves to the Lord, and unto us by the will of God.

6 Insomuch⁸ that we desired Titus, that as he had begun, so he would also finish in you the same 'grace' also.

7 Therefore, as ye abound in every thing, in faith, and utterance, and knowledge, and in all diligence, and in your love to us, see that ye abound in this grace⁶ also.

8 I⁹ speak not by commandment,⁷ but by occasion of the forwardness of others, and to prove the sincerity of your love.

9 For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich.

10 And¹⁰ herein I give my advice: for this is expedient for you, who have begun before, not only to do, but also to be forward⁸ a year ago.⁹

It is therefore an inexpressible pleasure to me that, instead of being disappointed in my expectations concerning you, I have now further evidence that ye will pay a dutiful respect to my character, and religious regard to my apostolic injunctions, when I shall be permitted to visit you.

Ver. 10. Godly sorrow is so called because it is commanded by God, Joel 2. 17: it is wrought by his Spirit, and it has authority, mercy, and glory for its object.—Sorrow of the world. Such as arises from a sense of the injury that worldly men have done to themselves—to their peace of mind, their reputation, their health, or their property: and not from any regard to the law they have violated, or the God they have denied, Ps. 14. 1; Tit. 1. 16. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Gospel promises afford abundant assistance and encouragement for daily progress in true holiness of heart and life. With boldness and freedom may ministers deliver their messages and bear their troubles when their hearers cannot but attest their integrity and disinterested concern for their spiritual welfare. But it is painful to be obliged to distress those whom we wish to comfort. And it is a great honour to Christians when they are manifestly and evangelically penitent for their sins, and are an honour to Christ and comfort to his ministers.

CHAPTER VIII. Ver. 1. Being thus confident of your distinguished love and regard, I must again recommend to your Christian compassion the poor saints at Jerusalem; and for your excitement inform you that the powerful influence of God's grace hath determined the Christians of Macedonia to make a very liberal collection for them. 2, 3. And that, notwithstanding their own grievous persecutions and deep poverty they have, with uncommon generosity and gladness, bestowed their part, not only answerable to but even beyond their ability. 4. Yea, so far were they from needing any excitement from me or my fellow-ministers, that they importunately urged us to accept their free-will offering, and take the trouble of conveying and distributing it to their poor brethren. 5. And this they did with the greatest cheerfulness and generosity that could be expected; and not merely so, but, acting herein upon truly religious principles, before they put their contributions into our hands, they made a jo'nt and solemn surrender of themselves and all that they had to the honour, service, influence, government, and disposal of the Lord Jesus Christ, as their Head, Saviour, and King; and then, according to the will and directing influence of God, to us as his servants, to conduct them in their spiritual concerns according to the rules of his Word. 6. This their excellent behaviour made us to entreat Titus, our fellow-minister of Christ, who had been so acceptable among you, and had begun your charitable collections, to return to you, and, by his advices and encouragements, to complete them. 7. And as many of you, by the grace of God, are remarkable in the knowledge and faith of gospel mysteries, in eloquence of speech, in earnest endeavours to reform your church, in your affectionate regard to faithful ministers, and in other excellencies, I beg and hope that ye will proportionally abound in this grace of Christian benevolence. 8. And as I mean that it should be wholly a free gift, I lay no command upon you, nor impose any particular sum; but wish that, by showing yourselves equally forward with your

10 The meaning is as follows: Paul had given directions in his former epistle that the collection for the poor Christians in Judea should be taken up as soon as possible. On meeting Titus he learned that it had not yet been completed, though the churches of Macedonia, which were much poorer than that of Corinth, had long since given their contribution. He now presses the subject on the Corinthians, not giving any authoritative command, but simply an earnest recommendation. He says:—I give my advice (as distinguished from a command) in regard to this matter. For this is expedient for you (i.e. for such as they were it was better to give an advice than a command, seeing that you began to make the collection) before them (the Macedonians), not only to do, but also the will to do, from a year ago, i.e. you anticipated the Macedonians not only in your first action, but in your purpose to act.

4 The apostle seems to refer to a well-known fact in the statistics of commerce—the alternate depressions and resuscitations of trade in different cities and countries—the prosperity of one place being often contemporaneous with the calamity of another.

5 And upon this he grounds his appeal to the Corinthians, whose trade seems then to have been prosperous, while that of Macedonia was depressed; and he reminds them that the time may come when the revival of trade in Macedonia may enable them to supply the deficiencies from depression in Corinth.—C.

18 And we have sent with him ⁵the brother whose praise is in the gospel throughout all the churches;

19 And not that only, but who was also ⁶chosen of the churches to travel with us with this grace,³ which is administered by us to the glory of the same Lord, and declaration of your ready mind:

20 Avoiding⁷ this, that no man should blame us in this abundance which is administered by us:

21 Providing⁸ for honest things, not only in the sight of the Lord, but also in the sight of men.

22 And we have sent with them our ⁹brother, whom we have oftentimes proved diligent in poor brethren of Macedonia, ye may give further proof of your love to me and to the saints, and especially to Christ, in imitation of and thankful return for his unparalleled and endearing love towards you. 9. For by infallible information and your own experience ye know the astonishing favour, love, and bounty of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, who, though he was the eternal Son of God, possessed of all the riches, glory, and blessedness of the Godhead, and rightful proprietor of all the riches of the universe, yet, to effect your salvation, assumed our nature in a most debased and impoverished condition, veiled his divine glory, and submitted to poverty, meanness, and suffering, that by this means ye might be enriched with all the abundant blessings of grace and glory, and even with those temporal benefits which ye enjoy in a spiritual state. 10, 11. Affected with his engaging example, I expect that ye will now complete and put into one sum the collections which ye began to lay by you about a year ago when ye received my former epistle. 12. For wherever there is a cheerful and determined inclination to acts of benevolence, and sincere contrivances and endeavours to be able to distribute somewhat to the glory of God and the necessities of his people, it is acceptable not only to ministers and churches, but even to Christ himself, be it more or less, if answerable to men's circumstances and abilities. 13. For I do not wish that ye should reduce yourselves to poverty by giving too largely to the enriching of these poor saints in Judea, nor that the whole burden of supplying them should fall on you, to ease or excuse other churches that are able to assist in it; 14. But I am desirous that many things, but now much more diligent, upon the great confidence which I have⁵ in you.

23 Whether any do inquire of Titus, *he is my partner and fellow-helper concerning you: or our brethren be inquired of, they are the messengers of the churches, and the glory of Christ.*⁶

24 Wherefore show ye to them, and before the churches, the proof of your love, and of our boasting on your behalf.

CHAPTER IX.

1 He yieldeth the reason why, though he knew their forwardness, yet he sent Titus and his brethren beforehand: 6 and he proceedeth in stirring them up to a bountiful alms, as being but a kind of sowing of seed, 10 which shall return a great increase to them, 13 and occasion a great sacrifice of thanksgivings unto God.

FOR as touching the ministering to the saints, it is superfluous for me to write to you:

2 For I know the forwardness of your mind, for which I boast of you to them of Macedonia, that Achaia was ready¹ a year ago; and your zeal hath provoked very many.

3 Yet^a have I sent the brethren, lest our boasting of you should be in vain in this behalf; that, as I said, ye may be ready:

4 Lest^a haply if they of Macedonia come with me, and find you unprepared, we (that we say not ye) should be ashamed in this same confident boasting.

5 Therefore I thought it necessary to exhort the brethren, that they *'would go before unto you, and make up beforehand your² bounty, whereof ye had notice before,³ that the same might be ready, as a matter of bounty, and not as of covetousness.*⁴

6 But^a this I say, He which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully.

7 Every^a man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver.

8 And God is able to make all grace abound toward you; that ye, always having all sufficiency in all things, may abound to every good work:

9 (As it is written, He hath dispersed abroad; he hath given to the poor: his righteousness⁵ remaineth for ever.

10 Now¹ he that ministereth seed to the sower both ministereth bread for *your food, and multiply your seed sown, and increase the fruits of your² righteousness;*⁶

11 Being^a enriched in every thing to all bountifulness,⁷ which causeth through us thanksgiving to God.

12 For the administration of this service not only supplieth the want of the saints, but is abundant also by many thanksgivings unto God;

13 Whiles by the experiment of this ministration they glorify God for your professed

6 In the second clause of this verse Paul speaks of 'the messengers of the churches,' in the Greek it is 'the apostles of the churches;' i.e. those who were commissioned by the churches to do a certain work. It will be observed, that they are called 'the apostles of the churches,' not 'the apostles of the Lord.' The concluding phrase, 'the glory of Christ,' is intended to be descriptive of these apostles; they were men whose labours tended to promote the kingdom of Christ.—P.

this time ye, out of your abundance, should supply their extreme necessities, that if ever, by the providence of God, ye should be reduced to like straits, they or others may be able and inclined to supply your need: 15. Of which brotherly communication we have an agreeable example in the Israelites' distribution of the manna, giving whatever they gathered more than enough for themselves to such as, through age and infirmity, could not gather what was sufficient for their daily support. 16, 17. And blessed be God that he hath inspired our beloved brother Titus with the same fervent zeal as myself to engage you in this excellent service, for your own profit as well as the relief of the poor Jews; and indeed such was his abundant affection for you and zeal for this work, that he scarcely needed to be urged to promote it. 18, 19. And I and my brethren who are concerned in it have sent along with him on the same errand another eminent minister of great repute in the churches for his insight into the gospel, and his zeal, faithfulness, and diligence in promoting the interests of it; and who hath been chosen by the churches here to attend and assist us in distributing their collection to the poor Christians in Judea, to the honour of Christ and of all the cheerful contributors: 20, 21. We being desirous to have some other respectable ministers of Christ joined with us in bearing and distributing these large collections, that none might have occasion to suspect we had embezzled or misapplied any part of them; for we wish to execute this important trust in such a manner as may approve itself not only to God, who knows our hearts and ways, but also to the consciences of all mankind, whether friends or foes, who may observe our conduct. 22. And with these two brethren we have sent a third, of whose activity and faithfulness we have had the strongest proofs; and who, from the commendations of you which he hath heard from me, will exert himself to the utmost to complete your honourable liberality. 23. If any strangers desire to know the character of these three brethren, let them understand that Titus is my assistant in everything relating to your comfort and edification, and that of other Christians; and that the other two are approved messengers of the churches here in Macedonia, who also have been greatly instrumental in promoting the glory and honour of Christ.

24. Receive them therefore in such a respectful manner as will manifest to them and to the churches your love to Christ, to them and to me, and to the poor Jewish saints; and show that my boasting of you as a generous, faithful, and kind people hath been perfectly just and well-grounded.

REFLECTIONS.—What an excellent virtue is Christian benevolence! Wrought in us by the power of divine grace, it proves the sincerity of our love to Christ, and to his members for his sake. It is a delightful imitation of him in his redeeming kindness, and never fails to turn out to men's own advantage. But it is shameful to be outdone in it by persons poorer than ourselves.—It is highly honourable for professors first solemnly to give up themselves to Jesus Christ as his members and subjects, and, in consequence thereof, to the direction of his faithful ministers.—And happy is it when everything in charitable benevolence or other church matters is managed with such prudence, faithfulness, and disinterestedness as leaves not the least ground for a suspicion of fraud, partiality, or selfishness, and when ministers and saints so behave as to be generally beloved and extensively commended.

CHAPTER IX. Ver. 1. But the pious generosity and compassion of your own tempers renders it altogether superfluous to suggest any other arguments for enforcing your liberality on this occasion. 2. For I made me boast to the Christians of Macedonia that ye and your neighbours in Achaia had begun your collections a year ago; and the fame of your fervent zeal herein hath raised a noble emulation in the breasts of many. 3, 4. But notwithstanding my confidence in you, I thought proper to join in sending Titus and his two brethren to you, that your money may be collected and just ready for us whenever we call for it, lest if any of the Macedonian brethren come along with me, and find your collection not completed, it should expose both you and me, who have boasted of you, to shame and reproach. 5. I therefore thought it necessary for your and my own honour, and the common credit of Christianity, to entreat these brethren to come beforehand and inform you when ye may look for us, who are to receive, carry, and distribute it, that your bountiful contribution may be fully ready, and appear a grateful acknowledgment of God's kindness to you, cheerfully given, without any importunate instigation on our side. 6. And though the quantity to be given must be left to your own consciences, yet remember that, in allusion to the niggardly or plentiful sowing of seeds in the earth, God will ordinarily proportion his kind blessings to the straitness or liberality of your charitable contributions. 7. In view of this, let each of you give what he thinks proper in his circumstances, and that cheerfully, not like persons who grudge to part with it, or wish to be excused; for the infinitely bountiful God takes pleasure in them who give with an open hand and heart, and cheerfully improves every opportunity of making their condition comfortable. 8, 9. And this all-sufficient God, who delighteth in mercy, is able to make a liberal disposition, as well as all other gifts and graces, to abound in you, that ye, being content with what ye have, and plentifully supplied with everything pertaining to life and godliness, may be still more and more engaged in such charitable work, and thus attain to the inspired character of the merciful man, who, by his liberal distributions to the poor, procures himself lasting honours before God and men. 10. May therefore God, whose blessing maketh rich, and who multiplies grain to the sower, and supplies the necessity of liberal persons, and inclines them to supply others, give you always whatever is needful, restore your present liberality a hundred-fold into your bosoms in both spirituals and temporals, and enable you more and more to abound in all the fruits of righteousness! 11. May he plentifully enrich you with every blessing of time and eternity, and make you more and more inclined and able to abound in such disinterested liberality as may engage many souls in thankfulness to God for raising up by our means such instruments of supplying their wants! 12. For the proper distribution of this collection will not only be an ample relief to the poor Christians of Judea, but will redound to the honour of God, through the manifold thanksgivings of those who are supplied and other friends of Christ: 13. While by this experimental proof of your brotherly affection the receivers of your charity, and even they who hear of it, will adore and bless God for your unfeigned submission to the authority of Christ in subjection unto the gospel of Christ, and for your liberal distribution unto them, and unto all men;

14 And by their prayer for you, which long after you for the exceeding grace of God in you.

15 Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift.

CHAPTER X.

1 Against the false apostles, who disgraced the weakness of his person and bodily presence, he setteth out the spiritual might and authority with which he is armed against all adversary powers, 7 assuring them that at his coming he will be found as mighty in word, as he is now in writing being absent: 12 and withal taxing them for reaching out themselves beyond their compass, and vaunting themselves into other men's labours.

NOW I Paul myself beseech you by the meekness and gentleness of Christ, who in presence am base among you, but being absent am bold toward you.²

2 But I beseech you, that I may not be bold when I am present with that confidence, where-with I think to be bold against some, which think of us as if we walked according to the flesh.⁴

3 For though we walk in the flesh, we do not war after the flesh:

4 (For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds;)⁶

5 Casting down imaginations,⁷ and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity⁸ every thought to the obedience of Christ;

6 And having in a readiness to revenge all disobedience, when your obedience is fulfilled.

7 Do ye look on things after the outward appearance? If any man trust to himself that he is Christ's, let him of himself think this again, that, as he is Christ's, even so are we Christ's.

reader will observe a marked change in the tone and style of the epistle from this verse onwards. In the preceding part there is a gentleness of appeal, an affectionate earnestness of pleading, which could not fail to touch the hearts of the Corinthians. Here he assumes a tone of severity and of stern command. His mind was evidently affected by some new intelligence. Probably Titus had just told him of the charges preferred against him, and of the calumnies circulated regarding him. So far as concerned himself personally he was indifferent to such things; but he was jealous of his apostolic office and his divine commission. His Master's interest and honour were involved, and he therefore administers to the erring church a severe rebuke.—2

CHAPTER XI.

1 Out of his jealousy over the Corinthians, who seemed to make more account of the false apostles than of him, he entereth into a forced commendation of himself, 5 of his equality with the chief apostles, 7 of his preaching the gospel to them freely, and without any charge, 13 showing that he was not inferior to those deceitful workers in any legal prerogative, 23 and in the service of Christ, and in all kind of sufferings for his ministry, far superior.

WOULD to God¹ ye could ^abear with me a little in my folly: and indeed bear² with me.

2 For I am ^bjealous over you with godly jealousy: for I have ^cespoused you to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ.

3 But I ^dfear, lest by any means, ^eas the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtilty, ^fso your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity³ that is in Christ.

4 For if he that cometh preacheth ^hanother Jesus, whom we have not preached, or ⁱif ye receive another spirit, which ye have not received, or another gospel, which ye have not accepted, ye might well bear with him.

5 For I suppose I ^jwas not a whit behind the very chiefest apostles.

6 But though ^kI be rude in speech,⁴ yet not

4 The meaning is not that Paul was not a master of the Greek language, or that he did not speak it with idiomatic accuracy and force. The Greek word translated rude signifies 'one not professionally trained.' Paul was not an orin knowledge; but we have been thoroughly made manifest among you in all things.

7 Have I committed an offence ^kin abasing myself⁵ that ye might be exalted, because I have preached to you the gospel of God freely?

8 I⁶ robbed other churches, taking wages of them, to do you service.

9 And when I was present with you, and wanted, I was chargeable to no man: for that which was lacking to me, the brethren which came from Macedonia supplied: and in all things I have kept myself from being burdensome unto you, and so will I keep myself.

10 As⁷ the truth of Christ is in me,⁸ no man shall stop me of this boasting⁷ in the regions of Achaia.

11 Wherefore? ⁹because I love you not? ¹⁰God knoweth.

12 But what I do, that I will do,⁸ that⁹ I may cut off occasion from them which desire occasion; that wherein they glory, they may be found even as we.

13 For such ¹¹are false apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into the apostles of Christ.

repentance, I should have no reason of being ashamed as though I had gone beyond either truth or decency. 9. But I will not say what I might lest it should be pretended that I am desirous of terrifying my opposers by my letters, while I dare to say nothing face to face. 10. For they have already reproachfully derided me as if I wrote letters in a high, solemn, authoritative, and threatening strain, while when personally present I appear most weak and contemptible, and my discourse quite despicable, without either elegance of language or a graceful utterance. 11. But let these mockers know that if God bring me again among you, they shall find me every whit as severe in the practical execution of my apostolic authority against impenitent offenders as I appeared in my letters. 12. While they think me quite unworthy to be compared with themselves, my conscience restrains me from imitating them in self-conceit, and in groundless and indecent boasting to the decrying of everybody else.—And indeed it but manifests their weakness and folly to form their opinion of themselves from their own fancied excellencies, or comparison with some of their own party. 13. For my part, I abhor assuming to myself the honour of other men's labours, or of doing that which God never appointed or directed me to in my ministrations; but merely mention what God really did by me in the exercise of my apostolic office, all along from Jerusalem to your city. 14. I did not, like your factious preachers, hasten from place to place where I might best gain honour or wealth to myself; but came all along gradually, and was the first who preached the gospel to you. 15. And as I abhor boasting of anything done by others, or done out of the line prescribed me by Providence, I hope that when your faith, which has been shaken by these false teachers, is re-established and strengthened, I shall be encouraged and assisted by you to preach the gospel in places where it has not been heard. 16. I mean to preach in the countries to the north and west of you, for the conversion of the heathens to Christ, without encroaching on the province of any other, or taking the honour of any man's labours. 17. But, after all, instead of boasting of our own accomplishments, labours, and success, or of claiming the honour of other men's works, let every one of us glory in the Lord Jesus, by whose gracious direction and influence we act for the honour of God or good of souls. 18. For it is not he who has a high conceit, and boasts of his own abilities and performances, but he whom the Lord honours with his gifts, graces, presence, and blessing, and bears witness to as sincere, humble, and faithful in his work, that is now or shall at the last day be approved by God.

REFLECTIONS.—The best of men, and especially ministers, may expect malignant traducers. But with meekness and condescension they should endeavour to gain the unreasonably prejudiced, and yet with authority vindicate the honour of Christ in rebuking the obstinate. And though they have their natural infirmities and passions, they must never be governed by carnal principles or aims in their work.—Alas! how fixed is the power of sin and Satan in men's hearts! and yet the gospel, attended by the influence of God's Spirit, gloriously triumphs over all opposition, and wins men to Christ. It is necessary that ministers sometimes vindicate their conduct, and show the integrity, self-consistency, and order of it. But as ever either ministers or Christians would be approved by God, they must beware of pride, and glory only in Christ.

CHAPTER XI. Ver. 1. But as a little glorying in opposition to these pretended apostles among you is necessary for my vindication, and for enabling you to silence their proud boasts, I beg and hope that ye will bear with me a little in this, which without necessity would be extremely foolish. 2. For with a holy and religious fear I am deeply concerned lest any of you be drawn off from Christ and his gospel, or even a due regard to me his apostle, and the instrument by which ye were savingly turned and united to the Lord Jesus Christ; and that I may have the honour and pleasure of presenting you to him as a pure, uncorrupted, and faithful spouse. 3. But considering the artifices of your new teachers, I am afraid lest the devil, who, in the form of a serpent, beguiled our first mother Eve, to the general ruining of mankind, should pervert you in your principles, tempers, and practices, and turn you aside from the purity of doctrine and sincerity of manners becoming persons vitally united to Christ. 4. Indeed if any of your new preachers exhibit to you a more excellent Saviour than I and Apollos preached to you—or if by their ministrations ye have received a more excellent spirit, and more eminent gifts and graces, than ye did by ours—or if their gospel be more worthy of God, or more answerable to the condition of fallen men, than what we preached—ye may very justly own them, and prefer them to me. 5. It is nevertheless certain that I am not inferior to any of Christ's inspired apostles—no not to Peter, of whom some of you boast. 6. And though my style be plain and simple, and my pronunciation less graceful than that of Apollos, my knowledge of the mysteries of the gospel, which I received by revelation from Christ, is inferior to none; the efficacy of which, with respect to all the principal points of faith and obedience, ye experienced with such power of the Holy Ghost when I was among you, that I need only appeal to your consciences to attest it. 7. Is it reasonable to upbraid me that, to show I had no mercenary views upon you rich people of Corinth, but merely desired that you might be enriched with the blessings of salvation, I humbled myself to labour for my daily bread, and preached to you for nothing? 8. Nay, in pursuit of my studious concern for your spiritual advantage, I took gifts from other churches, that, for your greater edification, I might minister freely to you. 9. Accordingly I never complained to you when I was straitened for the necessities of life, nor became less diligent; for whatever I needed more than what I gained by my own labour, my friends in Macedonia supplied; and as I have preached, so I hope I shall ever preach the gospel to you without putting you to any charge. 10. And this conduct I am so far from being ashamed of, that I reckon it my honour; and I solemnly resolve that neither reproaches nor kindnesses shall stop my continuance in it among you Christians of Achaia. 11. And I can appeal to God that this refusing to take subsistence from you is not because I have taken some disgust at you. 12. But I have preached and will preach the gospel freely to you, to stop the reproachful revilings of your false teachers, and to induce them to oppress you as little as I do. 13. For whatever they pretend, they are not real apostles of Jesus Christ, sent and commissioned by him, but falsely claim that high character, and deceitfully corrupt the Word of God, and serve themselves instead of him. 14. And it is no wonder they labour to impose upon you by specious appearances, when even the devil, their master, often pretends holiness and kindness in order to perpetrate the greatest mischiefs. 15. It is therefore nothing strange or impracticable that his servants and emissaries should dissemble their true character, as if they were singularly holy, and taught men the way of righteousness to eternal life. But God will quickly judge and reward them according to their hypocrisy and wickedness. 16. Considering therefore how these pretenders to apostleship set off themselves to the deceiving of multitudes, I hope that ye will indulge me in a little necessary though foolish commendation of myself. 17. I do not pretend any express command or example of Christ in it; but their selfish boasting of themselves, and mean insinuations against me and what I preach, oblige me to cry up myself in their foolish manner. 18. For if they boast of descent from Abraham, or of circumcision and other external privileges, I have as much ground to boast on these heads as any 14 And no marvel: for ^aSatan himself is transformed into an angel of light.

15 Therefore it is no great thing if his ministers also be transformed as the ministers of righteousness; ^awhose end shall be according to their works.

16 I say again, ^aLet no man think me a fool; if otherwise, yet as a fool receive^o me, that I may boast myself a little.

17 That which I speak, ^aI speak it not after the Lord, but as it were ^afoolishly, in this confidence of boasting.

18 Seeing^o that many glory after the flesh, I will glory also.

19 For ye suffer fools gladly, ^aseeing ye yourselves are wise.

20 For ye suffer, ^aif a man bring you into bondage, if a man devour you, if a man take of you, if a man exalt himself, if a man smite you on the face.

21 I speak as concerning reproach, as though we had been ^aweak. Howbeit whereinsoever any is bold, (I speak foolishly,) ^aI am bold also.

22 Are they Hebrews? ^aso am I. Are they Israelites? so am I. Are they the seed of Abraham? so am I.¹

of them. 19. And I hope that ye, who are so wise in your own conceits, and can bear so much with their false and foolish boasting, will bear a little with me. 20. For if they attempt tyrannically to enslave your consciences, and subtly to make a prey of your substance, and exalting themselves insolently contemn and abuse you, ye can patiently put up with it all. 21. Let them then invidiously paint me out as a despicable wretch, incapable of apostolic powers and privileges, as they will, I dare boldly compare myself with them in everything worth mentioning. 22. In external Jewish honours, I am a Jew who speak the Hebrew language—a descendant of Jacob, the prevalent wrestler with God, by his beloved Benjamin—a descendant of Abraham, the friend of God, to whom and to his seed he promised to be a God in all generations. 23. In the honours of the gospel church I am a minister of Christ, a distinguished apostle, who have laboured, and suffered more scourging, imprisonment, and imminent dangers of death, in his cause, than any or all of them. 24. 25. Five times the enraged Jews have scourged me to the utmost degree of severity allowed by their law. At three different times I have been whipped according to the Roman law. At Lystra I was, at the Jews' instigation, stoned by the mob till I was accounted dead. Thrice I have been cast away at sea, and once tossed about a whole day and a night by the waves, lying on a part of the wreck. 26. Great and many have been my labours in preaching the gospel, and great my dangers from floods or rivers in the way.—Often have I been in danger of falling among robbers who infest the road; of being murdered by Jews or heathens; and of being killed by outrageous mobs in cities.—In travelling through desolate places I have been often in danger of being attacked by ruffians, or devoured by wild beasts, or of falling into other mischiefs.—At other times I have been in danger of perishing by storms, or of being taken by pirates; or have been insulted, abused, and nearly betrayed, through the treachery of Jews or pretended Christians. 27. In prosecuting my ministerial work, I have undergone the most fatiguing and painful services by day, and been deprived of proper rest and sleep by night. At other times I have been distressed for want of necessary food, and have spent much time in religious fasting. I have been often exposed to the severities of the weather, without sufficient clothing to keep me warm. 28. And besides all these bodily troubles, my anxious and careful concern for the spiritual welfare of all the Christian churches, and my grief on account of their corruptions or calamities, have not a little distressed my mind. 29. For there is not a member of the church, to my knowledge, afflicted in body or mind, or weak in gifts, graces, or attainments, whom I do not sympathize with and endeavour to relieve. There is none in danger of falling from the faith, hope, or holiness of the gospel, but my heart burns with grief, godly jealousy, and holy zeal to encourage, confirm, and recover him. 30. But since my enemies make a kind of boasting necessary for me in the present circumstances, I rather choose to glory in the hardships, persecutions, and reproaches which I have met with to humble me, and afford Jesus Christ an opportunity to manifest his strength in my weakness, than in my high privileges, and the great things which he has done by me. 31. And however ignorant ye be of many of my fore-mentioned trials, or even ready to suspect them as incredible, I dare appeal to the ever-blessed God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, whose I am, and whom I serve, and who has graciously supported me under and carried me through them, that I have said nothing but the truth. 32, 33. Nay, I had not long begun to preach the gospel when the governor whom Aretas king of Arabia had placed in Damascus resolved to gratify the Jews in murdering me, and shut up and strictly guarded the city to prevent my escape.—But, by the directing providence of God, my Christian friends let me down from one of their houses, which was on the wall, and thus I got out of their hands, to preach the gospel in other places.

Ver. 1. In my folly. Not in absolute folly, but in what was charged as folly—that self commendation which necessarily accompanied self-vindication. C.

Ver. 4. That is, if any one coming in the name of an apostle reveal another Saviour, minister another spirit, and preach another gospel, there is then good reason for bearing (not with him, the spurious apostle, but) with me in my jealous and urgent anxiety to win you back to the simplicity of the truth as it is in Jesus. C.

Ver. 5. The assertion of this verse can never be reconciled with the imaginary supremacy of Peter and his successors in Rome. C.

Ver. 12. That they may be found (to subsist by their own labour, or by the contributions of their foreign friends) even as we. C.

Ver. 13. For such (as reveal another Saviour, &c.; see note ver. 4) are false apostles, deceitful workers; or, rather, 'such deceitful workers are false apostles.' C.

Ver. 14. Satan himself is transformed, &c. Of which transformation the most obvious example occurs in the temptation (Mat. iv.), where, by direct quotation of Scripture—the very testimony of the Holy Spirit, merely a little mutilated to suit his purpose—Satan attempted to seduce our Lord into rebellion, while appearing to inculcate an act of implicit faith. C.

Ver. 17. I speak it not after the Lord—in whom there is neither Greek or Jew, Col. 3. 11; but I speak it as a Jew, boasting in the flesh (see ver. 18, 22), that by asserting my equality or superiority in all that the Jews value I may show them the vanity of boasting in things that I count but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord. C.

Ver. 19. This is neither 'irony nor ridicule,' as some inconsiderately represent it, but a plain declaration of fact—as if he had said, 'your superior wisdom enables you to bear with much that, in ceremonial observance or austerity of discipline, has in the sight of men the appearance of religion, yet in the sight of God is nevertheless foolishness.' C.

Ver. 24. Forty stripes save one. This was the utmost severity the Jewish law permitted, De. 25. 3; and a salutary lesson of humanity for Christian legislators and rulers when corporal punishment is deemed advisable or necessary. C.

Ver. 25. Beaten with rods. This seems to refer to punishment by the Roman fustes—a bundle of rods borne by the lictors before the consuls.—Thrice I suffered shipwreck. These all seem to have been different from that recorded Ac. xxvii., for that was posterior to the date of this epistle. C.

Ver. 26. Waters. Rather, 'rivers,' as distinguished from 'the sea.' C.

Ver. 28. Besides those things that are without—that is, besides those troubles already mentioned, which are external to my apostolic office. C.

Ver. 31. This, from its solemnity, evidently appears to refer to the catalogue of sufferings that precedes, not to the single danger that follows. C.

Ver. 33. There is no discrepancy between this account and that of Ac. 9. 20-25; the one account is merely more full than the other—ver. 32, 33 being a supplementary note to the foregoing enumeration. C.

REFLECTIONS.—With great care should ministers endeavour to prevent their hearers being seduced by Satan or his instruments, and to promote their spiritual espousals to Christ. To gain those ends, what temporal claims ought they not to forego! And what labours, dangers, and sufferings ought they not cheerfully to undergo! The devil and his preachers will turn themselves into diversified shapes in order to deceive men. And it is common for seducers to boast of their piety, learning, labours, and sufferings; yet how insignificant are all when compared with those of a faithful minister of Christ!—Seducers will always love the world in some shape or other, and embrace all opportunities of engrossing its riches, honours, or powers; and the world in return will always love its own.

CHAPTER XII. Ver. 1. In ordinary cases it is indeed neither proper nor profitable to boast of my privileges and enjoyments; but since your judaizing teachers have by their reproaches forced me to it, I shall further add that I have as much ground to boast of immediate intercourse with God as any of them can SUPHANIEH—DAMASCUS. [II. Corinthians, xi:22.]—In the 22nd verse of the 11th chapter of Second Corinthians, St. Paul claims to be a Hebrew of the Hebrews, and an Israelite of the Israelites, and of the seed of Abraham, in as complete a sense as any descendant of the father of the faithful. When Abraham came up from Ur, of the Chaldees, Damascus was one of the cities which he passed.

While this city has undergone great changes in the human elements of its history, it has changed very little in its natural features. Plane trees, poplars and black walnuts grew here when Abraham passed this way. On the banks of the Abana, which flowed through the city then as it flows now, plane trees, poplars and black walnuts continue to grow. Damascus is the dream of the Syrian Desert.

PLACE IN THE WALL OF DAMASCUS WHERE ST. PAUL WAS LET DOWN.
 [II. CORINTHIANS, xi: 32, 33.]—"In Damascus the governor under Aretas the king kept the city of the Damascenes with a garrison, desirous to apprehend me: And through a window in a basket was I let down by the wall, and escaped his hands." In the above view we have a picture of the place in the wall of Damascus where St. Paul was let down. This is in the southeastern portion of the wall. We can contemplate the effect upon human civilization had St. Paul's enemies succeeded in assassinating him. More than all other men, to him is due the credit of laying the foundation of Christian theology and the Christian church. The visit of Paul to Damascus does more to call travelers to this city than all other things in its history.

the king kept the city of the Damascenes with a garrison, desirous to apprehend me:

33 And through a window in a basket was I let down by the wall, and escaped his hands.

CHAPTER XII.

1 For commendeth of his apostleship, though he might glory of his wonderful revelations, 9 yet he rather chooseth to glory of his infirmities, 11 blaming them for forcing him to this vain boasting. 14 He promiseth to come to them again: but yet altogether in the affection of a father, 20 although he feareth he shall to his grief find many offenders, and public disorders there.

IT is not expedient for me doubtless to glory. I will come to visions and revelations of the Lord.

2 I^c knew a man in Christ above fourteen years ago, (whether in the body, I cannot tell; or whether out of the body,¹ I cannot tell: God knoweth;) such an one caught up to the third heaven.²

3 And I knew such a man, (whether in the body, or out of the body, I cannot tell: God knoweth;)

4 How that he was caught up into ⁴paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful³ for a man to utter.

5 Of such an one will I glory: ⁵yet of myself I will not glory, but in mine infirmities.

6 For ⁶though I would desire to glory, I shall not be a fool; for I will say the truth: but now I forbear, lest any man should think of me above that which he seeth me to be, or that he heareth of me.

7 And lest I should be exalted above measure through the abundance of the revelations, there was given to me a ⁷thorn in the flesh,⁴ the messenger of Satan⁵ to buffet me, lest I should be exalted above measure.

8 For this thing ⁸I besought the Lord thrice,⁶ that it might depart from me.

4 Concerning the precise nature of this thorn in the flesh, conjectures are numerous, and, because they are but conjectures, useless and vain. All that can be certainly known is this: it was some bodily affliction, either from disease, within or persecution without,—especially from his kinsmen according to the flesh. What precisely it was, 'God knoweth.' But, though a thorn, it was given,—sent as a gift, not as a punishment—an humbling memento to counteract the possibility of spiritual pride.—C.

5 Satan is, in fifty distinct places of Scripture, represented as the author of corporal maladies—which, indeed, must needs be so; for Satan is the author of sin—and sin is the cause of death—and disease is but death begun.—C.

9 And he said unto me, ⁹My grace is sufficient for thee: for my strength is made perfect in weakness. Most gladly therefore will ¹⁰I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me.

10 Therefore¹ I take pleasure in ⁷infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses, for Christ's sake: for ⁸when I am weak, then am I strong.

11 I^c am become a fool in glorying; ye have compelled me: for I ought to have been commended of you: for ²in nothing am I behind the very chiefest apostles, though I be nothing.

12 Truly^a the signs of an apostle were wrought among you in all patience, in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds.

13 For^b what is it wherein you were ⁸inferior to other churches, except it be that I myself was not burdensome to you? forgive me this wrong.⁹

14 Behold, ¹⁰the third time I am ready to come to you; and I will not be burdensome to you: for I seek not yours, but you: for the children ought not to lay up for the parents, but the parents for the children.

15 And ¹¹I will very gladly spend and be spent for you;¹ though the more abundantly I love you, the less I be loved.

16 But be it so, I did not burden you: nevertheless, being ¹²crafty, I caught you with guile.²

17 Did^c I make a gain of you by any of them whom I sent unto you?

pretend to. 2, 3. I knew a believer in and united to Christ who, about fourteen years ago, was in a vision rapt up to the highest heaven in his apprehensions; but whether his soul was separated from his body, or whether his whole man, soul and body, was carried up, I cannot determine, but must leave the matter to God. 4. But certain I am that this man had such clear manifestations of the glory of God, such clear, intelligible, and transporting revelations of heavenly things, as no words on earth can justly express. 5. Of this man, as so highly dignified, carried out of himself, and favoured with the immediate discoveries of God's love, I may and will speak honourably; but I will not speak a boasting word concerning myself, except it be of what plainly marks my weakness, and exposes me to the contempt of others, and thus tends to keep me humble, even while, for promoting the ends of my ministry, I seem to vaunt of them. 6. I could mention many other things, in consistence with good sense and strict truth; but I will say no more, either of my sufferings or revelations, lest some of my friends should be tempted to look upon me as more than a man, or greater than I really am. 7. Nay, lest through the unwatchfulness, vanity, and treachery of my own heart, I should pride myself in these extraordinary revelations, as if I were better than other men, the Lord very graciously permitted Satan and his instruments to afflict me in a very painful and debasing manner. 8. Almost overwhelmed with this trouble, I frequently and earnestly besought the Lord by solemn prayer that, if consistent with his will, he would rebuke and restrain the tempter, and deliver me from his violent assaults. 9. And though he did not grant me the very thing which I submissively asked, yet he graciously answered my requests, more to his own honour and my real advantage, by assuring me that his favour and love, and the gracious aids and comforts which he would afford me, would be every way sufficient and effectual to support me under and carry me through, and bring me off with great improvement, victory, and triumph; and that his almighty power should be illustriously manifested in these effects, in proportion to my utter inability to produce them.—In the assured faith of this promise, I will rather rejoice and glory in reproaches, persecutions, and troubles, than be discouraged by, ashamed, or afraid of them,—that the all-sufficient power and grace of Jesus Christ, to whom I have committed myself, may surround, cover, and defend me, sanctify my tribulations, and enable me to bear them with all-becoming submission, patience, humility, and hope, and at last bring me out of them more than a conqueror. 10. In this view, I take pleasure in all the afflictions which come upon me for professing and preaching Christ and his gospel; for when by these means I most see and feel my own weakness, and myself most sensibly strengthened in the Lord, by the influences of his Spirit in my inner man, courageously to bear up under and obtain glorious victories over them.—11. In mentioning so many things with an air of self-commendation, I have with reluctance, for the glory of God, the credit of the gospel, and your establishment and edification, done what in other circumstances would have been weak and foolish; but your culpable neglect to do my character justice, according to what ye had experienced under my ministrations, and your taking part with those who reproached me, made it necessary: for I appeal to your consciences if,

by the grace of God, I did not, however insignificant in myself, in conversation, sufferings, ministrations, miracles, and success, far exceed any of your new preachers, and even equal Peter, or any other of Christ's apostles. 12. The unquestionable marks of a true apostle of Christ have been manifest in my ministrations among you, in my patience and meekness under my labours and sufferings, and in the miraculous operations and marvellous success which attended them. 13. Have not ye yourselves by my ministry been enriched with all spiritual gifts and privileges as much as any other Christian church, whether planted by me or by any other apostle? Wherein have I been wanting to you—unless that, for your benefit and the honour of the gospel, I took no maintenance from you? and if ye will have this to be a wrong done to you, or to any other church, I hope ye may easily forgive it.—14. I have now thrice intended and prepared to make you a visit. The first time I had the pleasure of accomplishing my purpose, and planted the gospel among you. On the second occasion I deferred my coming till it might better promote your honour and comfort. And now when for the third time I am prepared to come, I am determined to give you my labours freely; for I do not aim at procuring your temporal good things for myself, but at edifying and saving your souls. Since I have been instrumental in begetting you to Christ by the gospel, I resolve, like a parent, to exert myself to the utmost for your spiritual benefit, without expecting a reward of your worldly substance. 15. I could be glad to spend my time, strength, and labour, and all my temporal ease, honour, and advantages, or even to wear out my life itself, for the good of your souls, even 19 Again, think ye that we excuse ourselves unto you? we speak before God in Christ: but we do all things, dearly beloved, for your edifying.

20 For I fear, lest, when I come, I shall not find you such as I would, and that I shall be found unto you such as ye would not: lest there be debates, envyings, wraths, strifes, backbitings, whisperings, swellings, tumults:

21 And lest, when I come again, my God will humble me among you, and that I shall bewail many which have sinned already, and have not repented of the uncleanness, and fornication, and lasciviousness, which they have committed.

were present, the second time; and being absent now I write to them which heretofore have sinned, and to all other, that, if I come again,
I will not spare:

3 Since ye seek a proof of Christ speaking in me, which to you-ward is not weak, but is mighty in you.

4 For though he was crucified through weakness, yet he liveth by the power of God. For we also are weak in him, but we shall live with him by the power of God toward you.

5 Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves. Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates?

6 But I trust that ye shall know that we are not reprobates.

7 Now I pray to God that ye do no evil; not that we should appear approved, but that ye should do that which is honest, though we be as reprobates.

8 For we can do nothing against the truth, but for the truth.

though I were to be slighted, reproached, and abused by you in proportion to my kindness to you. 16. Your new preachers indeed pretend that though I took nothing from you myself, I hereby craftily decoyed you to give more liberally to my partners. 17. But I dare appeal to yourselves if there is the least evidence that I ever made the least advantage of you for myself by means of any of my brethren, whom I sent to promote your comfort, rectify your disorders, and excite your charity to the poor saints in Judea. 18. I appeal to you if Titus, or the respectable brother who attended him, took anything either for their own labours or my subsistence, and if we did not all act upon the same disinterested plan to promote your spiritual welfare.
19. Nay, as a believer in and apostle of Christ, I can appeal to the all-seeing God that I did not send them to make any apology for me or my faithful brethren, or to excuse the delay of my visiting you; but that all my conduct towards you has been intended to support my apostolic authority, in order that my ministrations might the more effectually promote your edification.
20, 21. For, as I formerly hinted, I am much afraid that when I shall pay you my intended visit I shall not find you so orderly and obedient to the authority of Christ in me as I wish, and that I shall be obliged to exercise my power in a manner more severe than ye will relish. I fear lest through hearkening to seducers there should be among you fierce and uncharitable disputes, envious tempers and talkers, warm and angry passions, carnal contentions, and revilings of others behind their backs, proud, haughty boastings, and disdainful insults, and a tumultuous carriage towards one another; and lest my gracious God and Master should call me not to glory of you, or rejoice in beholding your faith and order, but to shame and grief, on account of Christ being so much dishonoured, and my labours so much lost among you,—and sharply to censure such as I find continuing impenitent in their scandalous sins.

REFLECTIONS.—Great are the changes which take place in the comforts and troubles of saints. God often lifts them up and casts them down again. The most ravishing manifestations are succeeded by sharp and fearful trials and temptations; but all is necessary to keep down pride and animate fervent prayer. And though God does not always answer the prayers of his people as they wish, he always does it in that manner which is best calculated to promote their spiritual benefit. If he secure to us his own powerful presence and grace, we may well glory in troubles, as giving him opportunities to perform his promises. And it is delightful to see the greatest ministers the most humble, and behaving in the most prudent and self-denying manner, in order to turn souls to Christ. But how shameful is it for people to break the hearts of their faithful and successful ministers by reproaches and impenitent continuance in scandalous enormities! And with deep impressions of the dishonour done to God and hurt to souls ought the unruly to be warned, and offenders to be censured.

CHAPTER XIII. Ver. 1, 2. As I am now for the third time preparing to visit you, ye may be assured that if I find any obstinately scandalous notwithstanding my former admonitions, I will immediately proceed against them with high and solemn censures: 3. And that in vindication of my sacred office, and for the honour of Christ, of whose commission to me, and speaking and acting in me, some of you insolently demand a proof; yet whose working by me to you-ward has not been weak, but with mighty power and energy, in your actual conversion, and in the gifts and graces bestowed on you, and miracles wrought among you, and in inflicting sickness and death on some of your disorderly walkers. 4. For though, through the weakness of his manhood and voluntary subjection to death, he was crucified, as if merely a weak and mortal creature, yet by virtue of his own and his Father's divine power he rose from the dead, and now lives in his exalted state, to exercise all authority in heaven and on earth: even so we, his faithful servants, are, in the opinion of our adversaries, weak and contemptible, and are exposed to manifold sufferings for his sake;
but, connected with him, we show, by the same power, in remarkable effects, that the life of our risen Redeemer animates us in our vigorous actions towards you, and that in due time we shall live and reign with him in glory. 5. Instead therefore of censuring and reproaching me and my faithful brethren, Timotheus, Sosthenes, or others, seriously and thoroughly examine your own hearts and practices, by the standard and touchstone of God's Word, whether, from a principle of faith awakened in your hearts by the Holy Ghost, ye really believe in Christ, and live on him through the word of the gospel. What! amidst all your pretences to knowledge, and all your contentions and disputes, are ye strangers to what has passed between God and your own souls, and to your state, condition, and behaviour before him? Know ye not that if Jesus Christ, the only Saviour, does not dwell in your hearts by faith, with powerful influence and dominion, ye are but mere hypocrites, and very unfit for the approbation of God? 6. But whatever ye may prove upon trial, I hope that, by the power and gracious influence of Christ, ye shall have full evidence of his owning us as true believers and faithful ministers of the gospel. 7. Yea, my earnest prayer to God for you is, that ye may be preserved and reclaimed from every evil way. For I would gladly be without the opportunity of exercising my apostolic powers against scandalous persons, even though some should thence take occasion to suspect me as disapproved of God and destitute of such power. 8. I have neither inclination nor authority to do anything but what is right and fit, nor to do anything against them that walk orderly according to the gospel, any more than against the gospel itself; but am only authorized and inclined to reclaim backsliders, and to encourage and promote your soundness in the faith, and integrity in heart and life. 9. Gladly would I, by your repentance and reformation, be entirely restrained from severe censures; happy should I be were ye so strong in faith and holiness as to need no reproof, and that all things in the state of your church, the temper of your soul, and course of your life, were brought to the highest perfection. 10. It is with these kind views that I have wrote you these warnings, cautions, advices, and encouragements, that when I come I may not be obliged to make use of any awful methods in exercising that authority which Christ has given me for establishing and increasing the faith, comfort, holiness, and order of his church, and not for the hurt, discouragement, or final destruction of any member of it. 11, 12.

But to conclude—may all prosperity and happiness attend you, whom I esteem as my brethren in Christ!
Rectify everything amiss or disjointed in your church, heart, or practice. Encourage yourselves and one another in the Lord your God; and labour to do whatever is truly excellent, that ye may be filled with the joys of faith and of a good conscience. Unite heartily in your views of gospel truths, in your zeal to promote their influence, and in a Christian temper one towards another. Study what makes for peace and brotherly love, that there may be no more party strifes and angry contentions and schisms among you; and in an attention to these things ye may expect that God, the fountain, author, giver, commander, and supreme approver of all love and peace, will take up his gracious and complacential abode with you, manifest his special favour to you, and bestow his best blessings upon you —in token of which, let even your common salutations be truly chaste, holy, and affectionate. 13. To set you an example of mutual kindness and respect, all the holy brethren here send you their most affectionate salutations, wishing above all things that your souls may prosper. 14. And for this end, as well as to mark my apostolic authority and testify my respect to you, I conclude with solemnly blessing you in the name of the Lord. May the full favour, gracious presence, and influence of our Lord Jesus Christ, through whose merits and mediation all spiritual and eternal blessings are procured and conveyed to men—may the self-moving love of God the Father, which is the original source of all spiritual blessings—and may the these blessings are graciously applied, and we are brought into blessed fellowship with the Father and Son, and into a participation of their love and grace in all their happy effects—be continually with and abound towards you as a church, and every individual member of it!

REFLECTIONS.—Professed Christians are often more given to censure and reproach their neighbours, and especially their ministers, than to try and know themselves. But very important is the certain knowledge whether we be really united to and hold fellowship with Jesus Christ by faith; and it is shameful for us to live ignorant of it. It is very desirable that offending church-members should be reclaimed by gentle methods. But if they continue obstinate they must be sharply dealt with to bring them to repentance. What an honour is it for ministers to employ all their power, care, and labour to promote the edification and comfort of souls! It is only for this purpose they received their authority and commission from Christ; and if he approve them they need care the less what men think of them. If in conformity to him, and for his sake, they be exposed to suffering and death, it is enough if he support and crown them with a share in his glory. Happy is the church whose members, under the gracious influence of a reconciled God, live together in unity of sentiment and affection, and who hold distinct and intimate communion with Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. And transcendently wonderful is it, and ravishingly sweet, that these divine Persons should so harmoniously concur in unceasing mercy and grace to mean and sinful men.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE SECOND EPISTLE TO THE CORINTHIANS.

'The most remarkable circumstance in this epistle is the confidence of the apostle in the goodness of his cause, and in the power of God to bear him out in it.' He was evidently opposed by a powerful faction who rejected his apostolic authority. Yet with the utmost intrepidity he appeals to the miraculous works he had done in presence of his opponents, and to the gifts he had instrumentally conferred on the people, whom his opponents (whom he boldly denominates false apostles and agents of Satan) were endeavouring to turn against him. It cannot be denied that divisions in the churches of Christ are deeply to be deplored; for they are the evidence at once both of Satan's working and success. Still out of every evil the Lord can extract good: and here there is furnished an incontestable evidence both of the apostle's integrity and divine inspiration. Had there been anything hollow or rotten in the principles of the apostle—had there been any imposture to be detected or exposed—this conflict of parties, this terrible assault of the apostle, must have provoked his adversaries to the disclosure. Nothing, however, of the kind appears. His miraculous powers could not be denied; and, upon that head at least, opposition was hushed into silence. He visited Corinth again as he had originally purposed, Ac. 20. 2, 3; was received as an apostle; remained for several months; and had the contributions for the saints at Jerusalem brought to him from the surrounding districts, Ro. 15. 26. Of the false teachers no more is heard—their memory and their name are blotted out; and this epistle abides a monument of apostolic integrity and courage, and an additional and irresistible evidence that Christianity is no 'cunningly devised fable.' C.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE GALATIANS.

Galatia was a province in the north-east of Lesser Asia. Here, as in many other places, the apostles had scarcely planted the gospel of Christ, when some Judaizing teachers contended that the Gentile converts should be circumcised, as a token of their obligation to fulfil the whole law of Moses, in order to their justification before God; and as Paul's instructions greatly thwarted their schemes, they insinuated that he had no apostolic authority. To confute these pretensions is the scope of this epistle. Here Paul (1) Represents his apostolic authority as in nothing inferior to that of Peter, or any other apostle, ch. i.; 2. 1-15. (2) Reprehends the Galatians for their sudden apostasy from the faith of the gospel, and establishes the doctrine of justification by faith in the sacrifice of Jesus Christ, ch. 1. 6-9; 2. 16-21; iii. iv. (3) Directs to the right improvement of the doctrines and privileges of gospel grace, ch. v. vi.

[The Galatians or Gallo-Grecians were the descendants of a colony of Gauls or Celts, who migrated from their own country under Brennius, and after a series of disasters, obtained possession of a considerable district of Western Asia, to which they gave the name of Galatia. They are represented by historians as a tall, athletic, and warlike people, who went nearly naked, and used for arms merely a buckler and sword; and who, by the impetuosity of their attack, were nearly irresistible. Before their conversion to Christianity, their religion was so corrupt and superstitious, that they are said to have offered human sacrifices of the prisoners taken in war. They spoke the Greek language in common with all the inhabitants of Western Asia; but, according to Jerome, retained their original Celtic also down to the fifth century.]

Among this semi-barbarous people it appears that Paul planted, not one, but several churches, Ac. 16. 6; 18. 23; and being now a prisoner at Rome, ch. 6. 17, some false apostles had, after his departure, seduced his converts from the simplicity of the gospel, and persuaded them to conjoin with it the observance of the Jewish ceremonies as necessary to salvation, ch. 6. 13; that justification was a compound of faith and works, ch. 3. 2; 4. 21; that Paul was no authorized apostle, and (as may be inferred from ch. 2. 9) in no wise to be compared with others who had seen Christ in the flesh. Under these circumstances the apostle wrote this epistle, wherein he labours to counteract these 'deceitful workers' and their false doctrines, and to bring the Galatians back to the perception and acknowledgment of the simplicity of the gospel. This he endeavours to effect, (1) By asserting the authority of his apostleship and the truth of the gospel he had preached, ch. i.; ii. to ver. 15. (2) By illustrating and vindicating the true doctrine of justification by faith, proving the temporary character of the Levitical institutions and of the entire legal dispensation, to the end of ch. iv. (3) By instructing his converts how to use their Christian liberty, and pressing upon them the necessity of exterminating the lusts of the flesh, and of cultivating the fruit of the Spirit. C.

Justification by faith alone is the theme of this epistle. With a logical acuteness, an appropriateness of illustration, and a power of application, unequalled even in the Bible, is this grand theme set forth. All sources of knowledge, all forms of authority,—direct divine teaching, inspiration, personal experience, the

ARCH OF CONSTANTINE. The epistle of the Galatians was written from Rome, and we give as an illustration here the Arch of Constantine, the best preserved of all the arches in Rome. It was erected in 312 A. D., to commemorate the conversion of Constantine to Christianity. The greater part of the ornamentation and the sculpture were brought from a building of Trajan, which stood at the entrance to Trajan's Forum. There are various inscriptions and representations on the arch. One represents Trajan's entry into Rome, another represents Trajan causing poor children to be educated, another represents Trajan addressing the army, and in another Trajan is depicted as condemning a barbarian. So we have here the purpose of the Emperor Constantine embodied and ornamented by heathen sculpture.

testimony of Christ, the statements of the Old Testament,—are all employed to elucidate and enforce the doctrine of justification by faith. This epistle is a model of controversial theology. Truth is defended and error exposed with equal clearness and decision. There is no tampering with incipient heresy. There is no attempt to throw the cloak of Christian charity over a false principle. There is no effort to cultivate fraternal union at the expense of fundamental truth. Purity of faith is its pervading maxim. Until this is established and recognized, there can be no real unity or peace in a church.

There is much in the character and history of the Galli, or Celts, to illustrate incidental statements and allusions in this epistle. A few points may be noticed as a guide to the thoughtful reader. (1) A leading characteristic of the Celts was impressibility, combined with quickness of apprehension, and promptitude, approaching to rashness, in act. An illustration is given in ch. 4. 14. (2) Fickleness and constant tendency to change was another marked feature, which explains ch. 1. 16; 3. 1, &c. (3) The Celts were quarrelsome, and vindictive when passion was roused. See ch. 5. 15. (4) They were likewise proud and vainglorious. See ch. 6. 5. (5) They were superstitious to an extreme: and their superstition was shown in undue veneration for ceremonies and shrines. See ch. 3. 3. The apostle has left in various incidental notices and sketches a tolerably distinct portrait of the people to whom he addressed this epistle. The thoughtful reader will see that he is here dealing with a type of character as unlike as possible to the polished but dissolute Greek, or the calm philosophic Roman, or the dreamy speculative Oriental. Paul knew them thoroughly. He noted their national characteristics, their faults and passions, with an eye quickened by divine intuition; and he took full advantage of this knowledge in reclaiming and re-establishing in the faith an erring church. Paul was in Greece, and perhaps in Macedonia, when he wrote this epistle. Before setting out on his journey from Ephesus he wrote the first epistle to the Corinthians. 9 As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed.

10 For do I now persuade men, or God? or do I seek to please men? for if I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ.

11 But I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man.

12 For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ.

13 For ye have heard of my conversation in time past in the Jews' religion, how that be-

CHAPTER I. Ver. 1. Whatever your false teachers suggest to the contrary, I avow myself an inspired messenger of Jesus Christ, appointed to plant Christian churches in the world—who indeed have received my commission by the instrumentality of no man, but immediately from Christ himself, and by the express commandment of God, who raised him up from the dead, in testimony of his having completely met the demands of the broken law, and brought in an everlasting righteousness for the justification of all that believe in him. 2, 3. And with the hearty consent of my fellow-preachers and Christians here, I send this admonitory letter to your lately planted and yet sadly degenerated Christian assemblies in Galatia—earnestly wishing that the riches of his free, undeserved, and forfeited favour may be extended to you, and all the blessings of spiritual peace and prosperity be bestowed upon you from God the Father, the first mover in the whole method of our redemption, and from Jesus Christ, the only Mediator between God and men, and the purchaser and dispenser of all the benefits of grace and glory to us: 4. Who in his infinite condescension and love freely surrendered his soul and body, as personally united to his divine nature, to be an atoning sacrifice for our sins, who deserved nothing but eternal destruction—that by his righteousness as the means, and by his love as the real cause, he might pluck us as brands out of the burning, and rescue us from the men, the vanities, sins, and tribulations of this evil world, and from all the dangerous snares and depraved customs of this present age, and even from the now exceedingly corrupted Jewish constitution, and in due time transport us to the heavenly state—and all according to the eternal compassion and good will of God our reconciled Father in him, who, in Christ, loves and deals with us as his children: 5. To whom be all possible and highly exalted honour, glory, and praise, through all the ages of time or eternity, for his unparalleled work of redemption, in which infinite wisdom, power, justice, holiness, mercy, and truth shine forth with the most united and endearing lustre. —6. When I reflect on the delightful and transcendent glory of this wonderful salvation, and on its suitability, high importance, and absolute necessity to lost sinners, I cannot but be amazed and pained to hear that some of you who but so lately were instructed in the truths of the gospel, and seemed to receive them into your hearts, should be already carried away in your sentiments, affections, and practice, not only from me, who was instrumental in calling you to the fellowship of the gospel, but from God and Christ, who by me called you to partake of all the gracious benefits of redemption which are discovered and freely offered in the gospel; and that even to quite another system of doctrine, representing the justification of sinners as, at least in part, by the works of the law: 7. Which indeed really is no gospel, no glad tidings of acceptance and salvation at all, as it represents them obtainable only upon impracticable and impossible terms; but your judaizing teachers, who are verily a plague to you, set themselves to overturn that blessed gospel of which Jesus Christ is the author, subject, and end, and to transform it into a new covenant of works, in which our own obedience must be the necessary condition of justification and eternal life; and they even pretend that Peter and other apostles are of their mind. 8. But I am bold to aver, that if any apostle, or even an angel from heaven, could preach to you any other system of doctrine relative to the salvation of sinful men contrary to or even different from that which I, by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, delivered to you, he should, as an accursed person, be rejected of God, and devoted to eternal destruction. 9. I deliberately and solemnly repeat it, as a matter of infinite importance and infallible certainty, that if any man or angel preach any other system of doctrine concerning the salvation of sinful men than what ye, when I was among you, professed to receive in faith and love, he is to be disdained and rejected as one abandoned by God, and richly deserving of excommunication—nay, of everlasting ruin. 10. Can you imagine that, after being so long converted and employed in the ministry, and suffering so many things for Christ, my great aim is to persuade people to embrace the doctrines of men rather than the gospel of God, or to ingratiate myself with the Jewish zealots, or any others of mankind? No; I abhor the thought. Did I, as in the days of my unregeneracy, seek the favour of men, and study to serve their corrupt humours or designs, I had never enlisted in the service of Christ, nor could I be his faithful servant, as I profess and labour to be. 11. And by all the signs of apostleship I manifest that the gospel of men's salvation, through the glorious sacrifice of Christ, which I have constantly preached, is neither formed according to the natural taste or tempers of men, nor originates from their authority, contrivance, or dictates, nor tends to promote their carnal honours or interests. 12. For I neither received my knowledge of it, nor my commission to preach it, by the instrumentality of apostles, or any other mere men, but by immediate revelation from Jesus Christ, God-man, some time after his exaltation to his heavenly kingdom. 13, 14. For ye cannot but have heard that I was once a furious zealot for the Jewish manner of worship, and outrageously persecuted the Christians, and compelled them to renounce their Lord, under pain of imprisonment, banishment, or death; and that, having an uncommon knowledge of the Jewish rites and ceremonies, I observed them with the greatest strictness, and with uncommon zeal propagated them everywhere. 15, 16. It cannot therefore be supposed that without some extraordinary call and influence I should abandon my darling and deep-rooted sentiments, tempers, and manner of life to embrace Christ and the gospel, in direct opposition thereto, and to all my secular interests; but when God, who of his infinite love, without regard to any foreseen natural goodness, had set me apart to his service before I was born, did, by an extraordinary miraculous appearance and voice from heaven, and by a powerful and efficacious illumination on my heart, make to me a clear and full discovery of Jesus Christ, his dear Son, in all the glory of his person, offices, relations, righteousness, and grace—that I might know and embrace him for the salvation of my own soul, and preach him to Gentiles as well as Jews—I did not stand to consult the yond measure I persecuted the church of God, and wasted it;

14 And^t profited in the Jews' religion above many my equals³ in mine own nation, being more exceedingly zealous of the traditions of my fathers.

15 But when it pleased God,⁴ who "separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by his grace, 16 To⁵ reveal his Son in me, that I might preach him among the heathen; "immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood:

17 Neither went I up to Jerusalem to them which were apostles before me; but I went into Arabia,⁵ and returned again unto Damascus.

18 Then after three years I went up⁶ to Jerusalem to see Peter, and abode with him fifteen days.

19 But "other of the apostles saw I none, save James the Lord's brother.

CHAPTER II.

1 He sheweth when he went up again to Jerusalem, and for what purpose: 3 and that Titus was not circumcised: 11 and that he resisted Peter, and told him the reason, 14 why he and others, being Jews, do believe in Christ to be justified by faith, and not by works: 20 and that they live not in sin, who are so justified.

THEN, "fourteen years after, I went up again to Jerusalem with Barnabas, and took Titus with me also.

inclinations, ease, or comfort of my outward man, nor the dictates of human policy, relative to honour, interest, reproach, or danger; nor did I advise with any mortal about my duty, which was so plainly prescribed me by God. 17. Neither did I so much as go up to Jerusalem to receive further instructions or authority from them that had been called to the apostleship before me; but, fully satisfied with the instructions and commission which I had immediately received from Christ, I began to preach the gospel at Damascus in Syria, where I had been converted and called. Thence I went into the adjacent parts of Arabia and preached it, where no apostles had ever been, and where I had no opportunity of conversing with them; and thence I returned back to Damascus. 18, 19. Three years after my conversion I took a journey to Jerusalem, not to receive any further instruction or commission, but merely to make a brotherly visit to Peter, that great apostle of the Jewish converts, that we might confer together of what the Lord had done by our ministrations. And being introduced by Barnabas, I was readily received as a faithful minister of Christ, and abode with him about fifteen days, without seeing any other of the apostles except James the Less, a kinsman of our Lord according to the flesh. Thus I received no instruction or commission from the apostolic college there. 20. And as these hints are of great importance for vindicating my doctrine and authority, which have been traduced among you, I solemnly appeal to God himself, who knows all things, and to whom I must give a final account, that all that I have said is strictly true. 21. Returning from Jerusalem, I travelled northward into the provinces of Syria and Cilicia, attended by some brethren from Jerusalem as far as Cesarea, from whence I was sent to Tarsus, in Cilicia, my native city. 22. But all this time I remained personally unknown to most of the Christian assemblies in Judea which had joined together in the faith and fellowship of the gospel before me, and so could receive neither instruction nor commission from them. 23. All that they knew concerning me was, that Saul, the furious persecutor of Christians, had become a noted preacher of that very gospel which he had before laboured to suppress, and a helper of that very faith for which he had endeavoured to destroy others; 24. Which made them heartily praise and thank God for his marvellous grace to me the chief of sinners, and for the rich advantages that accrued to the church by my remarkable conversion.

Ver. 6. Removed from him. By 'him that called you,' the apostle most probably means himself as the instrument of their calling, as the words in ἡμεῖς should be translated 'by' or 'through' rather than 'into the grace of Christ.' See Scott, Kappe, and Winer. C.

Ver. 10. Am I now endeavouring to gain the favour of men, or approve myself to God? 'or do I seek to please men,' by adapting the gospel to their prejudices? C.

Ver. 13. The conversion of Paul the persecutor, who not only forsook kindred, country, office, emolument, and honour, but who forsook also his habits, and, as it were, his very nature, for Christ, forms an incontrovertible proof of his sincerity, and of the divine origin and sovereign power of the gospel. C.

Ver. 16. In me is to be preferred to either 'to me' or 'by me,' and describes the illumination of the apostle's understanding by him in whom 'was light,' and the formation of Christ in his affections, the power of life and 'hope of glory.' Col. 1. 27. C.

Ver. 17. I went into Arabia. because he did not accompany Paul.—Note. The object of the apostle in this narrative is to show that he did not receive the gospel from men, but directly from Jesus Christ himself. C.

REFLECTIONS.—With entire satisfaction may we receive the gospel delivered by the apostles, since they received it immediately from Christ. And delightfully, jointly, and equally all church authority and spiritual blessings proceed from him and his Father. Infinitely important and beneficial is his death for us; and his resurrection clearly manifests the acceptableness and efficacy of it. And what deliverance from sin, Satan, and an evil world, and what grace and peace, may we not pray and hope for through it? It is detestable and dangerous to apostatize from or pervert the gospel of Christ. And it is no wonder that the doctrine of men's justification by their own works never reforms the world, but increases unto more ungodliness, when it has the curse of God lying on it and its preachers. Ministers have need to be faithful in declaring the truths of God without regard to any carnal consideration. And no man nor minister can at once please Christ and the world—serve God and mammon. Astonishing are the effects of God's grace on the hearts of sinners. Gloriously it enlightens the ignorant, attracts the perverse, subdues the obstinately furious, and renders Jesus' inveterate enemies his loving friends and faithful servants. And it is a great comfort distinctly to perceive and feel its operations, and for Christians to hear of its going forth conquering and to conquer.

CHAPTER II. Ver. 1. Then fourteen years after, I and Barnabas went up to Jerusalem, taking Titus along with us. 2. But I went up not to be instructed or confirmed in my office, but as a deputy from the church of Antioch to the synod which met at Jerusalem, to determine whether the circumcision of the believing Gentiles was necessary to their salvation or not. And this I did by special direction from God, to maintain the truth and purity of the gospel as he had revealed it to me; and was so far from receiving the gospel from the apostles there, that I explained it to them as I had preached it among the Gentiles, and declared what success it had obtained. This I at first did, only in a more private manner, to the principal preachers there assembled, lest if I had given a full and plain account of it to the Christians in general the Judaizing party might have raised such furious clamours against me as to have rendered my earnest ministrations less acceptable even to the Gentiles. 3. But to manifest how steadfastly I adhered to my principles relative to the freedom of the gospel state, and how far I was from giving the least countenance to the supposed necessity of observing the law of Moses as a condition of justification before God, Titus, who was a Gentile, was admitted as a minister of Christ and a member of the synod without ever being circumcised. 4. I even took this uncircumcised minister of Christ along with me to the synod that I might bear a public testimony against the doctrine of the pharisaical preachers who, coming from Judea, had insinuated themselves among the converts at Antioch, that, under colour of Christian brethren, they might have the better opportunity of narrowly inspecting our principles and conduct, and of cavilling at that holy freedom from ceremonies which Christ has given us under the gospel, and of imposing circumcision and other abolished ceremonies on the church.—5. This conduct of theirs, being not a mere weakness or honestly-conceived prejudice, but a wicked attempt to reduce believers under the covenant of works, and to rob the Gentiles of the true gospel of Christ, I and Barnabas refused to yield to them in the least. 6. And let Peter, James, and John be as great as they will, it is certain that their call, powers, and success were wholly owing to the loving pleasure and free grace of God as well as mine, and that in my conference with them I received no correction or instruction touching either my doctrine or conduct. 7. But from the account which I and Barnabas gave them, they with great joy observed that I had been called by Christ to preach the gospel to the uncircumcised Gentiles, even as Peter preached it to the circumcised Jews. 8. For it appeared that manifold miraculous and gracious operations had manifested and confirmed my apostolic mission to the Gentiles, as well as his to the Jews. 9. And when Peter, James, and John, whom I, as well as mine enemies, account principal supporters, maintainers, and defenders of the church and truths of the gospel, saw how God had graciously qualified, called, and owned me in my ministrations, they, in the most express and affectionate manner, acknowledged me and Barnabas as their fellow-apostles, and agreed that we should principally preach the gospel to the Gentiles, while they did the same to the Jews. 10. The only request they made was, that we should stir up the Gentiles to make charitable contributions for the relief of the poor Jewish Christians, which was a work so compassionate, laudable, and necessary, that, though they had not mentioned it, my natural affection to my countrymen, my impartial love to Christ's indigent members, and my looking on the Gentiles as debtors to the Jews, from whom they received the gospel, had made me forward to engage in it. 11. But when Peter, some time after, came to Antioch in Syria, where the first noted church of Gentile Christians was formed, and from which I and Barnabas had been sent to the synod at Jerusalem, for a determination concerning the necessity of circumcising the Gentile converts, and had received an answer in the negative, I, knowing myself to be in no respect his inferior in office, sharply and publicly rebuked him for his offensively acting contrary to the principles which he had avowed in the synod. 12. For though at his first coming to Antioch he, according to his gospel liberty, freely conversed, and familiarly ate and drank with the believing Gentiles, yet when some among the Gentiles; but privately¹ to them which were of reputation, lest by any means I should run, or had run, in vain.

3 But² neither Titus, who was with me, being a Greek, was compelled² to be circumcised.³

4 And⁴ that because of false brethren un-awares brought in, who came in privily to spy out our liberty which we have in Christ Jesus, that they might bring us into bondage:

5 To⁵ whom we gave place by subjection, no, not for an hour; that the truth of the gospel⁶ might continue with you.

6 But of those⁷ who seemed to be somewhat, whatsoever they were, it maketh no matter to me: God accepteth no man's person: for they who seemed to be somewhat, in conference added nothing to me.

7 But contrariwise, when they saw that the gospel⁸ of the uncircumcision was committed unto me, as the⁹ gospel of the circumcision was unto Peter;

8 (For he that wrought effectually in Peter to the apostleship of the circumcision, the same was¹⁰ mighty in me toward the Gentiles;)

9 And when James, Cephas, and John, who seemed to be pillars, perceived the grace that was given unto me, they gave to me and Barnabas the right hands of fellowship; that we judaizing zealots came thither from Jerusalem, he, for fear of offending them, withdrew from the Gentile converts, and declined all familiar converse with them; 13. Which when the Jewish Christians at Antioch, who had almost got over all their prejudices against the uncircumcised believers, observed, misled by his example, they also refrained from their wonted familiarity with them; and even Barnabas, a noted Christian, and my fellow-apostle of the Gentiles, was, contrary to his own judgment, infected with their dissimulation. 14. But when I saw their conduct quite contrary to the simplicity and godly sincerity of the Christian religion, and the true spirit and design of the gospel doctrine of justification by Christ alone, filled with holy indignation, I solemnly interrogated Peter, as their ringleader, before the whole church,—how he, who, though a Jew, made no scruple on some occasions to converse familiarly with the Gentiles, and conform himself to their innocent customs, without any regard to the ceremonial law, could, in consistency with Christian sincerity, at this time, through a slavish fear of the Jews, practically seduce the Gentile believers into religious observance of the abolished Jewish ceremonies?—15. And how contrary was this to the truth of the gospel;—for Peter, Barnabas, I, and other Christians, who were by birth Jews, devoted to God, and who were trained up under the obligations of the Mosaic law, and not Gentiles, strangers to the law, and looked upon as profligate sinners. 16. Being fully convinced that no man can be acquitted from condemnation, and accepted by God as righteous, on account of his own sufferings or obedience to the covenant of works, but only on account of a living implicit faith in Christ, who gave himself a sacrifice to be received by faith alone;—have therefore believed in Christ as our only Saviour, that through our receiving and resting on him alone for our salvation we might be justified unto eternal life: and indeed the strict and extensive demands of God's law, and the manifold defects found in the best, render it absolutely impossible for any man, whether Jew or Gentile, to be justified by any personal righteousness of his own. 17. Now if, while we thus seek justification through the blessed sacrifice of Christ, received by faith alone, we continue under the law as accursed sinners, or live as persons under the power of sin, we practically represent Christ and his method of salvation as leaving us under the curse and dominion of sin, and as encouraging us to practise wickedness. 18. Or if, after so earnestly renouncing the righteousness of the law for justification before God, I should again attempt to establish the method of justification by the works of the law in my doctrine or practice, I could not but grievously offend God, frustrate my own believing in Christ, and reduce myself to a state of guilt and condemnation. 19. And nothing can be more contrary to my inclination; for, by my knowledge and experience of the spirituality, extent, and strictness of the law as a covenant of works, I am deeply convinced of my own sinfulness, and have lost all hope and desire to be justified by my own righteousness; and, by the grace of God, I am fully delivered from the broken law, that I might live in a state of favour with God, through the sacrifice of his Son; and that, being divorced from the covenant of works as my first husband, and married to Christ, I might live upon better principles, to better ends, and under new obligations, in all holiness and righteousness according to the law, and to the glory of God, as my reconciled Father in Christ. 20. For having in Jesus Christ a Saviour who satisfied all the demands of this broken law of works, I am thereby dead to it, and it to me. Nevertheless, I am brought into a state of justification unto life, and thereby enabled to bring forth living fruits of righteousness; yet this life of justification and sanctification is not owing to anything in me, but only to Christ, who, by virtue of my living faith in him, lives in me, as a Head of righteousness and sanctifying influence: and the life of pardon, acceptance, and holiness which I live in the body, is not by the works of the law, nor after the dictates of carnal lusts, but only by that faith which carries me out of myself in every respect to the eternal Son of God, relying entirely on him, and deriving all vital influence from him—who, in the greatness of his endearing, unparalleled, and distinguishing mercy and grace, without any desert in me, loved me, and freely gave up himself to obey the law and fulfill justice in my stead, that he might redeem me from sin and all the fearful consequences of it, and bring me to eternal life. 21. In this conduct I adhere closely to my evangelical principles, not daring ungratefully to despise or reject the gospel of grace, the love of Christ, or the free favour of God, in giving him for and to us, as they do who plead for justification by the works of the law; for if righteousness, entitling to eternal life, come by our obedience to the law in any form, then Christ's should go unto the heathen, and they unto the circumcision.

10 Only¹¹ they would that we should remember the poor; the same which I also was forward to do.

11 But¹² when Peter was come to Antioch, I withstood him to the face, because he was to be blamed.

12 For¹³ before that certain came from James, he did eat with the Gentiles: but when they were come, he withdrew and separated himself, fearing them which were of the circumcision.

13 And¹⁴ the other Jews dissembled likewise with him; insomuch that Barnabas also was carried away with their dissimulation.

14 But when I saw that they walked not uprightly, according to the truth of the gospel, I said unto Peter before them all, If thou, being a Jew, livest after the manner of Gentiles, and not as do the Jews, why compellest thou the Gentiles to live as do the Jews?

15 We¹⁵ who are Jews by nature, and not sinners of the Gentiles, 16 Knowing¹⁶ that a man is not justified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ; even we have believed in Jesus Christ, that we might be justified by the faith of Christ, and not by the works of the law: for obedience and sufferings were not necessary for our justification, and must be insufficient for it.

Ver. 1. Titus, an uncircumcised Gentile, was a practical proof, even at Jerusalem, that Paul did not consider circumcision necessary for heathen converts to Christianity, ver. 3. C.

Ver. 2. Lest, &c. Lest any might hereafter say that Paul had never communicated to the apostles that gospel which he asserted Jesus had revealed to him. C.

Ver. 4. The apostle would not persuade him to be circumcised, as an act of sinless compliance with the prejudices of the false brethren, lest that compliance might be construed into an act of necessity, and afterwards become a yoke of bondage to the Christian church. C.

Ver. 6. But from those who were of repute what did I receive? (whatsoever in rank they were, it detracts nothing from me: God accepteth no man's mere person) even they who were of repute added nothing to me. C.

Ver. 10. The poor Christians in Judea, who, on their conversion, were forsaken by their friends, refused the privileges of trade, and thrown as outcasts upon the world, without any means of support—an occurrence still frequent with Jewish converts, even in the midst of Christian churches. C.

Ver. 14. Truth of the gospel throughout this epistle signifies that master truth which declares that, as by the death of Christ the types of the law were fulfilled, so believers are made free from the yoke of their observance. C.

Ver. 16. For by the works of the law, &c. This declaration may be derived from Ps. 143. 2: 'Enter not into judgment with thy servant: for in thy sight shall no man living be justified.' C.

Ver. 17. If we are still found sinners unjustified, and in search of justification compelled to return to the Mosaic institutions, then does it not follow that Christ, instead of being the minister of righteousness and salvation, is the minister of sin and condemnation?—a dilemma from which the judaizing teachers could not escape but by either a rejection or open assertion of justification by faith in Jesus. C.

Ver. 19. I through the law (as a schoolmaster conducting me to Christ) am dead to the law; for when Christ received me I reckoned myself dead with him under the law, and so I escaped from the law, and was received under grace, Ro. 6. 6, 8, 11, 14. C.

REFLECTIONS.—With remarkable prudence must the gospel, even in its light and glory, be gradually and seasonably communicated. Persons of note in the church must sometimes be first addressed, that it may have the easier access into the prejudiced minds of others. Ministers have need to adhere firmly to their evangelical principles, and boldly to support the true dignity of their office. And it is comely when they highly esteem and dearly love one another, and are ready to assist each other, and when they are careful for the poor, even such as are prejudiced against them. Alas! how easily the best and greatest of men may be decoyed from their religious integrity if left to themselves! And dangerous are the examples of eminent saints when they take a wrong turn. No man's character, however great, can justly exempt him from

by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified.

17 But if, while we seek to be justified by Christ, we ourselves also are found sinners, ^{is} therefore Christ the minister of sin? God forbid.

18 For if I build again the things which I destroyed, I make myself a transgressor.

19 For I through the law am dead to the law, that I might live unto God.

20 I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me.⁵

21 I do not frustrate the grace of God: for if righteousness come by the law, then Christ is dead in vain.

CHAPTER III.

¹ He asketh what moved them to leave the faith, and hang upon the law? ⁶ They that believe are justified, and blessed with Abraham. ¹⁰ And this he sheweth by many reasons.

O FOOLISH^a Galatians, who hath bewitched¹ you, that ye should not obey the truth, before whose eyes Jesus Christ hath been evidently set forth² crucified among you?

2 This only would I learn of you, Received ye the Spirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith?

3 Are ye so foolish? having begun in the Spirit, are ye now made perfect by the flesh?³

4 Have ye suffered so many things in vain? if it be yet in vain.

5 He therefore that ministereth to you the Spirit, and worketh miracles among you, doeth he it by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith?

6 Even as Abraham believed God, and it was accounted⁵ to him for righteousness.⁶

7 Know ye therefore, that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham.

8 And the scripture, foreseeing⁷ that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, "In thee shall all nations be blessed.

9 So then they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham.

10 For as many as are of the works of the law⁸ are under the curse: for it is written, "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them.

11 But that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, it is evident: for, The just shall live by faith.

12 And the law is not of faith:⁹ but, "The man that doeth them shall live in them.

13 Christ hath redeemed¹ us from the curse of the law,² being made a curse³ for us: for it is written, "Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree:

14 That the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ: that we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith.

15 Brethren, I speak after the manner of men; though it be but a man's covenant,⁴ yet if it be confirmed, no man disannulleth, or addeth thereto.

16 Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ.

17 And this I say, that the covenant, that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect.

18 For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise: but God gave it to Abraham by promise.

deserved public rebuke. With care, earnestness, and accuracy ought ministers to contend for the pure doctrine of justification through Christ's blessed righteousness, without the works of the law. And happy are they who understand it in their own experience! What a heaven upon earth it is to view ourselves delivered from the law as a covenant, and to find Christ's crucifixion for us and dwelling in us issuing in a life of holiness and fellowship with God through faith! But infinitely dangerous and criminal is it to apostatize from the truth, or to attempt to render the redeeming grace of God and death of Christ unprofitable and useless.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 1. Ye thoughtless and inconsiderate Galatians, let me, with the most tender compassion to your souls, and holy zeal for the purity of the gospel, ask you, By what artful insinuations and stratagems has Satan, or your false teachers, his instruments, so far infatuated and deceived you from your adherence to the gospel doctrine of justification through active faith in Jesus Christ, who, in his painful sufferings and death, has been set before you in his ordinances in the most plain, distinct, and affecting manner? 2. Were ye made partakers of the Holy Ghost, either in his miraculous gifts or gracious inhabitation and influences, by the ministration of the law, and by your obedience to it? Or was it not by hearing and embracing the doctrine of faith in Christ alone for justification and complete salvation? 3. Since then ye certainly received him before many of you so much as heard of the law of Moses, and had set out in your Christian course under his light and direction, and in the exercise of faith in him for your justifying righteousness, how absurd is it to attempt finishing your religion in seeking justification by sinful performances, carnal observances, or anything correspondent to your carnal wisdom or pride! 4. After ye have suffered so much persecution and reproach from your Jewish neighbours for professing the doctrine of justification through his righteousness alone, without any obedience of yours to the law, ceremonial or moral, will ye, by your apostasy, prove all your professions and sufferings perfectly absurd and groundless? 5. Did Christ, by my ministrations, communicate to you your gifts and graces, or work the miracles attesting my mission and doctrine, through my preaching, or your performing the works of the law, in order to your justification before God? Or were they not rather conferred upon you by means of your hearing and embracing the doctrine by faith in Christ?—And was not this God's testimony that your justification is in no respect owing to the works of the law, but only to Christ and his righteousness? 6. Even as Abraham, that eminent pattern of believers, gave credit to and trusted upon God's promise of the Messiah; and what he believed and apprehended in the promised Saviour was imparted to him for his justifying righteousness. 7. Know therefore that all true believers in Christ, according to the promise, are, in a spiritual sense, the children of Abraham, whom God owns and accepts as such, that they may be blessed together with him. 8. And to manifest that there is but one method of justification of sinners to eternal life, the Holy Ghost, who knew the whole purpose of God relative to the Gentiles, intimated to Abraham, long before either circumcision or any Mosaic ceremonies were instituted, that, through the obedience and sufferings of his seed, the Messiah, all nations, Jews or Gentiles, should be justified and blessed with all spiritual blessings. 9. From whence it is evident that all men, of whatever nation or rank they be, who are partakers of a true and lively faith in Christ, and seek justification on his account, are blessed with the same blessings, and on the same foundation of active righteousness, as Abraham, that celebrated believer and friend of God. 10. And that this cannot be on account of their personal obedience to the law is evident; for all men being sinners, as many of them as remain under the covenant of works, and seek justification by their own righteousness, are fixed under the curse of God, who has expressly declared every person of mankind by law condemned to everlasting punishment who does not personally, universally, perfectly, and perpetually, in thought, word, and deed, bear, observe, and perform whatever is demanded by his law. 11. And that no man can be justified by his own personal obedience to this law as a covenant is further evident from God's

CHAPTER IV.

1 We were under the law till Christ came, as the heir is under his guardian till he be of age. 5 But Christ freed us from the law: 7 therefore we are servants no longer to it. 14 He remembereth their good-will to him, and his to them, 22 and sheweth that we are the sons of Abraham by the free woman.

NOW I say, That the heir, as long as he is a child, differeth nothing from a servant, though he be lord of all;

2 But is under tutors and governors until the time appointed of the father.

3 Even so we, ¹when we were children, were in bondage under the elements² of the world:

4 But when ¹the fulness of the time was come, ²God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law,

appointment of another method of justification, in his declaring that the man who becomes righteous by faith enters and may continue in a state of life and salvation, and by means of faith exercised in Christ, lives in favour, and fellowship with, and conformity to God here and hereafter. 12. Now it is certain that the method of justification prescribed by the law is not of faith, but by personal, perfect, and perpetual obedience to the whole of its demands. 13. Therefore, according to these terms, none can procure himself justification, or even freedom from the condemnatory sentence of the law; but Christ, in his infinite love, has redeemed us out of the hands of offended justice, and from all the condemnation and misery incurred by our sins, by taking them upon himself, and bearing them in our stead, particularly while he hung on the cross as a most loving sufferer, forsaken almost, and devoted to death. 14. And this he did that, instead of the curse being executed upon us according to our deserts, we Gentiles might in him be blessed with the free justification and other spiritual blessings conferred upon and promised to Abraham and his spiritual seed; and, as well as the Jews, receive, through faith in him, a plentiful communication of the Holy Ghost, as the pledge, token, and earnest of our eternal inheritance. 15. To illustrate this point by a common and familiar similitude, we know, from the very nature of a covenant of promise like that made with Abraham, that, if it be but an engagement made by short-sighted and changeable men, yet, if it be duly ratified, signed, and sealed, none can either disannul, alter, or add to it. 16. Now to Abraham and to his spiritual seed were the promises made by the all-knowing and unchangeable God, who cannot lie; and to show that these were directed to one particular sort of seed, God did not use therein the term SEEDS, as if all his posterity, natural and spiritual, had been meant; but SEED, by which he signified his spiritual seed, and primarily Christ their saving Head. 17. Now this covenant being made with and relating to Christ, to be fulfilled and confirmed in his incarnation, obedience, and death, and being confirmed by the repeated promise and oath of an unchangeable God, and by the seal of circumcision,—the law of Moses, which was not given till about 430 years after, cannot, in any consistency with the wisdom or faithfulness of God, make void or disannul it, in order to introduce another method of justification and salvation. 18. And this plainly manifests that a right or title to eternal life cannot be obtained by the works of the law, but only by faith in Christ; for if a title to the heavenly inheritance typified by the promised earthly Canaan could be obtained by our obedience to the law, it could not be the matter of a free promise—grace and works being in this view quite eversive the one of the other; but it is manifest that God gave it to Abraham and his seed, not through the law, but by an absolutely gracious and free promise, through the righteousness of faith, that it might be free to all men. 19. And the law of Moses was annexed to this gracious promise, not to bring in a new method of justification, but to be a mean of restraining sin and convincing men of their pollution and danger, and of their absolute need of full justification in Christ, in whom Jews and Gentiles should be united, and to cause them to look for him, the promised one, as the end of the law, for righteousness to every one that believeth. Nor was even this law, like the promise to Abraham and his seed, given immediately by God himself, but was conveyed by the ministry of angels into the hand of Moses, as the typical mediator of the Israelites, to represent their absolute need of the promised Messiah, effectually to mediate between God and them. 20. Now, a mediator is one that interposes between two parties, and does not merely transact for any one, to the exclusion of the other; but God, who delivered the law to the Israelites, and who is immutably faithful to his promise, was one party; and Gentiles as well as Jews were concerned in that antecedent, free, and absolute promise made to Abraham. 21. It is therefore absolutely impossible that the law of Moses could, in the intention of God, be opposite to the design of the gospel promise made to Abraham and his spiritual seed, or that ever God should intend to justify men by the one as well as by the other; for if any law had or could have been given by obedience to which men in their fallen condition could have been entitled to eternal life, it is certain God would have spared his Son, that singularly eminent seed of Abraham, and righteousness for justification to eternal life should have consisted in men's own conformity to that law. 22. But, on the contrary, the writings of the Old Testament have, in their general tenor, pronounced all men, Jews and Gentiles, sinners shut up under a sentence of condemnation, and absolutely incapable of making atonement for their past offences, or rendering themselves acceptable to God by any obedience of their own—that none having any ground to seek or expect justification by their own works, the free promise of pardon, life, and salvation, through faith in Christ, might be graciously fulfilled in every believer. 23. But as we are naturally strangers and enemies to this important truth, and it was anciently intimated in an obscure manner, so, till Christ, the object of faith, and the doctrine of salvation through faith in him, came to be fully manifested in the gospel, and till we were brought to believe in him, even those of us who were educated in the Jewish religion, though preserved from heathenish idolatries by the law of Moses, were held, like captives and prisoners, under its commanding, condemning, and convincing power, and shut up on every side, that we might be ready to receive Christ as revealed in the gospel with more abundant manifestation of light and grace. 24. We ought therefore to consider the moral law as a covenant, and the ceremonial law as a schoolmaster, intended to direct, lead, and scourge us to Jesus Christ, that, renouncing all dependence on our own good works for justification, we might seek it alone through faith in his meritorious obedience and sacrifice. 25. But now under the gospel, when Christ, the object of faith, and the doctrine of justification by faith in him, are fully manifested, and we are brought to believe in him, we are no longer, like children, in a state of ignorance, weakness, and servile fear, under either the moral law as a covenant or the ceremonial dispensation. 26. But all of you, Gentiles as well as Jews, who have believed in Christ alone for justification, according to the tenor of the gospel, are rendered adult children of God, and are admitted to higher privileges in the anointed Saviour, who has come in the flesh, and obtained eternal redemption for you. 27. For as many of you as have been baptized in the name, and into the faith, profession, and obedience of Jesus Christ, and, answerable to the signification of baptism, have been made partakers of spiritual union and communion with him, have not only in profession, but by faith, put on Jesus Christ as the Lord your righteousness and sanctification; and hence have no need of circumcision to recommend you to God's favour, or manifest you his children. 28. There is now, under the gospel, no distinction of nations, ranks, or sexes, with respect to spiritual privileges or blessings; but by the enlargement of God's grace all true believers are equally members of Christ's mystical body, and he is equally their Head for all spiritual and saving purposes. Circumcision therefore, which was peculiar to males, and distinguished Jews from Gentiles, is of no further use in the church. 29. And if ye be really united to Christ, and interested in and devoted to him, ye, though uncircumcised, are the true children of Abraham, and heirs of all new-covenant blessings, according to the promise made to him and his spiritual seed.

Ver. 20. God is one. Winer affirms that there are 250 different interpretations of this difficult passage. But in this difficulty the volume of revelation resembles the volume of nature, having many things plain to the weakest capacity, but many things 'hard to be understood,' even by the most learned. The passage may be paraphrased as follows:—A mediator in a covenant is not the representative of one party only. Moses therefore, as mediator of the Sinai covenant, did not represent Israel alone, but God also; for as there was a mediator, God must have been one of the parties to that covenant. But as God was one of the parties, and as he changeth not, therefore the covenant of doing and living made at Sinai could not, at the end of 430 years after,

6 And because ye are sons, *God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father.

7 Wherefore thou art no more a servant, but a son; and if a son, then an heir of God through Christ.²

8 Howbeit then, when ye knew not God, ye did service unto them which by nature are no gods.

9 But now, after that ye have known God, change, abrogate, or disannul that covenant of promise to believers which he had confirmed in Christ, the Mediator between God as the one party, and Abraham and the Gentiles (believing Christ) as the other, 1 Ti. 2. 5; Jn. 10. 29; 17. 2, 6, 24. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Great is the folly of turning away from Jesus Christ and the doctrine of his blessed righteousness to rest on our own works for justification before God; and especially after clear manifestation of him and his truth, and suffering for his sake. It renders him and all his fulness, yea, all our profession of him, or sufferings on his account, altogether unprofitable; and is contrary to the oracles of God, and the observation and experience of every believer. But infinite is the mercy that when God's law condemned us to eternal misery for the very least transgression, Jesus obeyed the law in our stead, that we might receive the promise and inheritance of eternal life; and that, while the law excludes us from life on account of our sin, the gospel brings relief, and offers to us an almighty and all-sufficient Saviour. The law now cannot hinder, but is subservient to our redemption through him. Yea, Moses and all the ancient types now appear figures of our incarnate Redeemer; and we Gentiles, as well as Jews, have an equal access to him and to his church, and to all the blessings of the new kingdom. Be not slack, my soul, to possess what the Lord thy God giveth thee.

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 1, 2. Now, to illustrate the preference of the gospel dispensation to the legal by a familiar similitude, ye know that the heir of a rich estate, during his minority, has no more liberty of enjoying the inheritance to which he has a full right than if he were a mere servant, but is under the direction and discipline of masters to educate him, and the government of guardians and tutors, and of trustees, to manage his estate for him, that he may be fitted to enter upon the possession of it at the time appointed by his father. 3. In like manner we who are Jewish believers, during the infant state of the legal dispensation, were, like minors, subjected to its servile and obscure discipline, enslaved by its terrors, and tied down to its typical observances, which consisted of dim and obscure resemblances taken from worldly things, and which were in their nature carnal and earthly, little calculated to carry our thoughts, hopes, or affections beyond the things of this world to our spiritual and eternal inheritance. 4. But when the time appointed in his purpose, and marked in his promises and predictions, was arrived—the time when men's degeneracy and wickedness, which were come to the greatest height, and their extensive expectations, rendered the superaboundings of mercy and a reformation peculiarly necessary—God, in the riches of his infinite wisdom and grace, sent forth his own eternal pre-existent Son by special manifestation into our world, that he might, in a marvellous manner, assume our nature into a personal union with his own divine nature, being conceived and born of the Virgin Mary; and that he, as God-man, might be placed under the precept of the law as a covenant of works, which we had broken, and under its curse and penalty, which we had incurred; 5. That, by his obedience and sufferings, he might fully meet all its demands, and perfectly deliver us from it as a covenant in its commanding and condemning power, and even from the rigorous ceremonial dispensation, and render us abundant partakers of all the privileges of the gospel state which pertain to the adult children of God.—6. And in consequence of his graciously loving you, Jews or Gentiles, he calls you to a state of sonship, and sends forth his Holy Spirit, which proceeds from and is communicated by his Son, to dwell in your souls with far richer abundance of gifts and graces than were ordinarily vouchsafed under the Mosaic dispensation, to form you into the temper of his children, and bear witness with your spirits that ye are such; and to give you a humble liberty and familiar boldness in your dealings with himself, and enable you to claim and call upon him, and stand affected towards him, with faith, love, desire, delight, reverence, filial obedience, and holy confidence in his care and kindness, and with zeal for his honour as your heavenly Father. 7. Whoever of you therefore truly believe in Christ are no longer, as servants, kept at a distance, and subjected to severe discipline; but, as children of riper age, are entered on a large possession of your inheritance, as an earnest of your quickly enjoying the full riches and glory thereof; yea, are heirs of the all-sufficient God himself as your portion, in the right, and for the sake of, and together with Jesus Christ, who, as his eternal Son, is heir of all things.—Why then should ye abandon these high and sure privileges to seek happiness by your works of obedience to the law as a covenant? 8–11. Since God, in his infinite mercy, pitied you while ye were plunged in the grossest ignorance and most shocking idolatries, slavishly worshipping stocks and stones, or other creatures real or imaginary, even the most base or abominable, instead of the true God, and by the light and power of his gospel found you out, brought you to the knowledge of himself through Jesus Christ, owned you as his, and rendered you accepted in the Beloved, what must be your infatuation and ingratitude if ye turn from this light and grace of the gospel, and all its holy and delightful liberties and honours, to a state of servile subjection to the dark hints and severe injunctions of the Mosaic law, which are utterly insufficient to make your peace with God, purge your conscience from guilt, secure you from wrath, procure your acceptance to life, or to enrich you with any spiritual knowledge, grace, or comfort? Has God delivered you from heathen bondage, that ye who had originally no attachment to the Jewish ceremonies should, in contempt of Christ's fulfilment of them, and of the gospel deliverance from them, be fond of such servitude, and be zealous to observe their sacred seasons and other rites, in order to render you accepted with God? Truly, when I think on this your conduct, I am greatly afraid that all the pains I took to acquaint you with and persuade you to embrace the gospel, have been lost upon most of you, and will only serve as an occasion to enhance your guilt and increase your eternal misery. 12. Let me therefore earnestly beseech you, my beloved brethren, by everything serious, solemn, or endearing, to abide in the same sentiments relative to the justification of a sinner before God which I, who was once as proud and obstinate a legalist as any of you, now heartily embrace, and exercise the same affection towards me as I do towards you; for I am ready to bear with you in everything consistent with the truth of the gospel and the welfare of your souls; and indeed I have no reason to disregard you, as ye never injured me; or, if ye did, I have heartily forgiven it. 13, 14. Such, ye know, was my affection to you, that, with the utmost concern for your salvation, under great difficulties, sufferings, reproaches, and much bodily weakness and despicable appearances, I laboured in explaining and recommending to you the gospel of Christ; and such was your affection to me, that, notwithstanding these infirmities and humbling circumstances, ye neither slighted my person nor rejected my doctrine, but entertained and embraced it, and me for its sake, with readiness and pleasure, as an ambassador of Christ, yea, as if I had been a holy angel sent down from heaven, or even the Messiah himself. 15, 16. Where are now those expressions of gratitude to me for my labours; or that happiness ye then professed to have and hope for in my ministrations? For such was your fervour of love and joy, that, if it could have been of any advantage to me, ye would have gladly undergone the most painful severities and inconveniences for my sake. Why then are ye now giving up those very doctrines which ye then so much esteemed? Why are ye become so cool in your affection to me, who still affectionately regard you? I appeal to your consciences if ye ought to hold me as your enemy because I have plainly and faithfully maintained the truth and importance of gospel doctrines, and warned you of your infinite danger in mixing the works of the law with faith in Christ for your justification. 17. As for these your new teachers who pretend so great concern for your welfare, they act with no Christian candour or honour, but seek to decoy you from all regard to me or my apostolic authority, in order that ye may blindly submit to them, and bestow all your esteem, honour, and applause upon them. 18. Remember therefore that it is a very beautiful and laudable temper to be always zealously and uniformly attached to that which is truly worthy and important, and not merely when I am among you. 19. My dear but weak children in the faith, whom I thought I had instrumentally begotten to Christ through the gospel, my soul is still as earnestly concerned that the pure doctrines of the gospel, and Jesus Christ therein, as made of God to you wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption, may be really fixed in your minds and hearts, as ever I was to have you converted from your heathenish ignorance and idolatry. 20. Earnestly I wish that I were but present with you to confirm the truth, to answer your objections and scruples by word of mouth, and to vary my discourse into encouragement or rebuke as the occasions should require; and gladly should I find ground to encourage you; for truly I now greatly suspect that many of you have never been really converted to Christ, and may at length utterly apostatize from his truth and ways. 21. But I earnestly beg that ye who seem so fond of being under the law for justification by your own obedience, would seriously tell me, as before the judgment-seat of Christ, if ever ye have truly considered what the law demands, or what it denounces against the least transgression; or what a wide difference even these writings of Moses mark out between those that seek justification by their own works and those who seek it only by faith in Christ. 22, 23. For there it is recorded that Abraham, the friend of God, had two sons who were typical of different dispensations and different sorts of persons—the one Ishmael, who was born by Hagar his bond-slave, according to the common law of generation, and the other Isaac, by Sarah, his proper wife, in an extraordinary and miraculous manner, at an unexpected time of life, and as an accomplishment of God's free promise.—24, 25. Now these things were intended by God as figurative representations of the miserable condition of those who are under the law as a covenant of works, and of the happiness of those who are under the covenant of grace. Hagar represented the covenant made between God and the Israelites at Sinai, which, by its terrible manner of delivery, strictness of precepts, and severity of curses, tended to beget a servile temper of spirit, and subjected its votaries to everlasting destruction if left without the gospel relief promised to Abraham: and she and her son, cast out from Abraham's family, represented the Jews and other legalists abandoned by God for their unbelief, and left in bondage to Satan and their lusts. 26, 27. But the gospel church of true believers in Christ, which is of a heavenly, original nature and tendency, and highly privileged with the unnumbered liberties and ordinances of which we are born to Christ, was typified by Sarah and her son; for, in allusion to Sarah and Hagar, the prophet Isaiah foretold that the Gentile nations, after being long abandoned by God to heathenism, should at last, with great joy, afford more chilliberty; only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another.

14 For all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.

15 But^a if ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another.

16 This I say then, "Walk in the Spirit,⁸ and ye shall not fulfil⁹ the lust of the flesh.

17 For^a the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh: and these are contrary the one to the other: so that ye cannot do the things that ye would.

18 But^a if ye be led by the Spirit,¹ ye are not under the law.

19 Now^a the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these; Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness,

20 Idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, as well as concern for the welfare and safety of your own souls, make you to avoid all further encumbrance and oppression from the servile yoke of the law or its ceremonies. 2. For, as an inspired apostle of Christ, I, who it seems am said to preach up circumcision, solemnly assure you that, if ye receive circumcision as a thing necessary to your acceptance with God, nothing that Christ has done or suffered, or which the gospel reveals, will be of any saving advantage to you. 3. I now repeat what I have always maintained in my ministrations, with the greatest earnestness, as a most convincing truth, to every man, Jew or Gentile, who is circumcised with this view, that he is thereby obliged, under pain of eternal damnation, perfectly, without the least failure, to satisfy the whole demands of the divine law as a broken covenant of works. 4. The person, righteousness, gospel, and Spirit of Christ, will avail you nothing, who, renouncing him, seek justification before God, in whole or in part, by your own works, and thus practically renounce the gospel, and the free justification and salvation therein bequeathed. 5. For through the light and influence of the gospel, we believers, Jews or Gentiles, earnestly desire and expect, and patiently look and wait for, everlasting life, that great object of our hope, as a thing we are entitled to, and shall partake of, not for any righteousness of our own, but because of the blessed righteousness of Christ, received by faith. 6. For with respect to our union with Christ, and justification through him, neither circumcision nor other ceremonial observances, nor the want of them, do in the least promote or confirm our happiness; but we must have a true faith, receiving and resting upon Christ alone for salvation as offered in the gospel, and working in a sincere and ardent love to his person, offices, relations, Father, Spirit, Word, ordinances, ways, and people.—7. Ye, my brethren, for a time appeared cordially to believe, and earnestly to profess, this doctrine of justification through Jesus' righteousness alone. Think seriously then what has turned you aside from your faith in, and your obedient regard to, the authority of Christ, in this leading truth of the gospel, on which all the rest depend. 8. Certain it is that your present judaizing sentiments, so directly contrary to the very foundation of the gospel, are in no respect derived from God, who called you to the knowledge of Christ, and the way of salvation through him alone; nor from me, who, as his instrument, preached the very contrary to you. 9. Some corrupt influence from Satan and his instruments must then have insinuated itself among you, which, unless timely prevented, will gradually infect your whole church and whole scheme of principles. 10. Notwithstanding, therefore, my great fears about you, I would fain hope that, upon your serious consideration of what I now write, ye will perceive your danger, and the necessity of making a full and speedy stand for the truth, and of censuring the principal instruments of your present perplexity and confusion: and sure I am, that, except they repent, the righteous and terrible judgments of God will overtake them. 11. And as for myself, the furious persecution which I everywhere patiently suffer from the bigoted Jews, manifests that I never preach up circumcision as necessary to salvation, or induce any Gentile believers to receive it: for could I agree to superadd the works of the law to the merits of Christ, the chief ground of their offence at the doctrine of salvation by a crucified Saviour, and of their persecution of me for preaching it, would naturally cease. 12. I heartily wish that these new teachers, who have so grievously perplexed and disturbed you, and subverted the faith of some of you, were solemnly excommunicated from all fellowship with the church and delivered over to Satan; or that God, in his own way, would restrain them from bringing any further reproach upon his name, church, and gospel.—13. And as ye, my Christian brethren, have been by the gospel called to a glorious freedom from ceremonial observances, and from the law as a broken covenant of works, and to a noble liberty of spirit in fellowship with God as our gracious Father in Christ, abide by it as a thing more valuable than your lives, and remember to improve it, not as an encouragement to pride, passion, sensuality, or other sinful corruptions, but as an additional obligation to the most perfect obedience to the whole law of God as a rule of life, and in all kind and brotherly affection, and friendly offices one to another. 14. For all the commands of the second table, relative to the mutual duties of life, to chastity, honesty, truth, contentment, and charity, are fulfilled in loving your neighbours, as rational creatures and Christians, with such sincere and active affection as ye owe to yourselves. 15. But if, in defiance of this great commandment, ye, like ravenous beasts, rather than men or Christians, fight and quarrel, reproach and abuse one another, ye have reason to fear that the God of peace and love will abandon you to your own lusts, that, by mutual heats and feuds, ye may ruin one another in your church state, privileges, and best interests.—16. To prevent these and other dreadful irruptions of your indwelling corruption, I charge you, in the name of Christ, to labour always, and by all means to live and act towards God and men under the influence of his good Spirit, and of that supernatural habit or principle of grace and holiness which he has produced in your heart; which seeks to prevent your yielding up yourselves to the inclinations and practices of sinful lusts. 17. For, in regenerate persons, the remains of indwelling corruption, on the one hand, struggle against and labour to suppress this inward gracious principle and all its holy actings, and even to expel the Holy Ghost from the heart;—and, on the other hand, the spiritual habit or vital principle of grace wrought in them by the Holy Ghost, as living and acting under his direction and assistance, earnestly desires and labours to effect the entire destruction of sin. And these two inward principles of sinfulness and grace being directly opposite in their nature, tendency, and actings, ye can neither commit sin with the full and deliberate consent of your heart, nor perform duties with perfect freedom, constancy, and fervour. 18. But if, under the direction and influence of the Spirit of God, according to the rule of his Word and the inclination of a blessed principle of grace, ye, in the habitual frame of your hearts and course of your lives, be led from the ways of sin into the paths of righteousness, it is manifest that ye cannot be under the law as a covenant of works, the Spirit being received only by means of the gospel; 19.—21. Nor are these principles of inward sinfulness and grace more contrary than the tempers and practices which proceed from them. Those which proceed from the carnal tendency of nature are manifestly odious and wicked; such as whoredom in thought, word, or deed, whether between married or single persons, with all lewd, immodest, and wanton inclinations and behaviour; all idolatrous worshipping of false gods, or by images; all enchantments, divinations, magic, and pretended or real intimacy with evil spirits; all ill-will towards God or men; litigious contentions, bitter zeal and rancour; a swelling and revengeful temper; scoldings, wranglings, and provocations to evil; a riotous and turbulent behaviour; fundamental errors obstinately persisted in; uneasy envyings at the gifts, graces, honours, or prosperity of others; malicious and wilful attempts to take away men's lives without just cause; excessive drinking of liquors; gluttonous feasting, ranting, and raving; with many others of the like nature, which, as I formerly assured you, will, if persisted in, effectually exclude you from all fellowship with God here or hereafter. 22, 23. But in opposition to these detestable and damning works of the flesh, the effects produced by the blessed principle of divine life under the supernatural influence of the Holy Ghost, pleasing to God, and profitable to ourselves, are—universal love to God, to Christ, his words, ordinances, and people, and to our fellow-creatures; rejoicing in God through Christ, and in the happiness of our neighbours; peace of conscience, flowing from peace with God through Jesus' blood, and issuing in a peaceful temper towards our fellow Christians and creatures; a patient bearing of affronts, injuries, and offences; an affable and courteous disposition and carriage towards all with whom we have to do; a benevolent temper and beneficent practice; fidelity to every trust committed to or engagement made by us, flowing from faith in Christ, and in God through him; a meek, calm, and quiet frame of spirit; a regular moderation of our passions and appetites in meats, drinks, pleasures, or the like. Against such virtues, and the persons endowed with them, there is no law to condemn them. 24. And all they who truly belong to Christ through a living faith in him, united with, interested in, and devoted to him, are obliged earnestly to endeavour, and have been actually enabled by his Spirit, in virtue of his crucifixion, and in conformity to him therein, gradually to subdue the power and strength of indwelling sinfulness that it may not reign in their mortal body, and to break the force of their base and defiling sinfulness whether of the flesh or mind. 25. And if we are indeed quickened and made alive to God by the power of the Holy Ghost, let it be our daily and earnest study, 21 Envyings, murders, drunkenness, revelings, and such like: of the which I tell you before, as I have also told you in time past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God.

22 But ^bthe fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith,² 23 Meekness, temperance:³ against^c such there is no law.

24 And^d they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections^d and lusts.

25 If^e we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit.

26 Let^f us not be desirous of vain-glory, provoking one another, envying one another.

CHAPTER VI.

under his direction and influence, to act up to our Christian character, obligations, and advantages, by departing from all iniquity and walking in all holy conversation and godliness. 26. And as we are indebted to him for all the good that is in us, let none of us overrate our own endowments or performances, or aim at making a vainglorious show of them. Let us never, by our pride, passion, or self-seeking, provoke one another to angry resentments, nor stir up envious passions in or against each other.

Ver. 5. Through the Spirit. Middleton and Bloomfield render πνευματικῶς, 'spiritually,' though the earlier expositors understood it of the Holy Spirit. The want of the article prefixed is the ground for the proposed rendering; and reference is made to ch. 3: 3; 5: 16, 18, 25. A careful examination and comparison of all the passages where πνευματικῶς occurs without the article or an epithet, seem to confirm this interpretation.—The hope of righteousness by faith. Not 'the hope of hereafter obtaining righteousness by faith'—for that the believer already possesses, Ro. 3: 22—but 'the hope of glory,' which those who are 'justified by faith' in full assurance wait for. Ro. 5: 1, 2; He. 6: 11. C.

Ver. 19. The grouping of those vices is fourfold: (1) Sins of lust (ver. 19, four). (2) Sins of impiety and superstition (ver. 20, two)—to wit, idolatry and witchcraft. (3) Sins of temper (ver. 20, 21, nine). (4) Sins of appetite and indulgence (ver. 21, two)—'drunkenness and revellings' being placed last, as if in them the apostle would practically lay bare the root of all the preceding evils. Paley relates an apologue in which Satan is represented as proposing his gifts to one if he would commit murder, incest, or get drunk. He preferred getting drunk; and then committed the horrible crimes from which in sobriety he had recoiled. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Blessed are the liberties which saints, especially under the gospel, have in and through Christ! and in the most delightful manner they, by faith, live in love, and hope for glory. But it is dangerous to condemn, reject, or forsake these liberties; and infinitely dangerous to turn aside from the true doctrine of justification by free grace through the blessed righteousness of Christ, received by faith, after we have professed and seemingly believed it. It is to lose all benefit by Christ, and to bind ourselves to the impossible condition of keeping the whole law. No persecution, no seduction, ought ever to draw us into this ruinous snare. And seducers to such wickedness should be esteemed as plagues of the church, and quickly cut off from her fellowship.—True Christians should carefully avoid everything tending to strife and contention, which are so sinful and ruinous. And though believers be perfectly freed from the moral law as a covenant, they continue still, and to eternity, under it as a binding rule of conversation. Yea, if we be Christ's, we must evidence it by our earnest mortification of inward lusts; and by avoiding and practically testifying against outward abominations. But in order to maintain the implanted principles of grace, or bring forth the fruits thereof in a holy life, we must live under the almighty and gracious influence of the Holy Ghost.

CHAPTER VI. Ver. 1. According to the rule of Christian love already mentioned, if any one among you, through ignorance, unwatchfulness, human frailty, plausible temptations, or enticing examples, fall into an erroneous notion or immoral act, I beseech those of you who are more advanced and confirmed in knowledge and grace, to do your utmost in a meek, patient, and tender manner, for convincing and reclaiming him by repentance, and reducing him to his proper place in the mystical body of Christ:—and to induce you hereto, ponder seriously your own weakness and sinfulness, and the danger of meeting with and falling before temptations yourselves; and be not therefore too severe upon others. 2. Instead of imposing heavy yokes on the one hand, or refusing any offices of kindness on the other, sympathize with, pray for, and assist one another; and, by lightening and relieving one another under your burdens, grievances, trials, and exercises, practise Christ's great commandment of loving your neighbours as yourselves. 3. For if any of you have high thoughts of your own abilities to resist temptations and to do great things in religion, and so despise and insult others, ye dreadfully deceive your own souls. 4. But to prevent your being forward to judge and censure others and deceive yourselves, let every one of you narrowly search and try his own principles, motives, ends, temper, and behaviour; and if they be thus found correspondent to the truth of the gospel, and your profession of it, ye will have great matter of humble joy in what God has wrought in you, and enabled you to do, and on account of the testimony which the Holy Ghost and your own consciences bear to your sincerity, and God's acceptance of you through Christ; and you need not then regard the applause of others, your number of proselytes, or that your character is more exalted than that of others. 5. For at the judgment-seat of Christ every man will be adjudged to eternal happiness or misery, not according to what he thinks of himself, or what he is in comparison of others,—but according to what he really is in heart and life before God.—6. And as a standing ministry is necessary for your instruction and establishment in the truths and paths of the gospel, let 4 But ^alet every man prove his own work, and then shall he ^ahave rejoicing in himself alone, and not in another.

5 For ^aevery man shall bear his own ^bburden.

6 Let^c him that is taught in the word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things.

7 Be^d not deceived; God is not mocked: ^efor whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.

8 For ^fhe that soweth to his flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting.

9 And ^glet us not be weary in well-doing: for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not.

10 As^h we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, ⁱespecially unto them who are of the household of faith.

11 Ye see how large a letter I have written unto you with mine own hand.

12 As many as desire to make a ^jfair show in the flesh, they constrain you to be circumcised; only lest they should suffer persecution for the cross of Christ.

13 For ^kneither they themselves who are circumcised keep the law; but desire to have you circumcised, that they may glory in your flesh.

every church-member who receives these spiritual instructions, cheerfully and liberally contribute of his worldly substance for the comfortable maintenance of his instructor, who spends his time and strength in preaching the gospel to him, and thus brings him blessings far better than anything temporal. 7. Never let a covetous temper or plausible suggestion seduce you from the faithful performance of this duty. God, who searches your hearts, and has a right to your obedience, will not suffer himself to be imposed on, or any of his commandments contemned. But (to allude to the crops of husbandmen and gardeners) your reward at his hand shall be according to the nature, quality, and extent of your work. 8. He who uses his temporal enjoyments, or spends his time and strength with selfish and corrupt views, shall have for his reward perishing things here and eternal destruction hereafter; but he who, through the power of God's grace on and in his heart, employs his substance and talents for promoting spiritual purposes, in subserviency to the work and design of the Holy Ghost, shall reap glorious fruits of holiness in this world, and eternal life as the free gift of God through Christ in the next. 9. Animated by these comfortable views, let us never grow remiss and negligent, far less cease from doing good to others by every mean in our power; for if not in this life, we shall in the next be rewarded with plentiful blessings, if we do not, through unbelief and discouragement, covetousness, impatience, or the like, desist from our duty as an irksome task. 10. While therefore God gives us abilities and proper opportunities, let us exercise ourselves in works of beneficence towards the necessitous, and all our fellow-creatures, especially to such as, in the judgment of charity, have cordially embraced the gospel of Christ and become his children and servants. 11. I hope ye will seriously ponder those things which I have written to you in this affectionate letter, and that not by an amanuensis, as ordinarily, but with my own hand. 12. And, believe me, your new preachers who attempt to recommend themselves by external flourishes of profession or zealous observation of carnal ceremonies, are not actuated in urging you to be circumcised by any true love to you, or concern for your salvation, but merely desire that they may escape that persecution and outrage from the unbelieving Jews to which the preaching of a full justification through Christ's imparted righteousness would expose them. 13. For, notwithstanding their being circumcised themselves, and rule, peace be on them, and mercy, and upon the Israel of God.

17 From henceforth let no man trouble me; for I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus.

18 Brethren, the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit. Amen.

¶ Unto the Galatians, written from Rome.⁷

under an obligation thereby established to keep the whole law, they are not really careful to keep that law at all, but they would have you circumcised that they might boast of you as their proselytes, and thereby recommend themselves to the favour of the unbelieving Jews. 14. But God forbid that I should ever be ambitious of human applause, or boast of, or rely on, anything as the ground of my acceptance with God, except it be the atoning sacrifice of our crucified Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, by faith in, and virtue derived from, which and whom, I am in conformity to him, dead to all the allurements, interests, and honours of this world, and to all its terrors, persecutions, and reproaches, so as to be little moved by the one or the other; and on account of my preaching of which, as the alone ground of justification and eternal life, the men of this world condemn me, and would gladly crucify me. 15. For, with regard to union with Christ, and justification to life through faith in him, circumcision, and all such external distinctions, are now under the gospel entirely useless. The only thing that can effectually prove our interest in him is the universal and almighty renovation of our heart and life, after the image of God, in knowledge, righteousness, and true holiness.—16. And to all those professed Christians, Jews or Gentiles, who, according to the directions I have given, rely on the righteousness of Christ alone for justification, and improve in a steadfast maintenance of gospel liberties, and study of gospel holiness—and to all those spiritual Israelites who have accepted Christ by faith—I earnestly wish and declare peace with God, their consciences, and one another, and all other mercies and blessings of the new kingdom. 17. Let no one give me any further trouble with injurious reproaches and angry quarrels about circumcision and other observances of the law: the persecutions which I have already endured, and of which I retain the marks in my body, are sufficient proofs of my being Christ's devoted servant, and faithful preacher of justification through his blood. 18. Finally, brethren, my hearty prayer to our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ is, that his free love and favour, with all its blessed manifestations, fruits, and effects, may plentifully abound towards you, and sensibly rest on your souls, to lead you in the way of faith, comfort, and holiness, till ye arrive at the complete possession of eternal life.

Ver. 4. Rejoicing in himself—on account of what grace has wrought.—Not in another, upon whose opinion or applause grace has rendered him independent. C.

Ver. 5. His own burden. Being judged according to his work. C.

Ver. 10. Let us do good unto all men. Even Julian the Apostate, while reviling the Christians, was compelled to leave his testimony to that unrestricted spirit of charity by which they were actuated both towards friends and strangers (As cited by Wetstein.) C.

Ver. 11. The apostle was accustomed to dictate his letters to amanuensis—this he wrote with his own. And why he notices the circumstance it is not easy to conjecture, perhaps impossible to discover. Some suppose it is noted as an evidence of special affection; but what peculiar evidence it could furnish is not very apparent. Is it not rather intended to intimate that he felt so great anxiety for their Christian character that he hoped to wean them from their errors without any one being made acquainted with his rebukes either to individuals or the churches? C.—This verse must be literally rendered as follows: 'Ye see in how large characters (or letters) I have written to you with my own hand.' Two things are here indicated: (1) That the epistle was written in letters of an unusually large size, probably on account of the defective sight of the apostle. (2) That it was unusual for the apostle to write himself, as he generally employed an amanuensis. Whether he wrote with his own hand as a special mark of favour, or because of the absence of his amanuensis, cannot now be ascertained. P.

Ver. 17. The marks of the Lord Jesus. The scourings, wounds, and stoning he had endured, after the example and for the love of Jesus, Ac. 20. 23; 2 Co. 4. 10; 11. 23, 24. C.

REFLECTIONS.—With meekness, humility, and compassionate sympathy, ought Christians of superior attainments to recover their offending brethren. A sense of their own sinfulness, weakness, and readiness to slip, should induce them to it. And a regard to their deliverance from the law as a covenant, and the law of ceremonies, and their being still under Christ's law of liberty and love, should constantly animate them to it.—It is dreadful to deceive our souls through self-conceit and hypocritical mocking of that God who neither will nor can be imposed upon. But it is delightful to have our consciences attesting us as approved of God in Christ; and to be enabled to improve our worldly substance in acts of piety and charity. It is highly necessary to be active and exact in our conduct, when our eternal happiness or misery is so closely connected with it; and very unprofitable to make fair shows of religion while we remain ignorant of its power; or while, to shun persecution, we are afraid or ashamed to own a crucified Christ, and the doctrine of salvation through faith only. It is Christ crucified in whom we must boast, and from whom we must derive all grace to wean us from worldly things. And no profession, denomination, or external privilege will avail to our salvation unless our hearts be renewed and planted with a living principle of grace. Nor must we expect spiritual or eternal happiness unless we walk according to the gospel in our dealings with God and men, and are ready to suffer for the doctrines of Christ which we profess.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS.

No one can attentively read and consider the Epistle to the Galatians without discovering the early germs of Popery budding, nay springing, into vigorous and almost irrepressible growth, even under the eye of apostolic inspection, and, as it were, in defiance of the apostolic pruning-knife. Popery does not consist in the rejection of the great fundamental doctrines of Christianity. On the contrary, it retains most of them, but at the same time so overlays them, as to render them nearly or altogether invisible; so loads them with ceremonial ornament, as to disfigure or destroy their beauty; and so combines them with extraneous and traditional inventions, as literally to render them of 'none effect.'—The two great errors which the apostle labours to correct among the Galatians were the adoption of Jewish rites as essential to salvation, and the combining of human merit with the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ. In both these propensities they have been followed by Popery. One high-priest—one pope—one family succession—one traditional succession—holy vestments—altars—lamps—candles—washings—sprinklings—attitudes. These bear such resemblance to each other, that it is sometimes difficult to distinguish between them. But injurious to spiritual feeling and vital godliness as these 'beggary elements' undoubtedly are, their evil is far outrun by the doctrine of justification by works alone, or by human merit conjoined with the works of Christ, and of other mediators, which invariably accompanies them. Both indeed profess alike to have 'begun in the Spirit,' but both alike labour, and expect to be 'made perfect by the flesh,' ch. 3. 3. Truly has Solomon declared that 'there is no new thing under the sun.' Even ritualism, with all its fertile ingenuity, has been unable to become an inventor; and, when casting off 'the simplicity of the gospel,' has been compelled to deck herself in the ancient but condemned garments of the judaizing, 'the foolish Galatians.' Wherefore 'let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall.' Justification by faith, and by faith alone, is the article by which the church must stand in truth; but the 'faith that is not alone,' but 'worketh by love,' is the principle by which she must stand in holiness. C.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE EPHESIANS.

Ephesus was the chief city of Proconsular Asia, famed for human wisdom and knowledge, but more for idolatry, lasciviousness, and magical arts. Here Paul planted a Christian church, to the elders of which he afterwards gave a solemn charge to attend to their work, Ac. xix. xx. To caution them against those seducers who very early crept in among them, and to confirm them in the doctrines which he had preached to them, he, while a prisoner at Rome, wrote them this excellent letter. In the first three chapters of which he represents to them, in the most enraptured and affecting manner, the riches of God's grace, in their conversion, regeneration, calling, fellowship with God and with his church. In the last three he exhorts them to improve their mercies, in the conscientious performance of all necessary duties, personal and relative, religious and civil, answerably to their Christian character, privileges, assistances, and obligations.

[Ephesus was a city of Ionia, and, under the Roman government, the capital of a large district of Western Asia. It was famous for its temple of Diana, which was reckoned one of the wonders of the world, Ac. 19. 27. It is said to have been more ancient than the time of David, and to have been peopled by a Greek colony.

AQUEDUCT OF EPHEBUS. [Ephesians, i:1.]—Ephesus was once the greatest city in all Asia Minor, and the principal emporium of trade in the East. It was known as one of the eyes of Asia, Smyrna being the other. The inhabitants of Ephesus were mainly Greeks. Hence the city occupied no mean place in literature and art. Apelles was a native of Ephesus. Three great buildings of interest were the temple of Diana; the theater, which was the scene of the riot of Demetrius, and the stadium, or circus, the arena of the sea fights. In the above view we have a representation of the aqueduct and the acropolis that stood above the city. None of the ancient cities have more completely been obliterated. The theater referred to in Acts, 19-29, was capable of holding twenty-five or thirty thousand people, and was the largest ever built by the Greeks.

In the time of Paul Ephesus still retained much of its ancient architectural and commercial grandeur; but the inhabitants were, like those of Athens, wholly given to idolatry. History describes them as licentious in morals and addicted to sorcery; whence 'Ephesian letters' came to be a name for all those superstitious charms and spells by which those ignorant and foolish people who know not God have, in all ages, been affrighted and deceived. In such a city the preaching of the gospel seemed all but hopeless; for idolatry and self-interest combined to instigate the heathen zealots to every riotous opposition, Ac. 19. 24; yet, through the labours of Paul, Apollo, and others, the gospel triumphed; and the Lord established a church which continued until his early-threatened and long-suspended judgment at last overtook the city, and has left it a splendid ruin without church or inhabitant. It was situated about twenty-three miles north of Miletus, to which place Paul called the elders to deliver them his parting charge, about A.D. 58.

This epistle was written about A.D. 62, and, as appears from various allusions, when Paul was a prisoner at Rome. It has been pronounced the richest and noblest of the epistles. And certainly in variety and depth of doctrine, sublimity and fervour of expression, and the intense earnestness of apostolic exhortation, it stands eminently conspicuous. The reason for its peculiar character seems to be that assigned by Scott, namely, 'that the apostle's heart was much enlarged in writing to those whom he had no occasion to rebuke, and with whom he was not under the necessity of joining in controversy; so that entire confidence took place of the caution, reserve, or sharpness which were requisite in the three preceding epistles.' It appears to have been written to confirm the Ephesian and other Asiatic churches in the true doctrine and practice of the gospel. And as every epistle seems to have had some peculiar object, and is consequently distinguished by some peculiar feature, so this epistle is distinguished by its special illustration and enforcement of the blessed doctrine of the headship of Christ over all things to the church, and the union of believers with him in one mystical body.

As to the particular church to which this epistle was originally addressed, expositors are not agreed. Some think it was addressed to the Laodiceans, Col. 4. 16 while others suppose it to have been a circular letter generally addressed to all the churches of Asia. For this opinion, however, there is not a shadow of external proof—the whole current of evidence uniting in inscribing it specially to the Ephesians—though, no doubt, it was intended for the use of the other surrounding churches. And if the apostle directed the Ephesians to send a copy to the Laodiceans, which should afterwards be transmitted to the Laodiceans—and no supposition can be more natural—all idea of the loss of any apostolical epistle is at once removed. C.]

CHAPTER I.

1 After the salutation, 3 and thanksgiving for the Ephesians, 4 he treateth of our election, 6 and adoption by grace, 11 which is the true and proper fountain of man's salvation. 13 And because the height of this mystery cannot easily be attained unto, 16 he prayeth that they may come 18 to the full knowledge and 20 possession thereof in Christ.

PAUL,* an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, to the saints which are at Ephesus,* and to the faithful in Christ Jesus:

2 Grace^a be to you, and peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

CHAPTER I. Ver. 1, 2. Being, according to the blessed will and kind favour of God, immediately authorized and qualified by Jesus Christ to publish his glorious gospel, I earnestly wish and announce to you—members of the church at Ephesus, who are by profession, and I hope many of you really, sanctified by the Holy Ghost, and to all the believers everywhere who, through union to and fellowship with Christ, have obtained mercy, to be faithful to their light and obligations in adhering to the truth as it is in him—all the riches of divine grace, in all its happy fruits, manifestations, and effects, from the living God and Father in Christ, as the fountain and moving cause, and from Jesus Christ as the actual storehouse, and dispenser of them. 3. May all possible glory, thanksgiving, and praise be cheerfully ascribed to that ever-blessed God whose ancient endearing character was the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; but who now manifests himself as the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, his only begotten Son and mediatorial Servant,—that in and through him, as our spiritual Head and anointed Saviour, in the immense riches of his love and grace, he has freely and bountifully bestowed upon us all manner of spiritual and eternal blessings; 4. According to and in the execution of his gracious and unchangeable love, in which we were from all eternity freely and truly accepted in him as our Head and Representative, not because of our natural goodness, but that, through the application of his blood to our conscience, and the Holy Ghost renewing our heart, we might by faith in him be enabled, as in his sight, and acceptably to him, to walk in love to God and to one another, in obedience to his law, and as the fruit of his having first loved us: 5. In which eternal purpose we were to be separated from the rest of mankind, and through faith be his spiritual children, and joint-heirs with Christ, of himself, and all his inestimable fulness and privileges,—that through the merits, and being united to the person, of Christ, and according to his full favour and blessed will, we might be brought into the most intimate union to and fellowship with him, as his peculiar people, saved for and consecrated to his honour and service; 6, 7. All which is done by him that there may be abundant and everlasting praises in the church on earth and in heaven, to the honour and glory of his free grace and mercy, which is so illustriously and endearingly displayed in the whole of our salvation, particularly in rendering us acceptable to himself, in and through the person and mediation of his dearly-beloved and only-begotten Son Jesus Christ—in whom we who accept Christ as Redeemer have a complete and glorious deliverance from all evil, and recovery to all possible happiness, in time and eternity, through the inestimable power of his atonement so fully meeting divine justice, and his righteousness so magnifying to the holy law; having all our sins, however many and aggravated, freely, fully, and lovingly forgiven us, not on account of any worthiness in us or our works, but through a living faith in the excellency, liberality, and unbounded overflowings of JEHOVAH's full mercy and favour. 8. In the breaking forth and plentiful effusions of which grace he has abundantly manifested to us the highest wisdom and love, both in contriving and executing his eternal work of redemption, to the united and highest honour of all his compassion, and in giving us the spirit of wisdom and knowledge, making us wise unto salvation, and to know and practise our duty with understanding, prudence, and discretion: 9. All which wisdom and prudence God hath discovered or conveyed to us by means of the gospel, in which, when attended by the almighty illumination of his Spirit, he opens before us his gracious work of redemption, which is so much hid from creatures, and so marvellous and incomprehensible in itself; and which, influenced by nothing but his own loving grace, he formed and fixed in his own breast, and by his affection,—10. That in the last and most glorious period of his gracious transactions on earth, fixed in his eternal love, and marked in his ancient promises, and when the exceeding sinfulness of mankind had given his free grace the largest opportunity for magnifying its own deep affection, he might, in and by means of Christ incarnate obeying, suffering, dying, interceding, and preached to the nations, gloriously reconcile Jews and Gentiles into one mystical body, bringing them into a new state of peace and friendship with himself and with one another, and even angels and men into one delightful society and new state of peace and friendship; and, in fine, connect all things in and under Christ, as Head over them to his church: 11. In whom also, for the accomplishment of this great design, we believing Jews have, through our faith,

3 Blessed^a be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places¹ in Christ:

4 According as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world,² that we should be holy and without blame before him in love:

5 Having^a predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will,

6 To the praise of the glory of his grace, received a title to and some anticipation of that inheritance of eternal life to which we were, as his children, willed in the free and unchangeable love of God, who, by the power of the Holy Spirit, seeks to bring all men under the direction of his infinite wisdom and the plan of his everlasting love,—12. That we, the natural seed of Abraham, to whom the gospel was first preached, and who were first led to believe, and depend on, and hope in Christ for all salvation, might, as distinguished monuments of his grace, for ever serve him for his mercy in making, and for his truth, power, wisdom, and love in fulfilling his promises: 13. In whom also ye Gentiles, after ye had heard the infallibly certain and infinitely important truths of the gospel, by which that eternal salvation is offered graciously to sinful men, believed; and, in consequence thereof, were, by virtue of your union with him, further sanctified and conformed to his image, and comfortably certified of your personal interest in him as your eternal inheritance by the Holy Ghost, whom he so emphatically promised, and who, with infinite light and power, offers all the promises to our souls: 14. Which Holy Spirit, as given to us, and who awakens our faith, is a security, pledge, and earnest of our heavenly glory, and a joyful foretaste of it, till we, and all who accept Christ, and for whom he secured it, arrive at the full enjoyment of it,—that, as monuments of his amazing grace, we may for ever praise him in the highest manner for the manifestation of it upon us.—15, 16. In reflection upon this grace of God in choosing, redeeming, calling, and sanctifying you Gentiles as well as us Jews, and having received an account of your remarkable trust and hope in the Lord Jesus Christ, and love to all them that bear his image, I have been thereby encouraged in my frequent prayers to bless and thank him for his favours bestowed on you, and to supplicate that he would still grant you more abundant mercies: 17. Particularly that he—who is the loving God of our Lord Jesus Christ, whose love sent him to his mediatorial work, sustained and blest him in it, and who, being infinitely gracious in himself, is the fountain, author, and bestower of all the grace communicated to angels, men, or any other creature, and is the eternal Object of all admiration and worship—would, by his Spirit, give you still more bright, sweet, and assuring manifestations of Christ, in his person,

17 That ^athe God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto you ^bthe spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge^c of him:

18 The^a eyes of your understanding being enlightened; that ye may know what is ^bthe hope of his calling, and what ^cthe riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints,

19 And what is ^athe exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward who believe, according to the working of his mighty power,^b

20 Which^a he wrought in Christ, when he raised him from the dead, and set ^bhim at his own right hand in the heavenly places,

21 Far^a above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in ^bthat which is to come;

22 And ^ahath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be ^bthe head over all things to the church,

23 Which is ^athis body, the fulness^b of him that ^cfilleth all in all.^d

CHAPTER II.

1 By comparing what we were by 3 nature, with what we are 5 by grace, 10 he declareth that we are made for good works; and 13 being brought near by Christ, should not live as 11 Gentiles, and 12 foreigners in time past, but as 19 citizens with the saints, and the family of God.

AND you^a hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins;

2 Wherein^a in time past ye walked according to the course of this world, according to the ^bprince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the ^cchildren of disobedience:

offices, righteousness, and love, and lead you into a still more clear and experimental acquaintance with the exercise of faith, love, and other graces; 18. That through his enlightening influence, by the Word of God and daily experience, your minds may perceive, with the utmost certainty and light, what a sincere and genuine hope that is to which God has prepared for you by the gospel, what excellent objects it hath in view, and what solid and never-failing grounds ye have for it; and that by the realizing views of faith, by spiritual meditation, and by gracious foretastes, ye may know, in an animating and extensive manner, what is the true nature and transcendent excellency of the invaluable treasures of blessedness which God, because of love, bestows on and places in those who accept Christ for his inheritance and blessed kingdom: 19, 20. And that ye may further understand and experience what is the superabundant and all-conquering greatness of his power which he exercises towards us who believe, Jews or Gentiles, in quickening our dead souls, working love in us, subduing our inward corruptions, supporting and preserving us through all dangers, comforting us against all griefs, and raising us up to complete and eternal blessedness, and that in a manner like to the almighty exertion of it in the resurrection and high exaltation of Jesus Christ,—21-23. In which the Father hath advanced him, as God-man Mediator, to the highest dignity and authority, inexpressibly beyond the reach of angels and men, and invested him with uncontrollable dominion over all angels, good or bad, and all rulers in either church or state, and has placed all his enemies in a state of subjection to him, that he may administer the universe through the Lord Jesus Christ; and has given him an absolute and universal dominion, in the kingdom of providence and grace, over all persons and things, that he may manage, overrule, restrain, and order all events for the spiritual and eternal benefit of the catholic church, to which he is the Head of direction and government, life and influence, tender care and protection; and which is his mystical body, receiving all life, activity, growth, and strength from him; and in his relative fulness, comprehending all the members exercise faith in him for the perfecting of his family and glory—who, by means of his Word, offices, and ordinances, attended with his presence, are filled by him with all gifts, graces, and fruits of righteousness.

Ver. 1. The words 'at Ephesus' are omitted in the Sinaitic and Vatican manuscripts, two of the oldest and best of our ancient authorities for the text of the New Testament. The genuineness of the words may therefore be questioned. They were perhaps added at an early period from authentic tradition. P.

Ver. 3. In heavenly places. Rather, 'in the heavenly things that are in Christ'; to wit, growth in holiness (ver. 4), the adoption of children (ver. 5), &c. C.

Ver. 6. This verse ought rather to be translated: 'To the praise of the glory of his (God's) grace, which he graciously imparted to us in the Beloved' (in Christ). P.

Ver. 7. The apostle says 'we have redemption'—have it now, through faith in the Redeemer.—Note. The present possession of such a blessing as redemption, even the forgiveness of sins, should be the constant aim, as it is the undoubted privilege, of every one that believes in the name of Jesus, Jn. 1. 12; 1 Jn. 2. 12. C.

Ver. 10. The dispensation of the fulness of times. The Christian dispensation, or plan of divine government of his church, which commenced at the fulness of the prophetic times.—All things in Christ. Not all things whether good or evil, but that he might gather or unite under one head all things that are in Christ by God's purpose on the one hand, and their own faith upon the other—angels in heaven, and Jews and Gentiles, without distinction, upon earth. C.

Ver. 11. Worketh all things. Producing the good and overruling the evil. C.

Ver. 12. Paul here draws a distinction between the Jews and Gentiles. The former, under the old dispensation, had trusted for salvation in the Messiah (the Christ) promised in the Old Testament; the latter believed in that Christ (ver. 13) as an historical personage after his incarnation and glorification. Ver. 12 ought therefore to be rendered as follows:—'That we (Jews) should be to the praise of his (God's) glory—we, namely, who have before (before the incarnation) trusted in the (Greek word) has the article, and hence means the promised Messiah) Christ.' Then Paul turns to the Gentiles, and continues:—'In whom are ye also, &c. (ye Gentiles who have believed, &c.) P.

Ver. 13. Sealed. Marked out as God's people, both by the miraculous and ordinary gifts of the promised Spirit, according as it has pleased God to distribute to every man severally as is best, 1 Co. 12. 4-11. C.

Ver. 15. Love unto all the saints. Let it be well noted that diffusive brotherly love is the great practical and apostolic test of genuine Christianity. C.

Ver. 16. Let Christians mark both the universality and speciality of the apostle's prayers, and learn to cast aside the insulated selfishness of mere personal petition, and bear every church, and, as far as may be, every believer known to them, on their hearts before the throne of grace. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Abundant is the grace we receive from Christ. It is only in a state of union to him that we are rendered holy or faithful. And it is only in him that we are blessed with either spiritual or eternal blessings. Delightful is the influence and sweet the character of a gracious God. Marvellous is the compassion, the freedom, the antiquity, the rich abundance and powerful efficacy of his redeeming grace. To it we owe our love, our hope, our justification, our spiritual knowledge, our eternal happiness, and our present assurance of and security for it. Influenced by it, how delightfully Father, Son, and Holy Ghost co-operate in our eternal redemption! Actuated by the faith of it, cordially ought we to pour forth our praises and thanksgivings, and to admire his kindness in bringing us Gentiles into the fellowship of the gospel. And earnestly should we pray for further influences of the Holy Spirit to enlighten our minds and quicken our souls. But, above all, let us admire the power, the grace, the wisdom, which have so exalted our Redeemer for the welfare of his body the church. And since God hath 'et him so high at his right hand, let him be for ever exalted in our hearts.

CHAPTER II. Ver. 1. And as God, by the exceeding greatness of his power, raised up Christ as a public person from the dead, he has also bestowed upon you a life of justification, freeing you from your guilt and condemnation, and quickened you to a life of holiness, by the renewal of your nature, who, as Gentile sinners, were under the dominion of both legal and spiritual death, and, as it were, condemned and killed by a multitude of sins original and actual. 2. In which,

3 Among whom also we all had our conversation in times past in the lusts of our flesh, fulfilling the desires¹ of the flesh and of the mind; and were by nature the children of wrath, even as others.

4 But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us,²

5 Even³ when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ, (by grace ye are saved;)

6 And hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus;

7 That in the ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of his grace, in his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus.

while ye continued unregenerate heathens, ye with great eagerness constantly, freely, and progressively moved and acted according to the corrupt fashions and customs of this present evil world—according to the will, desire, instigation, and government of the devil and his angels, who wander about in and even agitate the air, and who, however proud, light, and vain, are worshipped and obeyed by the most of mankind, and continually work in the hearts of them who rebel against the laws and gospel of Christ; 3. Among whom all of us, Jews or Gentiles, being equally depraved in our spirit and temper, while we remained unregenerate, lived and acted, led away with divers lusts and pleasures, sometimes seeking to satisfy one, and sometimes another; and under the dominion and influence of our inward corruptions, gratifying, acting over, and indulging the irregular appetites of our body, in all its members; and of our soul, in all its powers, faculties, wishes, and contrivances; and were naturally chargeable and infected from our very conception with awful sin, and on that account condemned and exposed to the everlasting displeasure of God as much as any of those who are eternally lost. 4-6. But while we were in these loathsome, deplorable, condemned, helpless, and hopeless circumstances, it pleased God—whose riches of mercy and grace are altogether excellent, abundant, universal, and overflowing, and who is ready to pity, help, save, and enrich sinful and miserable creatures, according to that wonderful love which from eternity he fixed upon us, and upon all who through faith accept spiritual blessings in Christ—to recover us into a state of favour with himself, and grant unto us a principle of spiritual life, in conformity to and by virtue of our union and fellowship with Christ; and to give us a title to and foretastes of eternal salvation; and without making any distinction of nations or conditions, to raise us up in Christ as our Head and Representative, and make us to sit in the heavenly mansions in him as our fore-runner already entered for us into the full possession thereof, and hereby assuring us that, in due time, we, in our persons, shall sit there with him and all his saints.—7. That in all the future ages and generations of this world he might set forth an illustrious and encouraging pattern, pledge, and earnest of the transcendent excellency and superabundant fulness of his full favour as it hath been exemplified in acts of special goodness and endearing kindness toward us, Jews and Gentiles, through the person and mediation of Christ; and that, in the heavenly state, he might for ever demonstrate and display the supereminent glory of his free grace, in all the unsearchable riches thereof, to the everlasting astonishment, joy, and praise of angels and saints. 8. For, as hath been before hinted, the whole of that salvation which ye are possessed of and entitled to, in the tenderness, love, offer, and application of it, and in all its parts and degrees, proceeds truly from the good will and love of God, and is conveyed through faith; not indeed by any virtue of faith itself, but as God's appointed means, whereby ye receive and rest upon Christ alone for it; and this faith itself, as well as the salvation thereby received, is not the product of any natural principle, good disposition, kindness, or improvement of the gospel that ye were capable of, but is wholly the free gift of God secured by Christ, and graciously offered you through faith in his sacrifice. 9. Neither the salvation itself, nor the faith whereby it is received, is in the least owing to any good works done by us, as the meritorious, moving, or efficient cause of it; but in recovering us, when so inexpressibly guilty, polluted, rebellious, infamous, and wretched, God has so demonstrated his mercy and grace as leaves no appearance of room or occasion for any man, in a vainglorious manner, to pretend he had done ought to render himself fit for or worthy of it. 10. For all the good works or qualities which appear in us, Jews or Gentiles, are nothing else than the effects of God's grace towards us, who, with respect to our spiritual state and renewed nature, are the curious workmanship of God, formed in and by virtue of our union with Christ, for bringing forth the fruits of holiness, for which, not our inclinations or power, but the gracious purpose and glorious grace of God do prepare us.—11. Wherefore, that ye Gentile converts may be deeply and humbly affected with that amazing grace which has been extended to you, I beseech you seriously to reflect on your former deplorable condition, when ye lived in ignorance, idolatry, and all other defilements of the human nature; and being destitute of all the ordinances of God, were contemned and detested by his professed people: 12. That then ye had no knowledge of or faith in the only Saviour of sinners, nor any vital union to or communion with him; nor any claim to the blessings of the gospel secured, revealed, or dispensed by him: ye had no possession of or right to the privileges of his visible Jewish church, and no spiritual relation to or fellowship with his people; ye had no share in the dispensation of the promise of grace, and its unnumbered exceeding great and precious hopes; and so could have no solid, rational, and well-grounded hope of deliverance from misery or enjoyment of eternal life; but were living, like atheists, without the knowledge, faith, fear, worship, and profession of the only true God, and destitute of all spiritual communion with or communications from him. 13. But notwithstanding all your unworthiness, wickedness, and wretchedness, through the astonishing mercy and grace of God ye are now, by the gospel dispensation, brought into a special relation and union to Jesus Christ, the only Saviour of lost sinners, and thereby translated from your former state of distance, enmity, and hopelessness into a spiritual state of friendship and fellowship with God and his church, through the merit and application of Jesus' atoning blood. 14. For he, in his person and mediation, is the only peacemaker, and the centre of union between God and us, and between one another, whether we are believing Jews or Gentiles; who hath reconciled us to God and to each other, and hath united us in one church, and cemented us together in heart and affection as children of one family; the ceremonial law, that wall of partition which separated between Jews and Gentiles, being abolished through his incarnation and death, and the New-Testament worship, which gives equal access to both, appointed in its stead. 15, 16. And having in his crucifixion fulfilled their typical signification, he disannulled the obligation of these ceremonial institutions, which represented God still unpropitious, and proved the occasion of much hatred and enmity between Jews and Gentiles,—that out of both he might make one church, formed of new creatures, after the image of God, and framed together for gospel worship and new obedience, and by a new constitution under him made equally partakers of grace and glory—that thus he might bring about an entire harmony and friendship

8 For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God: 9 Not of works, lest any man should boast.

10 For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained³ that we should walk in them.

11 Wherefore remember, that ye being in time past Gentiles in the flesh, who are called Circumcision by that which is called the Circumcision in the flesh made by hands;

12 That at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world:

13 For ye were dead in sins, which ye have committed, when ye were dead in trespasses and sins.

between believers of all nations, as one spiritual body united to him by faith and love; and that, through his atoning sacrifice of himself upon the cross, he might remove their guilt, and bring them into a joint state of peace and favour with God. 17. And in order thus to reconcile them to God and to each other in one gospel church, by the ministry of his servants and the powerful operation of his Spirit, he published the glad tidings of peace and salvation to you Gentiles, who were far removed from the knowledge, profession, faith, and favour of God; and also to the Jews, who had long been his peculiar people, and had enjoyed the symbols of his presence, and the oracles and ordinances of his grace. 18. For such is the efficacy of his incarnation, obedience, and sufferings exhibited in the gospel, that by means thereof we who believe, whether Jews or Gentiles, through the direction and assistance of his Spirit, have an equally free and familiar access into the favour, presence, and fellowship of God, our common Father in and with Christ. 19. Now, therefore, ye Gentile believers, being reconciled and brought near to God, are no more aliens from his church, covenants, promises, or privileges, but, like freemen and fellow-citizens of the heavenly Jerusalem, are entitled to and joint partakers with the believing Jews of all the blessings which pertain to the believers; and are, through repentance and faith, of the family and children of God, heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ. 20. And graciously and for ever to establish your union with Christ, and with God in him as your Father and Creator, by means of the doctrines of the apostles and prophets, which exhibit and offer him to you, ye are by faith built upon Christ as your immovable and life-giving Foundation, and connected, beautified, and strengthened by him as your chief Corner-stone. 21. In union with whom, and by virtue derived from him, the universal church, Jews or Gentiles, and every true member of it, placed in proper order for the use of the whole, doth, by a continual addition of new converts, or the further gracious growth of each, as animated and influenced by their living and life-giving Foundation, become a spiritual temple, formed by, dedicated to, and inhabited by the Lord Christ and his Father; and in which he manifests his gracious presence, displays his glory, and is worshipped and glorified: 22. In whom, being vitally united to his person, and formed into a church state by his authority and influence, ye are built up together as a particular church—a living temple—which God had consecrated for himself, who, by the special presence, light, and grace of his Spirit, dwells among you, and in the heart of every true believer.

Ver. 1. The words 'hath he quickened' are supplied from ver. 5. It is not improbable, however, that the ellipsis should be supplied from the preceding chapter thus: 'And you hath he quickened—that is, with life—who were dead in trespasses and sins.' C.
Ver. 2. Course—aidna—its evil principles and practices, which run on as a stream through the whole period of its being. See ver. 7. C.
Ver. 3. Nature can never be translated 'custom' or 'habit,' unless such custom or habit as arises from original or innate propensity. C.
Ver. 5. The quickening referred to here is not the resurrection of the body alone, though that will follow, but a spiritual quickening—the imparting to us of a new and divine life, which operates upon us here, making us love and follow God. This also is a result of Christ's resurrection. Alford has well remarked on this topic: 'The resurrection of Christ was not a mere bodily act—an earnest of our bodily resurrection—but was a spiritual act—the raising of his humanity (which is ours), consisting of body and soul, from infirmity to glory, from the curse to the final triumph. In that he died, he died unto sin once; but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God. And so, we who believe, 13 But⁴ now, in Christ Jesus,⁴ ye who sometimes were far off are made nigh by the blood of Christ.

14 For he is ^{our} peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the ^{middle} wall of partition between us;

15 Having² abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain one³ new man, so making peace;

16 And that he might ^{reconcile} both unto God in one body by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby;⁵

17 And came and ^{preached} peace to you which were afar off, and to them ^{that} were nigh.

18 For ^{through him} we both have access by one Spirit unto the Father.

19 Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but ^{fellow-citizens} with the saints, and of the household of God;

20 And are ^{built upon} the foundation of the apostles and prophets,⁶ Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone;

CHAPTER III.

5 The hidden mystery, 6 that the Gentiles should be saved, 3 was made known to Paul by revelation: 8 and to him was that grace given, 9 that he should preach it. 13 He desireth them not to faint for his tribulation, 14 and prayeth 19 that they may perceive the great love of Christ toward them.

FOR this cause I Paul, the ^{prisoner} of Jesus Christ for you Gentiles,

2 If ye have heard of the ^{dispensation} of the grace of God, which is given me to you-ward:

3 How that ^{by} revelation he made known unto me the mystery; ^{as} (as I wrote afore¹ in few words,

4 Whereby, when ye read, ye may understand my knowledge in the ^{mystery} of Christ;)

5 Which⁹ in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit;

6 That⁴ the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, knot to him, have died unto sin and live unto God.' The resurrection of Christ secures a present spiritual, as well as a future bodily or material resurrection. P.

Ver. 8. It is the gift of God. What is the gift?—salvation or faith? That salvation is the gift, is argued from eterna being neuter, and so not agreeing with eterna, feminine; but the construction in ch. 6:18; Phil. 1:28; Ga. 3:17; 4:19 will show how little value is to be attached to this circumstance. That faith is the gift will appear, not from mere verbal criticism, but from the plain facts declared Mat. 13:11; Jn. 3:27; 6:65; from comp. 1 Jn. 3:24 with Ga. 5:22; and if more evidence be wanting, Paul expressly declares, Phil. 1:29. 'Unto you it is given (as also to all) to believe.' C.

Ver. 10. Which God hath, &c. Rather, 'for the performance of which God has before prepared us,' that is, by the previous gift of his Spirit working faith in our hearts. C.

Ver. 16. 'And that he might reconcile both (Jew and Gentile, who were before separated) in one body (uniting them as different members of one body, namely, the church, which is the body of Christ) to God, by means of the cross (his death on the cross atoning for sin), and thus taking away that guilt which separated man from God, having slain the enmity (between man and his God in the first place, but which is developed into enmity between man and man, between Jew and Gentile) on it' (on the cross). P.

REFLECTIONS.—Alas! what a state of sin, slavery, wretchedness, and wrath are all men in by nature, Satan and their lusts hurrying them on to their own destruction! Transcendent and amazing grace must be necessary to quicken, to save, and to exalt for ever, such victims of misery, guilt, and pollution; and pure and free is the manifestation of it. No works of ours can possibly save us from our sins. How wonderful is that Christ for whom, in whom, and with whom all these rich mercies are received. Blessed be his name that Gentile idolaters are, through faith in his glorious person, righteousness, and mediation, brought into his gospel church!—While the building goes up sing, ye nations—sing, all the powers of my soul—GRACE, GRACE, UNTO IT!

CHAPTER III. Ver. 1. For my boldly maintaining that you believing Gentiles have an equal access to the church and presence of God, and are equally related to him, as the Jews, I am, at this very time, through the malice and indefatigable opposition of my carnal countrymen, a prisoner at Rome, of which I boast and glory, as I know it will turn out to your spiritual advantage. 2. For ye must needs have heard how Jesus Christ, in his infinite condescension and grace, appointed me as a steward in his family, and herald in his kingdom, to preach the gospel chiefly to you and other Gentiles, that ye might believe and be saved; 3, 4. And how, by repeated visions and revelations, and by the immediate inspiration of his Spirit, he made known to me the great mystery of the salvation of sinful men, through his own incarnation, obedience, death, resurrection, and ascension, and of the gracious calling of the Gentiles into his gospel church; as, according to the measure of my knowledge of it, I have already hinted unto you:—5. Which mystery was not at all made known to the Gentiles in former ages, nor so distinctly, fully, and clearly to the Jews, as it is now revealed to the holy apostles and other inspired teachers of the Christian church, in consequence of the resurrection and ascension of Jesus Christ;—6. Particularly that branch of it,—that without any regard to circumcision or any other Jewish ceremonies, the idolatrous Gentiles should, equally and in the strictest connection with the Jews, be called and admitted into the same gospel church, partaking of all the privileges thereof, and be made members of the same mystical body of Christ,—to derive all enlightening, quickening, sanctifying, and comforting influence from him, and hold all their right and claim to all the promised blessings of the new kingdom under him, and partake of the promised Spirit in all his influences, gifts, graces, and glories shed on them abundantly through Christ: 7. Of which glorious gospel, being miraculously converted, and receiving a divinely free gift of the apostleship, I was, by the immediate appointment of Jesus Christ and his Father, made a preacher—to publish it in all its light, fulness, and glory; and had my commission ratified by many miraculous operations, and by an amazing success in the conversion and salvation of sinners. 8. Unto me, who was once a furious persecutor, blasphemous, and injurious person, and who in myself am still so transcendently worthless and hell-deserving, is this condescending, astonishing, and unparalleled favour shown—that I, above all the apostles, should be pitched upon to publish far and wide among the idolatrous Gentiles the glad tidings of salvation; and to be instrumental, in the hand of the Spirit, in making known and conveying to multitudes those exceeding riches of mercy and merit, of grace and glory, which are treasured up in Christ, and offered in the gospel through faith in him to the worst of sinners,—and which can never be fathomed, exhausted, numbered, or traced out in all their endless variety, excellency, and fulness. 9. And to make both Jews and Gentiles clearly perceive what a happy fellowship believers of all nations, as one church, under Christ their Head, now have in the exceeding great and glorious blessings of the gospel;—a mystery, in which unfathomable depths of divine compassion, wisdom, and grace are implied,—and which lay long concealed in the love and mind of God himself, who, in and with his Son Jesus Christ, created all things in heaven and earth; 10. And that even all the dignified and mighty ranks and orders of holy angels, who minister to the redeemed heirs of salvation, might, with ravishing pleasure, joy, and praise, behold and contemplate the infinite wisdom of God in the unnumbered displays of its glory in the doctrines, ministrations, blessings, and privileges of the New Testament church;—11. All which is now transacted in exact agreement with God's eternal love, which he had cherished in regard to his church, as considered in Christ their Head, Lord, and Saviour; 12. In and through whom, as the only Mediator between God and men, we have great liberty and enlargement of spirit in our dealings with God as our reconciled Father and Friend; and through faith receiving and resting on him alone for salvation, have a humble assurance of his favour towards us, his gracious acceptance of our persons and services, and his audience of our prayers for all real and necessary blessings. 13. In the contemplation of these things I entreat you never to be disheartened, affrightened, or made negligent or spiritless in your Christian course by the sufferings which I have to endure for my adherence to, and preaching of, the gospel; but rather to the honour of your Christian profession be encouraged, strengthened, and animated therein, as they are indeed a great honour put on me for the confirmation of what I preached and ye believed. 14. And that ye may be directed to this and all other necessary duties, I recommend you by the most affectionate, earnest, and solemn prayer, to the favour and mercy of the eternal Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and our Father and Friend in him. 15. Of and under whom, and of the Father through him, all true worshippers, whether angels or saints, are gathered into one family, and have received the most transcendent and glorious honours and privileges; 16. And I plead that he who has already done so much for you may, in a manner answerable to his own immense fulness of wisdom, faithfulness, power, goodness, mercy, and grace, and by his almighty Spirit powerfully working in your renewed hearts, more and more fortify you against the efforts of inward corruptions or temptations from Satan or the world; and invigorate and animate you with holy courage to exercise every grace, perform every good work, endure every trial, and abounding in holiness and comfort, to hold on to the end through all opposition and danger. 17. And that Jesus Christ, together with and by his Spirit, may be constantly present in your minds not only by the habit, but by realizing and appropriating acts of faith; and have a sensible abode in your hearts by continual gracious impressions and manifestations of his love to you as persons united to him;—that ye, being deeply fixed and firmly established in an experimental and assured perception and faith of his love to you, and in your exercise of grateful returns of love to him, 18. May, by means of his oracles and ordinances, attended with the enlightening and sanctifying influences of his Spirit, be enabled to apprehend, and be suitably affected with, the unbounded love of Christ; clearly perceiving, as far as is possible for saints in this world, its unmeasurable extent, as it reaches to Gentiles as well as Jews, to all ranks, sorts, and degrees of sinners, and to all forms and degrees of spiritual and heavenly blessings:—its and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel;

7 Whereof¹ I was made a minister, according to the gift of the grace of God given unto me by the effectual working of his power.

8 Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the 'unsearchable riches of Christ:

9 And to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery, "which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, who created all things² by Jesus Christ:

10 To³ the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places might be known,³ by the church, the manifold wisdom of God,

11 According⁷ to the eternal purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord:

12 In⁸ whom we have boldness and access with confidence by the faith of him.

13 Wherefore I desire that ye faint not at my tribulations for you, which is your glory.

14 For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, 15 Of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named,

16 That he would grant you, "according to the riches of his glory, "to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man;

17 That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, being "rooted and grounded in love,

18 May be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height;

19 And to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God.

20 Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us, 21 Unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus, throughout all ages, world without end. Amen.

CHAPTER IV.

1 He exhorteth to unity, 7 and declareth that God therefore giveth divers 11 gifts unto men, that his church might be 13 edified, and 16 grow up in Christ. 18 He calleth them from the impurity of the Gentiles, 24 to put on the new man, 25 to cast off lying, and 29 corrupt communication.

THEREFORE, the "prisoner of the Lord, beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called,

2 With all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love;

3 Endeavouring^d to keep the unity of the Spirit² in the bond of peace.

inconceivable length, in reaching from everlasting to everlasting;—its unfathomable depth, as it brought the most high God of glory to the lowest state of service, sufferings, and death, and makes him stoop to redeem us from our lowest depths of sinfulness and misery;—and its astonishing height, in his exalted intercession for us, and advancing us to the highest glory of which our nature is capable;—19. And may, by faith and spiritual experience, know more the virtue, power, and sweetness of the transcendent love of Christ, and of God in him, in all its most excellent manifestations, fruits, and effects,—which, in itself, and in its wonderful operations, provisions, and designs, infinitely surpasses all the comprehensions of angels and men;—that thereby ye may be more and more abundantly partakers of a divine nature, and, to your utmost capacity, enriched with all that fulness of light and grace, holiness, joy, and peace, which God has prepared, promised, and communicates to his loving people,—and in due time arrive at the most full and transcendent enjoyment of him as your infinite ALL IN ALL. 20, 21. Now to this almighty, all-sufficient, gracious, and loving God, who, by that very power, of the almighty operations of which we have had abundant experience in our souls, is able to grant all those extensive blessings which I have desired, or which can be desired by us,—nay, to do infinitely above what we can ask or even conceive,—be ascribed all possible honour in the way of faith, love, adoration, worship, obedience, thanksgiving, blessing, and praise; on account of his infinite perfections, marvellous love, and mighty works of creation, providence, and grace,—in the whole universal church, in heaven and earth, and by every society and member thereof,—through Jesus Christ and his mediation,—during all the periods of time or ages of eternity; so may it and so shall it be.

Ver. 1. For this cause—the equal admission of both Jews and Gentiles into the church of God—which doctrine the Lord revealed to him, and he faithfully preached—whereby he had provoked the Jews to persecute him as an apostate, and the Gentiles as a denouncer of their idolatry. C.

Ver. 2. If ye have heard. Rather, 'since,' for there could be no question of their knowledge of his commission and doctrine. C.

Ver. 8. Unsearchable—and inconceivable, as the word imports.—Note. The human mind can never grasp infinity—yet upon infinity alone can it rest with confidence. The infinite power and infinite mercy that meet in Christ can alone enable the perishing sinner to say, 'It is enough.' C.

Ver. 10. By the church. Through the means of the church—the founding, sustaining, chastising, comforting, and purifying of which afforded such new and conspicuous evidence of the inexhaustible wisdom of God. C.

Ver. 13. It is 'your glory' that ye be not disconcerted by any tribulations—which I endure patiently that you may be brought to the fellowship of Christ. C.

Ver. 15. Of whom, may, grammatically, refer either to the Father or to Jesus Christ; but the latter seems the more probable. See He. 2. 13, 17. C.

Ver. 19. Which passeth knowledge. How can we know what passeth knowledge? Just as the astronomer knows the heavens so far as he can see, yet concludes from unquestionable analogy that much lies beyond his range of vision.—With (rather, 'unto'), all the fulness of God—the fulness of grace, which, being manifested in the Word made flesh (Jn. 1. 14), is from him, as from a fountain, poured forth into the hearts of believers, viz. intellectual gifts, spiritual graces, love, peace, communion with God, and holy dedication to his service. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Behold, my soul, how the divine grace, infinite wisdom, and eternal love of the most High appear in the conversion of Gentile sinners to the almighty Saviour! Great is the boldness of access we have now to God: and unsearchable the riches of mercies and blessings which the gospel brings to us.—With deep self-abasement and affecting admiration of God's favours ought ministers to preach it. With patience and courage they ought to labour and suffer as is most for the good of the church. And with frequent and fervent prayer should they carry on their whole work, asking for themselves and their people abundant supplies of grace.—While angels with admiration pry into these mysteries, let my soul contemplate the infinite love of my Kinsman Redeemer, and be filled with all the fulness of God. And while grace for ever reigns through his righteousness, let there be glory to God in the highest.

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 1. Since, therefore, these amazingly glorious privileges and blessings are freely and equally bestowed on you Gentile believers as on the Jews, I, who, to my inexpressible honour, am here, by the wise disposal, and for the sake of the Lord Jesus Christ, a prisoner for the faithful preaching of his gospel, particularly to the Gentiles,—earnestly beseech you constantly and perseveringly to live and act in a holy and honourable conversation, as becometh that gospel which ye have believed, and that high calling of God in Christ Jesus whereby ye have been tenderly called to glory and virtue. 2. And in acting suitably to the spiritual privileges and obligations of the gospel, study to walk humbly with God under a deep sense of your own meanness, unworthiness, and sinfulness, and to behave humbly toward each other, esteeming others better than yourselves; and with all courteousness, candour, calmness, and sweetness of temper. In real and hearty affection to Jesus Christ, and to one another in him, kindly bear affronts and injuries without retaliating or revenging them. Calmly overlook, or bear with, the weaknesses, indiscretions, forwardness, and peevish tempers of others, and even pity and excuse them: 3. And thus carefully and diligently, by all proper means, maintain and promote that spiritual union and harmony of souls which is the fruit of the Holy Ghost's dwelling in them, and consists in that pure and spiritual peace which is the best and strongest bond of your religious society and fellowship in it. 4. To engage you to cultivate this amiable union, consider the joint interest ye have in all the same important things. The church, of which ye are all alike members, is but one mystical body, and so ye ought to have the same fellow-feeling, care, and concern for one another. The same divine Spirit of love and peace animates, guides, and dwells in this whole mystical body, and every member of it;—and therefore ye ought to act with united hearts under his influence, and in imitation of him. Ye are, by God's grace, called to God's kingdom and glory as the one summary object of your hope; and, in your gracious work, ye are all partakers of the same grace of hope which terminates on Christ as its only foundation;—and therefore ye should live in harmony and peace, as heirs together of the same grace of life, and expectants of the same heavenly inheritance. 5. There is one Lord and Saviour of all true believers, even Jesus Christ, the only Mediator, King, and Head of his church; and therefore ye ought to unite with one heart and soul in your dependence on, and allegiance, love, and obedience to him, and in your sincere affection to all his subjects, according to the laws of his kingdom. There is but one and the same rule or doctrine of faith, one object of faith, and one sort of like precious faith in the whole church; and therefore this should, in every member, work in the same actings of love to Christ and to one another. The baptism, whether external or internal, of all church-members, is one and the same in its nature, tendency, and design; in which they are solemnly devoted to Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, as one God, sole Proprietor of the church, and brought under the strongest bonds to be entirely and unreservedly the Lord's, and therefore ought to behave with the utmost unity of character. 6. And, in fine, the loving God grow up into him in all things, which is ²²the head, ²³even Christ:

* The quotation is from Ps. 68:18, and there is a difference between the words as here cited and those in the original. The change in the words is introduced accidentally; it is not merely a citation, but also an interpretation of the psalmist's words, given under the inspiration of the Divine Spirit. The words of the psalm are: "Thou hast led captivity captive; thou hast received gifts for men—the gifts addressed to Christ." The apostle makes such a change as to render the language historically descriptive of what Christ has done. He led captivity captive, and gave gifts to men.—P.

16 From²⁴ whom the whole body fitly joined together, and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love.

17 This²⁵ I say therefore, and testify in the Lord, that ²⁶ye henceforth walk not as other Gentiles walk, in the vanity of their mind,

18 Having²⁷ the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness²⁸ of their heart:

19 Who²⁹ being past feeling, have given themselves over unto lasciviousness, to work all uncleanness with greediness.

20 But³⁰ ye have not so learned Christ;

21 If so be that ye have heard him, and have been taught by him, ³¹as the truth is in Jesus:

22 That ye ³²put off, concerning the former conversation, the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts;

23 And ³³'be renewed in the spirit of your mind;

24 And that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness.³⁴

25 Wherefore, ³⁵'putting away lying, speak every man truth with his neighbour: for we are ³⁶members one of another.

and Father of helpless men, Jews or Gentiles, who is infinitely above them in perfections and dominion, and whose special presence preserves, governs, and supplies every part of the mystical Body of Christ,—and who, by his Spirit and grace, dwells in all through faith,—is but one; and therefore ye ought to be of one heart and soul in your acknowledgments, love, and reverence of him, and in your obedience and subjection to him as your own God and Father, and ought to love his children as your spiritual brethren.—7. But notwithstanding our unity in so many great and important things, Jesus Christ, according to his own infinite wisdom and bounty, freely bestows upon his church a beautiful variety of spiritual offices, gifts, graces, and attainments.—8. Hence the Holy Ghost, by David, suggested that having—in consequence of his victory over sin, Satan, the world, and death—in his sufferings, resurrection, and ascension—received fulness of authority and influences from his Father as working with him, he should liberally distribute diversified offices, gifts, and graces to men, Jews or Gentiles, professing or rebellious sinners. 9. Now this very hint of his glorious and triumphant ascension plainly intimates that it was founded on his great incarnation, obedience, death, and burial.—10. And it is the same only begotten Son of God who so humbled himself that, as man and Mediator, after conquering all his enemies, hath ascended to the right hand of God, that by the virtue of his death, victory, and triumph, he might fill all the officers, members, ordinances, and administrations of his church with the gifts and graces of his Spirit, and thus fulfil all the ancient types and predictions, and perfect whatever relates to the salvation of all men. 11. In prosecution of this gracious design he furnished his gospel church with proper officers;—some of them extraordinary for her first settlement,—as apostles, who received their commission immediately from himself, to be eye-witnesses of his resurrection from the dead; whose authority extended equally to all the churches, and who could, under inspiration, teach the whole scheme of the gospel, work all sorts of miracles, and convey the Holy Ghost, in his miraculous influence, to other believers. Others he appointed and qualified as prophets to explain the Old Testament and foretell things to come. Others he appointed and qualified as inspired evangelists to attend the apostles and finish what they had begun. Other officers were ordinary, to continue in the church till the end of the world; namely, pastors, to watch over, govern, and dispense the ordinances of Christ to particular congregations; and teachers, to instruct church-members and others in the truths of the gospel. 12. All which offices and officers are appointed and rendered successful for completing the church in the number of her vital members, and each in their gifts and graces, and for uniting and compacting them in a regular society, and restoring such as had fallen, and for faithfully dispensing to them his word and ordinances, and for the building up of his mystical body the church in knowledge, faith, love, joy, and holy obedience. 13. Till we all, whether Jews or Gentiles, strong or weak, who do or may hereafter believe, be perfectly cemented into an entire agreement in the doctrines, and by the grace of faith; and in a clear, affectionate, and faithful knowledge, and approving acknowledgment of the eternal Son of God as our only Lord and Saviour; and so, by gradual improvement in gifts and graces, may arrive at that state of perfection which is reserved for the whole body of true believers in heaven after the last judgment. 14. That thus we may no longer continue like children, deficient in knowledge and prudence, weak in faith, and wavering in opinion, easily taken with new things, tossed or driven about, as ships without ballast, or flying clouds, by unstable, noisy, violent, and unsubstantial errors, whereby artful and designing men labour to impose on and deceive us to our eternal ruin.—15. But, on the contrary, may sincerely speak of, and plead for, the truths of the gospel, in the exercise of fervent love to them, to Christ, and the souls of men;—and may, like living members of him as our quickening Head, increase in all light, grace, and holiness, by virtue of our union with him, in conformity to his pattern, and for his honour. 16. From whom, as the Head and Fountain, all his members, being orderly and closely joined among themselves and united to him, do, by that energy which is communicated from him through every ordinance, officer, and member—in a proportion suited to the state, condition, and exigence of every part—build up themselves, and one another, in Christian love to him their Head, and to their fellow-members.—17. Since therefore ye, as members of Christ, are partakers of such privileges, let me again earnestly entreat and solemnly charge you, in the name and authority of the Lord Jesus, that henceforth ye no more behave like other Gentiles, who, unrenewed by the grace of God, still continue in their sensual, worldly, and idolatrous courses, suited to the pride, ignorance, and folly of their depraved mind. 18. Having their understandings filled with ignorance and error concerning everything spiritual; and through which indulged, increased, and confirmed, their wills and affections are become strangers to, and alienated from, the way of life, holiness, and happiness which God appoints and approves, and by which he lives in the soul, and it lives to him; 19. And who, through their contracted habits of ignorance, error, and hardness of heart, and the righteous judgment of God giving them up to their own lusts, have become quite insensible to the stings of conscience—committing the grossest abominations; and have voluntarily, and with full consent, delivered themselves over to the most eager delight in, desire after, and practice of the most shameful and detestable impurities.—20. But ye accepting God's call from darkness to his marvellous light have not so learned the doctrines of Christ, relative to his person, offices, and designs, or the obligations ye are under to him, and the privileges ye have received from him, as to induce or even permit you to venture on such licentious practices; 21. If, as ye profess, and I hope ye have indeed understood, hearkened to, and believed with the heart, what ye have heard from and concerning Jesus Christ, and have been inwardly and savingly enlightened and taught by his Spirit heartily to receive the truths of the gospel in their simplicity and purity, as they were delivered by him and his inspired apostles, and were exemplified in his temper

26 Be¹ ye angry, and sin not; let not the sun go down upon your wrath:

27 Neither² give place to the devil.

28 Let³ him that stole steal no more: but rather let him labour, working with his hands the thing which is good, that he may have to give⁴ to him that needeth.

29 Let⁵ no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying,⁶ that it may minister grace unto the hearers.

30 And⁷ grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby⁸ ye are sealed unto the day of redemption.

CHAPTER V.

2 After general exhortations, to love, 3 to fly fornication, 4 and all uncleanness. 7 not to converse with the wicked, 15 to walk warily, and to be 18 filled with the Spirit, 22 he descendeth to the particular duties, how wives ought to obey their husbands, 25 and husbands ought to love their wives, 32 even as Christ doth his church.

Be ye¹ therefore followers² of God, as dear children;

2 And³ walk in love, as Christ also⁴ hath and conduct, and are practised by the living members of his mystical body.—22. But that which ye have been taught, influenced, and obliged to, is to labour by his grace in the use of all appointed means more and more to discard with abhorrence, abandon and mortify that debased principle of indwelling sinfulness which discovered itself in your former practices, which vitiates all the faculties of the soul and members of the body, and of itself issues in eternal destruction, according to the working of its many impetuous inclinations, which deceive carnal hearts with false appearances of profit, honour, or pleasure.—23. And through the sanctifying influence of the Holy Ghost, to press after a further renovation of all the inward powers of your soul, and that your minds may be more and more enlightened in the knowledge of divine things, and your will and affections more and more replenished with grace and holiness: 24. And that, instead of wearing the deformity of sinful corruption any longer in sinful practices, ye may, by daily and increasing exercise of grace, clothe and adorn yourselves with all the beauties of that transcendently excellent new creature which is produced by the infinite wisdom, power, and grace of God, according to his will, and after that image of himself in which he at first created man, and which consists in real, internal, effectual, and divine principles, habits, and acts of equity and honesty towards men, and in true, not shadowy or ceremonial, purity and piety towards God.—25. Being thus taught and privileged, avoid with peculiar care the sins to which ye were formerly addicted. With abhorrence banish from you falsehood, lies, and all manner of deceit and fraud, which are so base in themselves, and so evasive of all true morality. In all your speeches and dealings with men make conscience of the strictest regard to truth; for in both civil and religious societies we are members of one body, and therefore ought always to act truly and candidly, as having a joint concern in the welfare of the whole. 26. Watch over your passions, that they may be kept under due government. Labour to restrain and regulate your anger, that it may never be causeless, excessive, or mischievous. And if at any time ye are, through temptation, hurried into sinful passion, quickly endeavour, through the gracious assistance of God, to suppress it, and be reconciled to your brother. Let it never rest in your bosom till sunset, to unfit your minds for your evening devotions, or to disturb your sleep, or rise with you the next day. 27. And that ye may not give Satan a place in your hearts, to irritate or keep up turbulent and revengeful passions, or gratify and give him an advantage against you, by your yielding to his malicious and destructive designs, stand on your guard against his temptations; whenever ye find your spirits heated, resist him, steadfast in the faith, who watches all occasions to insnare you; and take heed of giving ear to false accusers and slanderers, who, as his agents, labour to incense you against others without ground. 28. And if any of you, either before or since your conversion, have been guilty of private thefts or frauds, let them, as persons who have learned Christ, hereafter abhor every form of dishonesty; and in the station and employment in which God hath placed them, let them earn, by laborious industry and care, what, by the blessing of God, may maintain themselves and family, and even help to relieve the necessities of the poor; that thus they may become a blessing, instead of a nuisance and burden, to civil and religious communities. 29. And let no light, frothy, profane, indecent, obscene, or opprobrious language, which marks the corruption of the heart from which it proceeds, and tends to corrupt others, ever come out of your mouth; but let all your words be under the conduct of a gracious spirit, and be wise, prudent, and suited to persons, times, and places, and adapted in the way of counsel, caution, reproof, comfort, or instruction, to promote the spiritual benefit of the company you are in, and recommend true and undefiled religion to their consciences and hearts. 30. Beware lest with any of these things, so directly contrary to the holy nature, will, operations, gifts, and graces of the Holy Ghost, who loves and effects all true holiness in the souls of men, ye provoke him to withdraw his gracious presence, and deprive you of his comforts—by which ye have been plainly marked with God's image as his people, and have a blessed pledge and earnest of that full salvation which ye shall receive at death and in the last judgment. 31. And to prevent your offending him, or losing his comfortable and sealing presence, carefully avoid and abhor all rancour, severity, and sourness of temper; all furious raging and ungovernable passions; all causeless and excessive anger; all loud threatening and scolding, noisy quarrels and contentions; all railings, defamations, and backbitings, which are so dishonouring to God and injurious to men; and all malicious, spiteful, envious, and injurious thoughts or heart-burnings. 32. And in order to cherish his presence and influence, always labour, as assisted by him, to cultivate an affectionate, affable, and benevolent disposition and behaviour, taking pleasure to do offices of kindness and friendship one to another; sympathize with, and show all tenderness, pity, and mercy towards the weak, afflicted, and discouraged; frankly and freely forgive and forget those injuries which are done you by brethren, in consideration and imitation of that infinitely greater forgiveness of your manifold and aggravated transgressions, which God, in the riches of his grace, hath extended by faith in the infinitely precious obedience and death of his dear and only begotten Son.

And is not this the meaning here also? Were not sinners in a state of captivity? and are they not therefore the 'captivity' whom he 'led captive,' as it were, in delivering them from all their enemies, binding them to himself in 'cords of love,' and 'bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ,' 2 Co. 10:5. Ver. 26. Offences will arise and injuries be inflicted; and if so, it is lawful for you to 'be angry,' but you are prohibited from indulging it so as to sin against justice or mercy. C.

Ver. 27. Open no door of passion by which the enemy may enter into the heart. C.

Ver. 30. Grieve not the Holy Spirit by any of the sins previously enumerated. It avails nothing to say that this grieving is figurative. It is rather to be literally understood, by referring to the grief of Christ at the hardness of the Jewish hearts, Mar. 3:5, whereby it is seen how the Spirit that was given him without measure dictated and partook in the community of his grief, Ps. 95:10. He. 3:10. C.

REFLECTIONS.—What a credit are believers to their happy station in Christ when they are meek, patient, forbearing one another in love, and united in sentiment and affection! And deep are the obligations they are under to Christian love and unity, who are all members of the same mystical body of Christ; all animated by the same Spirit; all partakers of the same hope and heavenly inheritance; all related to and interested in the same Lord and Saviour; all agreed in the same fundamental doctrines of faith, under the same baptismal seal and engagement; and have all the same loving God and Father, who is above them all, as their Governor, and dwells in them all by his Spirit.—What blessings may we not hope for from our once crucified but now exalted Redeemer! With bounteous care he scatters his gifts among the children of men. And ample is the provision of offices, officers, gifts, and graces he has provided for his church, to promote her growth in numbers, unity, and order; and of all her members in knowledge, faith, and love; and to prevent their being seduced into error and wickedness.—But dreadful is the case of wicked men, especially when they have provoked God to give them up to their own hearts' lusts. How ignorant, how stupid, how bent and eager on the most shocking abominations, they then become!—Odious is an inward principle of sin, wherever it is found. How corrupt, abominable, and deceiving! It perverts and inflames the passions, and fills them with anger, wrath, and malice. It hurries men into deceit, falsehood, idleness, and fraud. It renders their discourse unsavoury, defiling, clamorous, and injurious; and it and its fruits gratify the devil and offend the Holy Ghost. But excellent and adorning is that inward habit or principle of grace in which believers do more and more abound. Delightfully it leads men to God, subdues their angry passions, renders them kind, tender-hearted, and ready to forgive injuries; makes them honest, upright, faithful, and industrious, and their converse godly and edifying; and excites them to a temper and conduct answerable to the dealings of the Holy Ghost, and the endearing obligations of God's superlative and forgiving kindness to them.

CHAPTER V. Ver. 1. Let therefore the astonishing kindness and forgiving mercy of God your Father and his Spirit excite you, as his beloved and loving children, sought and won by him, to imitate him in exercising all kindness and forgiveness one towards another. 2. Nor is the consideration and example of Jesus Christ less suited to engage us to a constant, progressive, friendly, and affectionate love one to another, since he has, with superlative condescension and grace, first loved all the race, and, in manifestation thereof, has freely become our Saviour, and yielded up his great and infinite Self to the most debased service and terrible death for us, as a living sacrifice to save us from sin, and reconcile us to God, to the highest honour and delight of all his perfections. 3. But to return to the warning which I had begun—in a manner becoming Christians renewed, sanctified, and devoted to God, earnestly flee, abstain from, and utterly detest every form of unchastity, and all that indecency, immodesty, and lewdness in gestures, looks, dress, or acts, that approach towards or tempt others to it; and, in like manner, avoid and detest all irregular and impure desires after forbidden objects, and inordinate love to or pursuits after the things of this world, which would make you discontented without them, or to take dishonourable or unjust methods to procure or retain them. 4. Never secretly indulge any shameful practices, nor any light, wanton, or obscene speeches or jests which offend God and tend to grieve or inflame the hearers; but let your lips be rather employed in commendations of God and Christ, and his works, and in thankful acknowledgments of and praise loved us, and hath given himself for us, an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet-smelling savour.

3 But ^afornication, and all uncleanness, or covetousness, let it not be once named amongst you, as becometh saints;

4 Neither ^afilthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient; but rather giving of thanks.

5 For this ye know, ^athat no whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man, who is an idolater, ^ahath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God.

6 Let ^ano man deceive you with vain words: for ^abecause of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience. ^a 7 Be ^anot ye therefore partakers with them.

8 For ^aye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord: ^awalk as children of light;

9 (For ^athe fruit of the Spirit ^ais in all goodness and righteousness and truth;)

10 Proving ^awhat is acceptable unto the Lord.

11 And ^ahave no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but ^arather reprove them.

for his kindness. 5. For having learned the doctrines of the Christian religion, ye cannot but know that no person who is addicted to, and lives and allows himself in, the practice of whoredom, or indulges himself in impure affections and lascivious actions; nor any worldly-minded covetous wretch, who loves, desires, and delights in his worldly enjoyments more than in God himself, be his profession what it will,—has any title to, or continuing such, can have any present or future enjoyment of Christ and his Father in his kingdom, with the glories which attend it. 6. Let no Gentile philosopher, Jewish corrupter of God's law, or any other, by their plausible, empty, and fallacious speeches, make you to think these crimes small; for, on account of them, all who obstinately persist in them shall be excluded from the heavenly kingdom of God, and be exposed to his wrath here and hereafter, which shall come rushing in full floods upon them. 7. By prayer, watchfulness, and diligence, labour therefore against these things, and never be companions, encouragers, or imitators of such persons in their iniquities, lest ye also share in their just and tremendous punishments. 8. For in your heathen and unconverted state ye were utterly ignorant of spiritual things, and walked in the dark paths of wickedness; but now the Spirit of God hath enlightened your mind to know the truth as it is in Jesus—in whom, as your Head, ye have all light, wisdom, and purity, and from whom, as his members, ye derive all knowledge and grace—it is therefore your duty and privilege, with perseverance and daily progress, to live and act before God like persons begotten of God by the light of the gospel, and enlightened and directed by the Word and Spirit of Christ. 9. Having a conversation answerable to the fruits produced and cherished by the Holy Ghost, which are directly contrary to what I have warned you against, and consist of everything kind and beneficial, and in rendering to God and men their respective dues, in a constant and steadfast adherence to the truths of the gospel, and in exact truth, integrity, and faithfulness, in all that ye say and do. 10. And by the assistance and light of the Spirit, trying and proving from the Scriptures what is well-pleasing to the Lord Christ, and heartily approving thereof, and practising it, as an evidence of your regard to it, and thus approving yourselves faithful servants and obedient children to Christ and his Father. 11. And that ye may walk as children of the light, avoid all partnership in, all countenancing or encouraging of, sinful practices, which are unprofitable and injurious, which proceed from ignorance of God, are shameful in themselves, often committed in secret, and leading to eternal misery; but by friendly, kind, and prudent admonitions of the guilty, and especially by your holy and circumspect conversation, expose their deformity, confute, reprove, and condemn them. 12. For it would put to the blush, and even shock, a religious, sober, and modest mind, so much as to mention, except in necessary reproof, several of the detestable practices which your heathen neighbours, unwilling to expose their own character, commit secretly in their idolatrous worship or otherwise. 13. But by the enlightening influence of the Word and Spirit of God, ye are enabled to discern the deformity of those sinful practices, and to live in a contrary manner—in order to convince your wicked neighbours, and shame them out of their wickedness. 14. Wherefore the Lord, in the Old Testament predictions relative to the calling of the Gentiles, plainly intimates that Christ's enlightening, quickening, comforting, and sanctifying influence is conveyed in the gospel call, and ought to be attended with your earnest endeavours to shake off your ignorance, stupidity, insensibility, and spiritual death—even as his quickening power was conveyed to dead persons in his calls to arise. 15. Take heed therefore that your whole conversation be accurate, exactly answerable to your Christian character, light, obligations, and the rule of God's Word, as under his all-seeing eye, and in view of enemies as well as friends—not as persons ignorant, injudicious, unwise, and heedless, but as those who are taught of God the truth as it is in Jesus, and who wisely avoid exposing yourselves to infamy or hurt, or giving any occasion of stumbling to others. 16. And see that, by a diligent and circumspect Christian walk, as being deeply affected with godly sorrow for your former misspending of time, you carefully improve every moment to the best advantage in the service of Christ, as if ye had dearly bought it out of the hand of sin, Satan, and the sloth, ease, and worldly business to which it was formerly devoted, and the rather as the times in which ye live are times of great immorality, ignorance, profaneness, and of persecution, trouble, and danger, in which both Jews and Gentiles wait for your halting, that they may speak evil against you, and against Jesus Christ and the gospel on your account. 17. Take heed therefore that ye no more act foolishly and inconsiderately in the matters of God and eternal salvation, nor needlessly expose yourselves to the malice and fury of your enemies, but conduct yourselves suitably to your Christian character; and endeavour, through divine grace, to live and act as those who understand and highly regard the will of Jesus Christ as the rule of the purity 12 For ^ait is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret.

13 But all things that are reprov'd ^aare made manifest by the light: for whatsoever doth make manifest is light.

14 Wherefore he ^asaith, ^a'Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light.

15 See then that ye ^awalk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, 16 Redeeming the time, ^a'because the days are evil.

17 Wherefore ^abe ye not unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord ^ais.

18 And ^a'be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be ^a'filled with the Spirit;

19 Speaking ^ato yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord;

20 Giving ^athanks always for all things unto God and the Father ^ain the name of our Lord Jesus Christ; and prudence of your conversation. 18. And to prevent your falling into imprudent or abominable conduct, carefully avoid all unseasonable or immoderate use of intoxicating liquors, which cause us in an unmanly, nay, worse than brutal manner to profane and prostitute the bounties of providence, which enfeeble, defile, and disorder all the powers of both body and soul, and prompt to babbling, blasphemy, and all manner of madness and debauchery; but let it be your great concern to be filled with the influences, gifts, graces, and comforts of the Holy Ghost, which qualify for and excite to everything prudent, holy, and pleasant. 19. And either by yourselves or in fellowship with one another express the joys of your heart in singing psalms, songs, and hymns, which ye either find in Scripture, or are composed by holy persons, or those inspired among you—to the honour of our Lord Jesus Christ, and his Father in him. 20. And always maintaining a grateful disposition of heart to God for all the mercies which ye receive—temporal, spiritual, or eternal, pleasant or painful—improve every occasion of expressing your thankfulness to God, the Father of Christ, and our Father in him, as the original source of these blessings, and through the person and mediation of Christ, who purchased and bestows them, and in whom alone our praises and prayers can be presented acceptably to God. 21. And directed, invited, and enabled by these influences of the Spirit, study a humble performance of all relative duties incumbent upon you in your natural, civil, public, or private stations of life, as persons who have the fear of God implanted in your hearts, and whose consciences are deeply awed and impressed with his authority in his Word, and with his exact observation of your conduct, and his future judgment. 22. Particularly do you believing wives pay all becoming reverence, honour, subjection, and obedience to your own husbands, who have, by the marriage-bond, devoted themselves to you, as your loving superiors; and always act herein as in the sight and presence of the Lord Christ, from love to his person, in obedience to his authority, and with an eye to his glory, and in the manner in which his people are subject to him. 23. For by the law of nature and marriage, the husband is constituted the head, guide, and guardian of the wife, in a manner somewhat similar to that in which Christ, as Mediator, is constituted the Head, Governor, and Protector of the church—in which relation he is their Saviour and Redeemer from everything sinful and wretched, and to everything truly honourable or happy. 24. As therefore the church is cheerfully and faithfully subject to tion: (1) In regard to husbands and wives; (2) Parents and children; (3) Masters and servants. P.

21 Submitting ^ayourselves one to another in the fear of God.

22 Wives, ^asubmit yourselves unto your own husbands, ^aas unto the Lord.

Ver. 23. Paul here, to prevent error or misunderstanding, adds this important particular, in which the comparison between Christ and the church on the one hand, and man and wife on the other, does not hold:—'He himself is the Saviour of the body, which he united with himself, gloried in: In Christ's case the headship is united with glory, by his having saved the body in the ship as of one entirely identical with the other; for he has a claim to it and office in it peculiar to himself.' R.

Ver. 26. And cleanse it, &c. 'And cleanse it in the laver of (spiritual) water (revealed) in the Word.' See Is. 51. 1; Mat. 5. 6; Jn. 4. 14; 6. 35. C.

Ver. 32. This is a great mystery. From this phrase the church is theologically and properly denominated the mystical, in distinction from the personal, body of Christ.—Note, The church is Christ's body, because possessing with him one life and one Spirit, Col. 3: 4; Ep. 2: 18. C.

REFLECTIONS.—With readiness ought Christians to imitate Jesus Christ and his Father in their kindness and love to men. And the faith and sense of their redeeming love should make us carefully avoid all gross wickedness of every form, as utterly unworthy of our Christian character, privileges, and obligations, and as odious to God and ruinous to ourselves. A visible change of behaviour should be studied by all such as are awakened unto life by the powerful voice of Christ. Diligently should they avoid all fellowship with wicked persons or deeds, be watchful and circumspect in evil days, and use great care to improve time to the best advantage. Great should be our concern to have our heart filled with the Holy Ghost, and to live always under his comforting influences—in everything giving thanks to Christ, and to God through him. Earnestly should we labour to fulfil the duties of every station, from a principle of faith and filial fear of God. And happy are those families of which Christ is the centre, and his redeeming kindness the great pattern and motive of mutual behaviour!

CHAPTER VI. Ver. 1. Do you children, whatever be your age and circumstances in the world, submissively, readily, and cheerfully hearken to and obey the counsels and commands of your parents in all lawful things, from love to Christ, regard to his authority, and for his glory and honour; for, according to all laws, human and divine, this is a just debt, and is highly fit and acceptable in itself, as ye have been brought into being by their means, and are so much beholden to their care and kindness. 2. Yea, the first command of the second table of the moral law, and he animates, influences, rules, governs, and cares for in the most tender manner 33. But in connection with this, it also implies that every husband ought to love his wife with the same sincere and singular affection as he does himself; and that every wife ought, with a conjugal love, to pay all becoming respect, honour, and obedience to her husband.

Ver. 4. Filthiness. Obscenity of speech.—Jesting. Lewd expressions, occasionally characterized as double entendre—in which, as Chandler well observes, 'indecenty is couched in a witty turn, and becomes, by being considered witty, the more dangerous and corrupting.'—Not convenient. Not suitable to the Christian profession of purity and godliness.

Ver. 5. In the kingdom of Christ and of God. Rather, 'in the kingdom (of him who is) Christ and God.' See Middleton on the Greek Art., ch. iii. p. 93, 94. Lond. 1808. C.

Ver. 13. "But they all (i.e. all those evil things done in secret, as mentioned in ver. 12) being reprov'd (or rebuked by contrast with the purity of Christian virtues), are made manifest (are shown to be sinful : the lurking evil is revealed) by the light (the light of Christian doctrine, Christian graces, and Christian character) : for everything that is made manifest is light (it is not, and cannot be any longer dark : and consequently though evil deeds are done in darkness, and are thus kept secret, yet if light be shed upon them, their true character at once appears)." P.

Ver. 14. The apostle does not quote the words, but gives the meaning of the prophet—referring most probably to Is. 60. 1-3; see also 26. 19.—Arise from (among) the dead. C.

Ver. 16. Redeeming. "Recovering the lost of heavendom" (Saurin). "Buying up the out of the hands of sin" (though by so many held cheap—out of the hands of Satan, ease, sloth, and worldly business—at the expense of idleness, watchfulness, zeal, and diligence" (Benson). Is it not making the most of the time, as he that sells an article to get the highest price?—Because the days are evil— Every fragment of existence being fraught with temptations to indolence, self-indulgence, ease, danger, desertion of duty:
because the continuance of opportunity is uncertain, and, at the best, the period of life is short, G.

Ver. 18. Excess. Dissoluteness, whereby the reason being overwhelmed, and the passions excited and let loose, the door of the heart is opened for the entrance of every sin. There is most probably an allusion to the Bacchanalia, when men and women, under pretence of religion, gave themselves up to intoxication and the wildest revelry. C.

Ver. 19. The distinction of 'psalms, hymns, and spiritual songs' is not perfectly understood. The names might include other compositions besides those contained in the scriptural collection called David's, but they may also be confined to that collection; and surely before they be extended farther some authority beyond conjecture must be furnished. That the Ephesian converts and other primitive Christians employed nothing but the voice in their sacred music is attested by Justin, Respond. ad Orthodox. p. 17. οὐκ ἔχοντες ὄργανον, 'without musical instruments,' is his ex-

Ver. 21. This is the general injunction applicable to all ranks and conditions. Order and complete submission to law must characterize the Christian community. Having laid down the general principle, Paul gives three examples of its practical appli-armour of God, that ye may be able to with- stand in the ¹⁵evil day, and, having done all,¹ to stand.

14 Stand therefore, ¹⁶having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness;

15 And^o your feet shod with the ¹⁷preparation of the gospel of peace;

16 Above^o all,³ taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked.

17 And take ¹⁸the helmet of salvation, and ¹⁹the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God:

the only command which has a promise annexed to itself in particular, requires every one of you to think and speak of, and conduct yourselves towards, both your parents in the most affectionate, reverential, submissive, obedient, and honourable manner; 3. That, through the blessing of God upon your obedience, your life on earth may continue long and prosperous. 4. And do you parents carefully avoid everything humour- some, unreasonable, or harsh towards your children, which might provoke their resentment, exasperate their passions, and prejudice them against you or your Christian religion; and, by a holy and diligent ex- ample, by much fervent prayer, by earnest and per- suasive instruction, and by prudent, moderate, and seasonable correction, administered to them in obedi- ence to Christ's authority, and in dependence on his blessing to concur therewith, bring them up in the knowledge, fear, worship, and obedience of God in him.—Earnestly watch over and restrain the first appearances of inward corruptions, errors, or immo- ralities, and direct and encourage them to everything dutiful towards God or men.—5. Servants, make con- science of obeying all the lawful commands of your earthly masters and mistresses, who, in things per- taining to this world, are set over you by God's pro- vidence, and have a right to your services, whether they are believers or not. Be willingly and faithfully subject to them, with a reverential fear of their, and especially of God's displeasure, if ye should betray your trust, and embezzle their goods, or disobey their just orders. And see that ye do all this with a sincere, ingenuous, and honest heart, as therein desiring and intending to serve the Lord Christ, and adorn the doc- trines of the gospel. 6. Fulfil your services with dili- gence, constancy, and fidelity—not merely when the eyes of your masters or others are upon you, as if ye only aimed at pleasing men for your own honour or advantage, but as from regard to Christ's authority, and always under his eye, and in view of being judged by him, and in order to promote his honour, doing whatever God requires of you in this matter from a sincere principle of religious regard towards him. 7. In this manner perform every part of your due service freely, affectionately, and industriously, and with all readiness of mind, as persons who love your masters, and have their interest at heart—doing everything which God or they call you to from a sense of duty to Jesus Christ, your supreme Lord and Master, that ye may serve, please, and glorify him, and not merely to acquit yourselves in the sight and gain the esteem of men. 8. And know, for your encouragement, that however your masters may reward you in this world, ye shall receive a gracious and eternal reward of all your faithful services from the Lord Jesus in the great day of judgment. 9. And ye believing masters, take heed that ye fulfil the duties of your stations with the like views, in singleness of heart as to Christ, and according to the will of God; and that ye behave towards your servants not in a domineering, severe, threatening, insolent, cruel, or oppressive manner, but with gentleness and humanity—always remembering that ye yourselves are the servants of our Lord Christ, who takes notice of your conduct, and will call you to account for it, without paying any more respect to you than to the meanest of your servants. 10. And that ye may perform your relative and other duties, and resist all the influences of sin, Satan, and the world, who labour to oppose you in your progress heaven- ward, set out and press forward, like valiant soldiers, under the Captain of salvation, not in your own strength, but in the strength of Christ, and through his almighty influences enabling you to every duty, ser- vice, and suffering to which ye are at any time called. 11. And that, while ye set out in his strength, ye may be thoroughly furnished for all encounters with your spiritual enemies, always earnestly endeavour, under a sense of their power and your own weakness and danger, to live in the constant exercise of all those graces, and use of those means, which God appoints, gives, and makes powerful for the full defence and spiritual safety of his people, that ye may be able to withstand and defeat the numerous, insinuating, fallacious, and cunning attacks of the devil and his instru- ments. 12. And great need we have of all this help; for, in our holy warfare, we ministers and others who have enlisted under Christ's banner have to engage in close and sharp contention not only with the carnal reasonings, authority, and violence of men, but with all ranks and orders of malicious, crafty, deceitful, powerful spirits who, through the permission of God, have erected an usurped empire over the minds and hearts of blinded sinners! and being in themselves most vilely and implacably wicked, make it their whole business to propagate spiritual wickedness, unbelief, pride, idolatry, error, malice, wrath, envy; and who, hovering in the air, and seated in our souls, strenuously labour to prevent our obtaining the eternal inheritance. 13. Since ye have therefore so many subtle and powerful enemies to contend with, see that ye be fully armed, and, in Jesus' strength, make a proper use of every spiritual weapon, defensive or offensive, wherewith God hath furnished you, that ye may be able to resist and overcome all these or other formidable enemies, in every day of conflict and trial. 14. In order therefore to your obtaining a glorious victory, it is necessary that, in the strength of Christ, ye, in your stations, indefatigably and incessantly, with all watchfulness, diligence, and steadfastness, keep your ground in the field of battle, having your whole man girt about with the truths of God revealed in his Word, and with sincerity and uprightness of heart and conversation, that thereby ye may be steady, resolute, and active: let your heart be protected by the sacrifice of Christ applied to your conscience, and by the daily exercise of righteousness and true holiness, which pro- ceed from faith and love. 15. And that ye may be enabled to hold out against all hardships and snares, and be ready for every encounter, let your affections and conversation be duly influenced by the doctrines, promises, encouragements, and provisions of the gospel, by which God exhibits, offers, and applies the whole peace and consolation of the new kingdom, that nothing may hurt, discompose, or embroil you. 16. But especially let a lively exercise of faith in Christ's per- son, blood, righteousness, and fullness, and the power and grace of God in him through the declarations and promises of the new kingdom, be your all-protecting shield, by which you may be enabled to silence every terrifying charge of guilt; to repel every attempt to surprise you into hard or blasphemous thoughts of God or Christ, or sudden emotions of wrath, revenge, un- chastity, or other wickedness; and to disarm of its force every furious temptation or sudden suggestion wherewith the devil may attempt to penetrate and in- fluence your soul with horror, anguish, or guilt. 17. And let the hope of eternal salvation protect you from fear in danger, and fortify you against the most furious and threatening attacks of Satan and his confederates.

And let the doctrines, promises, commands, threaten- ings, and histories of God's Word, which the Holy Ghost indited, explains, and applies, be used, in the hand of your faith, for the destruction and confusion of your spiritual enemies. 18. And as none of your efforts, or even the graces, oracles, or ordinances of God, can be effectual without the special aids of the divine Spirit, maintain always a praying frame of heart; and let all your conflicts be attended with solemn, stated, or ejaculatory prayer, in all sorts of addresses to God, and on all occasions, public or private, in the name of Christ, and by the assistance of his Spirit, and with your whole heart, for all seasonable help and direction. And while ye watch against the designs and stratagems of your enemies, and for opportunities to annoy and defeat them, watch also for convenient opportunities of spiritual influences in and gracious answers to your prayers; and continuing constant and unwearied therein, earnestly beg that God would not only avert evils from, or bestow blessings on your- selves, but also all your fellow-Christians, that they, along with you, may stand their ground in their spir- itual warfare, and more and more abound in light, grace, comfort, and holiness, to the glory of God and confusion of Satan and his instruments. 19. And par- ticularly pray for me, your faithful and affectionate apostle and friend, whose work and trials are so im- portant and difficult, and whose strength is so small, that God would relieve me from my present impris- onment, and give opportunity and ability to publish the great mysteries of the gospel, in an open, bold, plain, impartial, earnest, and successful manner; 20. That I, the graciously honoured ambassador of Christ, who am now a prisoner for preaching that gospel, may yet have opportunity, and be enabled to preach it un- dauntedly, freely, and plainly, according to the duty of my office, without molestation. 21, 22. And that ye may the better know how to order your applica- tions or thanksgivings for me, I have sent Tychicus, one of your dear Asiatic friends, and an upright, dili- gent, and laborious minister of Christ, with this letter, that he may fully acquaint you with my various suffer- ings and comforts under them, and my labours and success—that, by informing you how the Lord sup- ports, directs, and comforts me under my trials, and by his preaching the gospel to you, he may comfort your spirits, and encourage you to trust in the Lord, and persevere in his way, amidst all the opposition ye can meet with. 23. And for this end, may abundant peace with God, your own consciences, and one another, and all prosperity of soul or body, abide with you; and the most ardent love to Jesus Christ and his people, together with, and springing from, a lively exercise of faith, flourish and increase in your souls and the souls of other Christians and ministers—by special influence from God the Father, the original fountain of all new-covenant blessings, and from Jesus Christ, through whose merits and mediation they are con- veyed. 24. May the free love and favour of Christ, and of God in him, and all its blessed fruits and effects, especially in all seasonable discoveries, communica- tions, and assistances for the producing of strong and lively exercises of every grace, be richly extended to you at Ephesus, and to all others who heartily, un- feignedly, perpetually, and according to the truth and tenor of the gospel, desire, esteem, and delight in our only and complete Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ.

¶ Written from Rome unto the Ephesians by Tychicus.

Word, however, the existence of a satanic kingdom, ordered into different ranks and principalities, is explicitly declared, of which a few historic facts are recorded—such as, the deception in paradise; the afflictions of Job; the persuasion of David to number the people; the temptation of our Lord in the wilderness—which, with some others, are specimens sufficient, not to gratify a prying curiosity, yet to produce a more important result—the inculcation upon believers of constant watchfulness and earnest prayer lest they enter into temptation. C.

Ver. 16. Fiery darts were slender reeds filled with combustible materials, ignited, and shot from bows, for the purpose of burning tents, stockades, or besieged towns. These the adroit and courageous soldiers were accustomed to receive on their ordinary shields, or other defences, covered with raw and wet hides, which are said to have been sometimes saturated with alum. These 'fiery darts' form apt emblems of many of those persecutions by which believers have in all ages been assailed—persecutions sometimes against their principles, sometimes against their character, sometimes against their property, and sometimes against their lives; against all which, trust in Jesus is their only sufficient shield. See Ge. 15. 1; Ps. 5. 12; 84. 11. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Happy are those families in which parents, children, masters, and servants make Christ's law their rule, his example their pattern, his love their motive, and his honour their end, in all their conduct. Numerous and subtle are the enemies and hard the trials of every true Christian. But since they are rooted in Christ, the Captain of their salvation, his strength, and the complete armour he has provided for them, are sufficient to withstand and overcome all opposition. Happy are they who are taught of God to cleave to him, follow his direction, and improve his armour. And nothing is more useful than a vigorous faith and persevering and fervent prayer. As ministers are peculiarly exposed to temptations and troubles, they ought to have a double share in the prayers of Christians; and never will a minister's heart be actuated by the grace of God but he will be ready to pray for his people.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE EPISTLE TO THE EPHESIANS.

Having read the Epistle to the Ephesians, it is impossible to overlook how distinctly it assumes, at the close, a domestic character. The Epistle to the Romans, commencing with the deep things of God, and continuing to expound the mysteries of redemption, draws out its practical conclusions, ch. xii. xiii. xiv., in the form of the most beautiful and splendid generalities. Throughout the Epistles to the Corinthians, like general precepts are interspersed; and in the Epistle to the Galatians, in a form more condensed, ch. 5. 14-26; 6. 1-10. But in this epistle, while the general precepts of a holy morality are earnestly enforced, ch. 4. 15-32; 5. 1, 2, the domestic duties and virtues, with their motives and obligations, assume a distinct and specific form, ch. 5. 21-33; 6. 1-9. By what peculiar circumstance, in the case of the Ephesians, the apostle was led to accumulate and urge these beautiful and holy precepts, is not declared; but if conjecture may be allowed, perhaps the cause may be found in that long-continued and frequent domestic intercourse with them to which the apostle alludes, Ac. 20. 20, 31, and the deep affection towards the apostle with which that intercourse had inspired his Ephesian converts, Ac. 20. 37, 38. In writing to them, the apostle's heart was naturally carried back to their 'happy homes,' and husbands and wives, and parents and children, and masters and servants, all rose up to his recollection, and the Spirit of God employed the occasion to enrich the church with that lovely code of domestic laws by which the Epistles to the Ephesians and Colossians stand peculiarly distinguished. C.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE PHILIPPIANS.

Philippi was a considerable city on the eastern frontier of Macedonia, now part of European Turkey, which Philip, the father of Alexander the Great, enlarged, fortified, and called by his own name. Directed by a vision, Paul came hither from Asia, and planted a Christian church, Ac. xvi.; and afterwards visited them in his way to Jerusalem, Ac. 20. 1-6. Their concern for him was peculiarly affectionate; and, notwithstanding their poverty, they distinguished themselves in sending him seasonable and liberal supplies. Epaphroditus having brought him their bounty, during his imprisonment at Rome, he sent by him, upon his return, this excellent letter,—in which he expresses his great affection for them, and thankfulness for their favours; and exhorts them to constancy, courage, and perseverance under sufferings, and to public-spiritedness, humility, holy joy, fervent prayer, and diligent progress in universal holiness.

[The first name of Philippi was Datus, and it is peculiarly remarkable as the first place in Europe in which the gospel was preached. The references to the Old Testament are, Ps. 22. 6; 55. 22; Is. 40. 23; 56. 10; Je. 9. 23, 24; Da. 9. 26. C.]

CHAPTER I.

3 He testifieth his thankfulness to God, and his love toward them, for the fruits of their faith, and fellowship in his sufferings, 9 daily praying for their increase in grace: 12 he sheweth what good the faith of Christ had received by his troubles at Rome, 21 and how ready he is to glorify Christ either by his life or death, 27 exhorting them to unity, 28 and to fortitude in persecution.

CHAPTER I. Ver. 1, 2. Paul and Timothy—joint servants of Jesus Christ in ministering his gospel and promoting his kingdom and glory, to all the private Christians at Philippi who, by virtue of union with him, are renewed in their hearts and lives by the sanctifying Spirit of God, and devoted to his service; together with their spiritual overseers, who labour in doctrine or government, and their deacons, who take care of their poor and other temporal affairs of their church—earnestly wish the most abundant manifestations of divine favour, with all its distinguishing fruits and blessings, from our loving God and Father, as the Spring and Fountain of all grace, and from Jesus Christ, as the Fountain and Distributor thereof. 3-5. As often as I think of you, and what God has done for and by you, I cannot but bless him for putting me into the ministry, and making me instrumental in your conversion; and in all my stated and solemn addresses to him for each of you, I am delightfully constrained to praise and thank him for your gracious and continued admission, through faith, to all the rich and glorious privileges, promises, hopes, and enjoyments of the gospel state; and for your familiar communion with God, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, and with each other; and for your readily communicating of your substance for the support of the gospel, and to me in my sufferings for its sake; 6. Being assured, from the testimony, nature, purpose, and promise of God, and from the merits and intercession of Christ and the indwelling of his Spirit, that he who has changed your spiritual state, and begun your sanctification, honour, and comfort, will undoubtedly, in his wisdom, love, faithfulness, and power, maintain and increase it, if ye are only faithful to the truth till Christ shall come to be glorified in his saints. 7. And while you lie so much on my heart in my prayers to God for you, your patient bearing of tribulations and kind Christian sympathy with me under mine, which I suffer for the cause of Christ, together with your honourable and steadfast profession and practice of the gospel truths, make me to hope this good work of grace is really begun in most of your hearts. 8. For, affected with and in imitation of Jesus' redeeming love, God alone knows how earnestly I desire to be further instrumental in the spiritual and eternal welfare of each of you, whom I look on as his dear members. 9. And in my fervent affection I earnestly beg of him that your love to him and his Son, his Word, ordinances, ways, ministers, and people, may still more and more increase, along with and under the influence of a growing knowledge and experience of the doctrine of Christ. 10, 11. That ye may carefully examine, prove, and approve those sentiments and practices which are truly valuable and important, that so ye may be found genuine Christians—pure in heart and life, free from hypocrisy and deceit in your holy profession, and uncorrupted in your principles and designs, temper, and behaviour; and may, in the view of Christ's coming to call you to account for your conduct, constantly live in the most holy and blameless manner, doing nothing to wound your own spirits or occasion the stumbling of others—greatly abounding in the most precious fruits of all holy obedience, and in the performance of duties both to God and man, which are produced by virtue derived from Christ, and are, through his merits and intercession, acceptable to God, and tend to his honour and glory. 12-14. And that ye may not be terrified at nor discouraged by my sufferings for the cause of Christ, know that, contrary to all outward appearance or natural expectation, they have been permitted and overruled rather for the confirmation and propagation of the gospel than to the dishonour or hindrance of it, inasmuch that the hardships and imprisonment which the power and presence of Christ enable me to bear with becoming patience and fortitude, are well known among all the courtiers and citizens here to be for no immorality, but merely for the sake of Christ, and have proved the happy occasion of many inquiring after and believing in him; and, through the influence of God's grace, many of my fellow-ministers, fully satisfied of the justice and excellency of my cause, and of the remarkable support and encouragement which I have received from Christ under my troubles, have been more abundantly animated and emboldened thereby to preach the gospel with greater freedom and liberty of spirit than before. 15-17. There are indeed some Judaizing teachers who preach Christ as the true Messiah, and several important doctrines of salvation, from envy at my reputation and success in carrying the gospel in its peculiar doctrines to the Gentiles as well as the Jews, and in order to sink my credit and authority, and raise their own. Others preach the pure doctrines of Christ in their full extent, with freedom and delight, from love to him and his truths, and to the souls of men, and to me his apostle. The former, not from any sincere regard to Christ, his truths, or immortal souls, but from a contentious and envious disposition, in hopes that thereby they shall supplant, distress, or grieve me, or that, by the contentions which they foment, they may provoke the civil government to detain me in prison or take away my life. But the latter, from a principle of love to me, as well as to the truth itself, accounting me one appointed and qualified of God, and even imprisoned and tried for maintaining and defending the gospel of Christ. 18. But however different the motives by which the preachers here are actuated, I am heartily glad, and hope always to be so, that the truths of Christ are preached, and himself made known to multitudes by that means. 19. For I know, from the promises of God, the revelations of his Spirit, and my own former experience, that, through your prayers for me, and the rich communications of the Spirit of Christ granted me in answer to them, that the very worst designs of my opposers shall be overruled for promoting my deliverance from prison, and be sanctified to my own and others' spiritual and eternal advantage. 20. And I firmly hope, as well as earnestly desire, that whatever my adversaries may design or do against me, I shall never be ashamed of Christ or his truths, but be enabled to go on in his work with all liberty of spirit and undaunted courage; and as, since my call to the apostleship, I have, through grace, acted to the honour of Christ, my great Master, I trust that, now and hereafter, he will, even in my weak, frail body, manifest the greatness of his power and grace, whether by my patient continuance under suffering, my further publication and defence of the gospel, and my holy life and conversation, or by my bravely owning and honouring him in enduring the most cruel and violent death for his sake. 21. For Christ, my ALL IN ALL, who lives in me, and to whom I look as the source of spiritual life, is my gain in living and dying; and the glory of his name, and the winning of souls to him, is the end which I pursue in both; and death, after living in, on, and to him, would but usher me into the unspeakable reward of eternal felicity. 22. But if it please God to lengthen out my days on earth to preach and suffer for the gospel, it will promote the honour and interest of Christ, which in the end will turn to my own account; so that, were I to be left to my determination, I can hardly say whether I would choose life or death. 23, 24. For I am indeed greatly straitened and pressed in my own mind, having, on the one hand, an earnest desire to be loosed from my present encumbrances, weakness, and imperfections, and to have my soul released from this frail body, that I may enter on the immediate views and full enjoyment of Jesus Christ my Lord; and, on the other, I am willing, if it please God, to continue for a while exercising my ministry on earth, as I believe this would be most for your spiritual advantage amidst the manifold enemies and temptations which surround you. 25, 26. In this persuasion, that my future ministrations might, by the blessing of God, be useful, I am not without intimations from the Spirit of God that, notwithstanding the present threatening aspect, my life shall be for a time preserved, that by my preaching, prayer, or example, I may be instrumental in promoting your and others' edification in knowledge, faith, comfort, and holiness; and that, by my wonderful deliverances from prison, and the benefits ye receive by my visit, preaching, and converse, your delightful glory in Jesus Christ, the only Saviour, may be more abundant than ever. 27, 28. Meanwhile, to manifest the truth of your faith, and to promote your own and my comfort, take the most earnest and special heed that your traffic and behaviour in the world be answerable to your Christian state and character, and suitable to 'the directions, and ornamental to the principles, privileges, and obligations of the gospel of Christ, and to your holy profession thereof—that whether I should ever in this life see you again or not, I may have comfortable accounts of your spiritual concerns; that notwithstanding all the subtle and furious attempts of your enemies, under the influence of the Holy Ghost ye may persevere unshaken in one and the same evangelical spirit of liberty, truth, and love, and concur in vigorous efforts for preserving, propagating, and defending the pure, uncorrupted, and important doctrines of faith delivered in the gospel, and for rendering the grace of faith in one another lively and steadfast; and may hear that, however artful, cruel, and outrageous the adversaries of your souls and Christian profession be, ye behave amidst all their attacks with a truly Christian courage and fortitude—which to them is not a mark of your obstinacy, but an awful token that they are on the way to everlasting destruction; and to you is an evidence that God, who calls you to these trials, will tenderly carry you through unto eternal salvation! 29. For, to your distinguished honour, God, on account of Christ's merits, not only calls you to believe in him to the saving of your souls, but also patiently, and aiming at his glory, to suffer for his cause, that ye may be more illustriously glorified together with him hereafter: 30. In which ye are exercised with no other combat of trials and troubles than I myself have experienced even among you, and still am under, and yet am enabled, through grace, to sustain with holy fortitude and patience, for the same glorious cause.

Ver. 4. Let this apostolic memorandum impress upon every Christian's spirit the duty and extent of intercessory prayer. How expressive are the words, 'Always!'—'in every prayer!'—'for you all.' C.

Ver. 10. Sincere. The English word literally signifies 'without wax'—in allusion to the finishing of cloth with gummy materials, that fill up and hide their deficiencies till carefully examined by looking through them in sunlight.—The Greek might be translated 'sun-judged.' C.

Ver. 11. The fruits of righteousness. Fruits of that justification which springs from 'the righteousness of God,' Ro. 3:21, 22; which are chiefly 'peace of conscience, joy in the Holy Ghost, growth in grace, and perseverance therein unto the end.' C.

Ver. 15. Some indeed preach Christ even of envy and strife. Envyng Paul's popularity, they suppressed their own Judaizing sentiments, and adopted his theme—Christ—that so they might raise up opposition to him, and transfer his influence to themselves. C.

Ver. 16. Either by strengthening the hands of his adversaries, or, as many, both ancient and modern, think, these contentious preachers sought to have severity of treatment added to confinement. But how their preaching of Christ could effect this object does not appear. C.

Ver. 19. The supply or 'leading' of that Holy Spirit from whom your prayer proceeds. C.

Ver. 21. This is a sentence of confessed difficulty, of which two views are taken by expositors. 'The apostle's meaning,' says Valpy, 'is not that Christ was his life, and death his gain; but that both in life and death Christ was his gain;' in which view he is supported by Beza's translation, Pierce, &c. On the other hand, Bloomfield, following Chrysostom and Theodoret, explains it thus: 'For as to me, to live if I live; will be Christ (he will be my life, in him I shall live); and (if I die) to die will

12 But I would ye should understand, brethren, that the things which happened unto me have¹ fallen out rather unto the furtherance of the gospel;⁹

13 So that *my bonds in Christ*¹ are manifest in all the palace,² and in all other places;³

14 And many of the brethren in the Lord, waxing⁴ confident by my bonds, are much more bold to speak the word without fear.

16 The⁶ one preach Christ of contention, not sincerely, supposing to add affliction to my bonds;⁴

17 But the other of love, knowing that I am set for the defence of the gospel.

18 What then? notwithstanding,⁵ every way, whether⁶ in pretence or in truth, Christ is preached; and I therein do rejoice, yea, and will rejoice.

19 For⁴ I know that this shall turn to my salvation through your prayer, and the supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ, 20 According⁹ to my earnest expectation and my hope, that in nothing I shall be ashamed, but¹ that with all boldness, as always, so now also, Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life, or by death.

of this passage is somewhat difficult. The idea embodied in this:—Paul in ver. 21 speaks of death only in a personal point of view. He had so many troubles in life, and so much hope in Christ, that death would be a gain. But then the thought of Christian duty, and the service he owed to his Master, comes in, to show that such a view as he had taken of death was selfish. He therefore says:—But to live in the flesh is to me the fruit of my labour, i.e. if by living I shall be able to do more work for Christ in his kingdom here: then I am in a strait, &c.—P.

a desire to depart, and to be with Christ; which is far better:

24 Nevertheless to abide in the flesh is more needful for you.

25 And having this confidence, I know that I shall abide and continue with you all, for your furtherance and joy of faith:

29 For unto you it is given in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake;

30 Having the same conflict which ye saw in me, and now hear to be in me.

CHAPTER II.

1 He exhorteth them to unity, and to all humbleness of mind, by the example of Christ's humility and exaltation: 12 to a careful proceeding in the way of salvation, that they be as lights to the wicked world, 16 and comforts to him their apostle, who is now ready to be offered up to God. 19 He hopeth to send Timothy to them, whom he greatly commendeth, 25 as Epaphroditus also, whom he presently sendeth to them.

be gain (since I shall be relieved from trouble).¹ But as mere release can be no gain, might not this view be better stated thus: 'To me to live is Christ (living in me), to die is gain (for I die but to live with him)'. See Phil. 1.23. C.

Ver. 28. To the blaspheming Jews and persecuting Gentiles your firmness appears obstinacy and madness, and 'a token of (your) perdition'; but to you the grace of patience, which you feel to be the gift of God, is an evident token of your final salvation. C.

REFLECTIONS.—In great kindness hath Christ furnished his church with all needful officers to take care of their spiritual and temporal concerns. Hopeful are daily fervent prayers for necessary blessings to such as are sanctified in Christ; and thrice happy those churches wherein all the members appear such. The free favour of Christ and his Father flows out delightfully in their spiritual peace, and to bless the work begun in their hearts. It is very refreshing for ministers to observe their hearers walking in the fellowship of the gospel, and unitedly increasing and abounding in sincerity, light, love, and holy conversation, to the glory of God through Christ, and as a mean of preparing them for his great coming.—For deep is the concern which faithful ministers have for the spiritual edification and comfort of their hearers; and great is the delight they take to share with them in it, and to help in promoting it!—Alas! that ever the gospel of God's grace and salvation should be preached from envy or contention! But how amiable when it is preached with fidelity, and with sincere affection to Christ, and to his servants, people, and cause. It is very encouraging when God makes the sufferings of his ministers to turn out for the spread and success of the gospel. And honourable is it when they rejoice to be debased that Christ may be exalted and souls edified; and, through love to him, are in a strait whether they should desire the immediate enjoyment of Christ, or for a time to continue in a suffering state on earth for the service of his church. Thrice happy is it when, through Jesus' merits and grace, the prayers of Christians draw down rich supplies of grace on their ministers; and when, with remarkable unanimity, they cordially believe, boldly profess, uprightly practise, and are ready cheerfully to suffer for the truth!—What fearful ruin must await the adversaries of such!

CHAPTER II. Ver. 1, 2. By all the exhortations which have been delivered to you in the name of Christ, and by all the consolations which you have in or from him, or would occasion to me; by all the joy you have had, or can have, in his love to you, or in yours to him, or to one another for his sake, or in your or my mutual love; by all that holy fellowship which you and I have in the special influences, gifts, and graces of the Holy Ghost, or with one another, as members of Christ's mystical body; by all the inexpressible grace and tender mercies of God manifested in your heart by his Spirit; and by all the reality, worth, pleasure, obligation, or endearment in those things which you have experienced,—I beseech you to increase my comfort and joy, in more and more abundantly uniting with me, and with one another, in mind and heart, in joint love to Jesus Christ and everything that is his, and in joint pursuits of the same design for promoting his honour and the edification of souls, and in a joint view and relish of the doctrines of the gospel, in opposition to judaizing preachers. 3. Take heed that nothing be said or done among you from a litigious ostentation, a self-conceited temper or desire of applause; but in your church assemblies, and in all your conversation, behave with the deepest humility and modesty, being always ready to condescend to persons of the lowest degree, and to think and speak better of others, who walk in a becoming manner, than of yourselves—duly affected with a sense of your own failings, and casting a veil of love upon the defects of other Christians. 4. And in order to attain this excellent disposition, let every one of you beware of a narrow selfish spirit, magnifying your own endowments, or of principally aiming at your own honour, ease, and secular interests; but let every one, actuated by a general public spirit, consult and study what tends to the general edification, peace, comfort, and advantage of others, spiritual or temporal. 5. For, in opposition to strife, vainglory, and self-seeking, the same spirit of meekness, humility, and love ought to prevail in you which was so perfectly and conspicuously exemplified in our Lord Jesus Christ; 6-8. Who, though, as the eternal and only begotten Son of God, he was necessarily possessed of all divine perfections, and justly claimed a sameness of nature and equality of person with his eternal Father, nevertheless, by an act of infinite condescension, disrobed, and, as it were, emptied himself of his appearances of that divine majesty and glory of which he is necessarily and perpetually possessed; and that he might be his Father's bond-servant, living, acting, bleeding, and dying according to his commandment, and go through the most painful, humbling, and difficult services of our redemption, assumed a true and real human nature into personal union with his divine; and being found in the common form and condition of men, as well as in their law room and stead, he submitted to the lowest degree of service and suffering, humbly obeying his parents and magistrates in everything lawful; yea, obeying his Father in fulfilling the precepts and bearing the penalty of his holy law, and that even unto the ignominious, painful, and accursed death of the cross. 9-11. But having fulfilled his work of redemption in this humble, obediential, and suffering manner, God his Father, working also, gloriously exalted him, not by adding anything to his essential happiness, perfection, or glory, but by raising him as man from the dead, receiving him up into heaven, setting him at his own right hand, and giving him universal dominion as God-man Mediator, and a new title of honour and having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind.

3 Let^a nothing be done through strife or vainglory; but in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves.¹

4 Look^e not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others.

5 Let^g this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus:

6 Who, ^hbeing in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God;

authority as Lord and Saviour, incomparably superior to any other name, dignity, or authority among creatures—that all intelligent beings, angels or men, good or bad, might, either now or in the last judgment, voluntarily adore, worship, and submit to him, or be constrained publicly to submit to him, as their supreme Judge; and that men of all nations and languages might, either cheerfully or by constraint, be made to acknowledge him as Mediator God-man, to be the great Head, Lord, and Ruler over all, and the universal Judge of the world, to the glory of God the Father, who, in infinite wisdom and mercy, appointed him to this dignity, as his honorary Servant under himself. 12. Since therefore the beauties of holiness and humility, and the infinite importance of your salvation, have been so conspicuously and affectingly exemplified in Jesus Christ, I entreat and hope that, as when I was present among you, to observe, assist, and admonish you, ye were obedient to my words, and have been much more since I left you, so ye will more and more abound in the diligent exercise and assiduous practice of the forementioned, and all other graces and duties necessary in the nature of things, and by the appointment of God, for the final accomplishment of that salvation which is yours by faith and the love of the Father, the death of the Son, and application and earnest of the Holy Ghost; and that not with a servile, distrustful, and desponding dread, but with a holy, filial, and awful reverence of the divine Majesty, and a cautious fear of sinning against him, and humble dread of provoking his frowns or chastisements. 13. For to encourage your diligence, and prevent your pride and carnal security, remember that the same God of all grace who has begun the good work in your souls through your faith, doth carry it on in like manner, and not for any desert of yours, but because of his compassion and grace, with infinite pleasure and delight, he excites, inclines, and persuades your will, and enables you with freedom and cheerfulness to perform those things that relate to your salvation. 14. In dependence therefore upon his gracious operations in you, study in your whole conduct to avoid all discontent at the prosperity of others, or the disposals of Providence; and all animosities and wrangling disputations one against another, or against what God in his providence calls you to do or suffer for Christ's sake; 15. That, as children of God, and not of the devil, ye may in reality, as well as appearance, be unprovable and inoffensive in your temper and conversation, and sincere in your dealings with God and men, that there may be no just occasion of complaint or accusation against you, or any room to revile and censure you, while ye live in the midst of Jews and Gentiles, exceedingly depraved in their minds and manners, and perversely turned aside from the right ways of the Lord—among whom ye Christians are, or ought to be, shining lights and illustrious examples, for their conviction, direction, or pattern, that, seeing your good works, they may glorify your Father which is in heaven. 16. Holding fast to yourselves, and holding forth to all around you, Christ, who is our life; and the glorious doctrines of that gospel which reveals, offers, and is the mean of conferring spiritual and eternal life—that, according to my hope, I may rejoice in your steadfastness, usefulness, and eternal salvation, when, at Christ's blessed coming, we shall appear together in his presence; and may find that my pains and labours have, by the grace of God, issued in his glory and your happiness. 17. Nay, if God, for the confirmation of your faith and that of other believing Gentiles who are offered up as an acceptable sacrifice to himself, sanctified by the Holy Ghost, should call me, his prisoner, to undergo the most cruel sufferings and death, I do and should rejoice and glory therein. 18. And if ye hear of my martyrdom, I beg that ye will rejoice with and congratulate me on the honour of such a death, since it will bear the most noble testimony to the Lord Jesus and his gospel, and tend to the further encouragement and establishment of your faith in him. 19. But notwithstanding all that I have said about my willingness to die for these great purposes, I at present humbly hope and trust that, through the care and kindness of the Lord Jesus, who has all power in heaven and earth, I shall be quickly able to spare my dear brother Timothy, and send him to visit you, and help you in your spiritual concerns; and that I may have the satisfaction to hear from him that the work of the Lord prospers among you, and that the subtle judaizing teachers have not been able to pervert you. 20. And my reason for sending him is, that I have here no fellow-labourer so like myself in temper, ministration, behaviour, and love to you, and who with the like genuine, tender, and parental affection will lay your concerns to heart, and carefully study to promote your establishment and edification. 21. For the generality of those with me are too selfish and feeble-minded, rather solicitous about their own temporal ease, honour, profits, or safety, than willing to expose themselves to such fatigues, dangers, and reproaches as they might possibly be called to undergo in promoting the interests, cause, and glory of our great Lord and Saviour, and the welfare of his church amongst you. 22. But ye have had sufficient trial and proof of his eminent qualifications, faithfulness, courage, and zeal; and that, as a son, he has been always ready to engage with me in any work or warfare, or cheerfully go wherever and do whatever I desired him. 23. Him therefore I hope to send to you as soon as I shall have taken my trial at Caesar's bar, and know whether I am to die or live, to remain a prisoner or be discharged. 24. Nay, I trust in the Lord Jesus, whose I am and whom I serve, and for whose sake I am in bonds—that, by his gracious and overruling providence, I shall be acquitted, and visit you myself. 25. Nevertheless, I thought it necessary, for your edification and comfort, to send back with this letter Epaphroditus, who is my brother in the Christian faith and ministerial office, and fellow-labourer and soldier under Christ, our Captain of salvation in our spiritual work, and in our warfare against sin, Satan, and the seducers and powers of this world; and who, as your minister and messenger, has faithfully and kindly supplied me with your generous benefaction. 26. And I the rather chose to send him, as he is extremely desirous of seeing you again, being exceedingly afflicted in his own mind that your hearing of his sickness would occasion so much grief and distress to you. 27. For indeed his sickness was such that we despaired of his life; but our prayer-hearing God, whose prerogative it is to kill and to make alive, brought him back from the gates of death, which was a great mercy, not only to him, in the restoration of his health and his further capacity for usefulness, but also to you and others, particularly myself, as the loss of so dear and valuable a friend and brother would have been a great addition to the trouble which his sickness and my own confinement gave me. 28. I therefore despatched him back to you with the greater care and speed, that, when you

8 And being found in fashion as a man, ^{he} humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross.

9 Wherefore God also ^{hath} highly exalted him, and given him ^a name which is above every name:

10 That^p at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth;

11 And that every tongue should confess ^qthat Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.

12 Wherefore, my beloved, ^ras ye have always see him again in full health, ye may have fresh comfort, and, by the renewed usefulness of his labours among you, my own mind may be comforted under my troubles, and for the want of him. 29. Receive him therefore as a servant of Christ, and for his sake, with all spiritual joy, as well as with humane, civil, and friendly affection; and let him, and all such faithful labourers in the gospel, be esteemed very highly, and treated with great honour, for their work's sake. 30. For it was by the fatigue he underwent in the service of Christ, in love to him, and zeal for his interest and glory, that he contracted that illness which brought him so near the point of death—neglecting his own body, and hazarding his own life, that he might preach to such as I could not come to in my confinement, and might attend and assist me in your name.

Ver. 1. Consolation under the sufferings endured for his sake. C.

Ver. 4. The injunction does not direct attention to the affairs of others in preference to or in conjunction with our own (for with the affairs of others it is generally imprudent to interfere); but it directs attention to the good qualities, gifts, and endowments of others—not to the exclusion of, but in comparison with, our own, so that vanity, pride, and selfishness may be repressed and extirpated. C.

Ver. 6. Who being in the form of God. Inasmuch as 'the form of a servant' (ver. 7) clearly implies that Christ was a servant, so 'the form of God' must equally imply that he was God. Thought it not robbery. Did not count it an act of usurpation. C.

Ver. 7. Made himself of no reputation. Emptied himself—divested himself of his visible divine glory. C.

Ver. 8. Became obedient unto death. Not as if his obedience was rendered to death as a power; but through life, and till death, as a limit—that is, from the incarnation till death inclusive. C.

Ver. 9. Given him a name. Neither the name of Jesus, nor Lord, nor any other appellation; but a dignity and authority above all principalities and powers of earth or heaven. C.

Ver. 10. At the name. Rather, 'in the name,' as the only plea of pardon and acceptance to sinners, and of glorying to saints and angels. Jn. 14. 13. Ac. 4. 12. Col. 3. 17. Re. 5. 11-14. Things. This word is erroneously supplied from Tindal's translation. The word supplied should be 'beings,' as in all the best versions ancient and modern. C.

Ver. 12. Salvation simply signifies 'deliverance,' either from the suffering of disease or the power of enemies. See, for the first application, Ac. 4. 9-12; for the second, Lu. 1. 74, 77. The believer therefore 'works out his own salvation,' either by submissively receiving these spiritual remedies which Christ the great Physician furnishes for the disease of sin, Mat. 9. 12, by resisting and warring with the enemies of his soul, Ep. 6. 13, and by mortifying, through the Spirit, the deeds of the body, that he may live, Ro. 8. 13. The work therefore is his, not as a thing that he either would do or could do, but as a work that grace begins, carries on, and completes, in him and by him. C.

Ver. 15. Harmless. Untainted with the vices of the world. C. Ver. 17. The sacrifice and service of your faith. 'The sacrifice' of your prejudices, your friendships, your honours, your possessions. 'The service' of your devotedness, your liberality, and godliness. C.

Ver. 20. Like-minded with myself—no second-self like him. C. Ver. 21. All. Not 'all' universally, but all whom the apostle could then commend for the mission. C.

Ver. 27. He was sick nigh unto death. The miraculous power of healing not being unlimited—else Paul had healed Epaphroditus, as he had healed others—but directed by the will of the Holy Spirit, not so generally for the relief of the saints as for the conviction of unbelievers. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The comforts and influences of real religion should stir us up to Christian unity, affection, humble condescension, and tender care for the edification of others, particularly our brethren in Christ. And a most endearing example, and powerfully-constraining motive hereof, is his infinite condescension, self-debasement, and suffering for us. But his glorious advancement to his Father's right hand, having all power given him in heaven and in earth, is a delightful earnest and blessed mean of the exaltation of humble souls. And infinite is the obligation we have to contemplate, obeyed, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence, 'work out your own salvation with 'fear and trembling.³

13 For^a it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do ^{of his} good pleasure.

14 Do^a all things without murmurings and disputings;

17 Yea,⁴ and if I be offered⁶ upon the sacrifice and service of your faith, I joy, and rejoice with you all.

18 For the same cause also ^{do} ye joy, and rejoice with me.

19 ^{But} I trust in the Lord Jesus to send Timotheus^b shortly unto you, that I also may be of good comfort, when I know your state.

* Carry on to completion' is a more accurate rendering of the Greek. There is no allusion whatever here to justification; it is the gradual process of sanctification. Paul urges the Philippians to prosecute with fear and trembling, i.e. with great anxiety, solicitude, and distrust of their own powers. The success of this work can only be effectually carried on by the indwelling power of God.—For God is he who effectually worketh in you (in your mind) to will and (in your life and conduct) to do.—P.

22 But ye know the proof of him, that, ^{as} a son with the father, he hath served with me in the gospel.

23 Him therefore I hope to send presently, so soon as I shall see how it will go with me.

24 But ^I trust in the Lord⁹ that I also myself shall come shortly.

25 Yet I supposed it necessary to send to you ^{Epaphroditus}, my brother, and companion in labour, and fellow-soldier, but your messenger, and he that ministered to my wants.

26 For he ^{longed} after you all, and was full of heaviness, because that ye had heard that he had been sick.

27 For indeed he was ^{sick} nigh unto death: but God had mercy on him; and not on him only, ^{but} on me also, lest I should have sorrow upon sorrow.

28 I sent him therefore the more carefully, that, when ye see him again, ye may rejoice, and that I may be the less sorrowful.

29 Receive^a him therefore in the Lord with all gladness; and hold such in reputation.¹

30 Because for ^{the} work of Christ he was nigh unto death, not regarding his life, to supply your lack of service toward me.

admire, love, adore, and serve him. With humble caution, self-diffidence, reverence of God, and holy diligence, should believers attend to the things which relate to their own salvation. And hopeful is their labour when God is ever present with them to excite and assist them. And Christians have great need, for the honour of Christ, for the comfort of his ministers, and for the sake of the world around them, always to study a humble, holy, and inoffensive conversation.—Alas! that in the best of times so many ministers and professed Christians should be so selfish and corrupt. But it is delightful to see them striving to outdo one another in care, sympathy, love, and readiness to do or suffer for one another's edification and comfort.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 1. After all, my dear Christian brethren, make it your constant study to rejoice and glory in the Lord Jesus, his person, offices, relations, and blessings, as altogether excellent in themselves, and by the gospel given and applied to your hearts. This will support your spirits under trouble, and prevent your seduction by judaizing teachers.—And, without any irksomeness, I repeat the admonitions which I formerly gave you, as I find it necessary for your establishment and edification. 2. Beware of all flattering, malicious, mischievous, and dividing preachers, particularly those of the judaizing kind, who, with all their boastings of circumcision, are extremely disgraceful and hurtful to the church, tearing it asunder, and cutting themselves and others off from Jesus Christ. 3. For we who are true believers in Christ are the very reverse of such—being truly circumcised and renewed in our hearts, and truly instated in favour with God; and accordingly we worship him, not by ceremonial rites and carnal ordinances, but with our whole souls, in the exercise of all spiritual graces, under the direction and influence of the Holy Ghost, and with abundant joy triumph in Jesus Christ, as our only Mediator, righteousness, and ground of acceptance and hope; while we renounce all dependence upon and expectation of favour with God on account of circumcision, or any other Jewish ordinance, or anything we have or can do in performing the righteousness of the law by natural principles. 4-6. None of the judaizing teachers have more ground to boast of these carnal privileges than I myself.—I was duly circumcised on the eighth day, according to God's appointment.—I am no proselyte from among the Gentiles, but a true native Israelite, descended from Jacob, by his beloved Benjamin, the son of Rachel his dearest wife.—I am of a tribe which furnished the first king to God's peculiar people, and which did not, with the other ten, revolt to Jeroboam and his idolatrous worship. I am a Jew of pure extraction, both by my father and mother, and one who used the Hebrew language in our synagogue worship. I was, by education and profession, one of the strictest sect for observation of the laws of God and traditions of the elders.—I was so zealous for the ceremonial ordinances that I furiously persecuted the Christians because their principles and professions were contrary to mine; and so sincere and careful an observer of the moral and ceremonial laws, that neither my neighbours nor my own conscience could charge me with any flagrant or willful transgression thereof. 7. But how advantageous soever I once did, or any carnal Jew may still, reckon these things for recommending to God's favour, or entitling to heaven, I was no sooner enlightened by his Spirit, and called by his grace, than I saw them all misguiding, empty, and insufficient, and that my dependence thereon was inexpressibly hurtful; and so I abandoned them all as nothing, and worse than nothing, when relied on in competition with Jesus Christ. 8. And now, after many years' knowledge and experience of the way of salvation by him alone, I still, with the greatest assurance, reckon these, and all possible worldly enjoyments, and even all my religious and moral services since my conversion, to be but loss in comparison of the superabundantly more important, real, and experimental knowledge of Jesus Christ my Lord, in his person, offices, relations, fulness, and work: for the sake of and in comparison with whom, I have renounced and parted with all other things; and I do count them but dung, dregs, or dogs'-meat, in point of justification and substantial happiness—that I may gain the complete enjoyment of Christ and all his saving benefits: 9. And that, in the day of death and judgment, I may be found dwelling in him as my city of refuge, united to him as my spiritual Head, and comprehended in him as my representative; and so may stand and be judged before God, not according to my own personal righteousness, but as clothed with that righteousness which does now indeed consist in faith, either as in habit or act, and is received as the free gift of God, by faith in Christ—even that righteousness of the purity of his human nature, his obedience of life, and atoning sufferings and death, by which he fully met the law and justice of God in our stead, and which God appoints, accepts, offers, and imparts to us, to discharge us from guilt and condemnation, and entitle us to eternal life in believing. 10. And that, even in this world, I may have an experimental growing acquaintance with him, in the glory of his person and offices, and in the efficacious virtue of his resurrection, as the Head of his mystical body, for confirming my joyful hopes of eternal life on the ground of it, for animating me to the most vigorous holy obedience in conformity to him, and in preparing me for the blessedness of heaven; and that I, in holy fellowship with him in his sufferings, by faith, may be enabled to crucify my inward sinfulness till it be utterly destroyed, and may patiently endure sufferings and death for his sake; 11. That, by these and other means of God's appointment earnestly practised, I may, in the general resurrection of the dead, arrive at the harbour of eternal rest, being raised up in glory, and admitted into the perfect and inexpressible blessedness which is prepared for believers. 12. I have not as yet indeed received the prize for which I run; nor am I sufficiently prepared by holiness for the crown of righteousness; but I eagerly pursue my course, that, in God's time and way, I may reach that perfection, and lay hold on that eternal life, for the attainment of which Jesus Christ, by his power and grace, laid hold on me in the way to Damascus, plucked me as a brand out of the fire, and took possession of me for himself. 13. 14. Whatever your judaizing preachers or others may pretend, I freely acknowledge that I do not reckon myself to have attained perfect holiness any more than perfect happiness; but, fixing mine eyes upon it as the mark which I have in view, without valuing myself upon either my judaism or even my past advances in holiness, as an earnest racer I press forward to that perfection which is necessary to my receiving that eternal glory to which God has from heaven divinely called me, and every true believer, by Christ Jesus, and which is obtained only in and through him. 15. Let therefore as many of us as have all the essential parts of the new nature formed in us to a much greater degree than it is in weak believers, attend to this main point of counting all things but loss and dung to win Christ, to be found in him, and thoroughly to be conformed to him; and if, in other matters of less importance, any of you should have different apprehensions, God will in due time discover the truth to you. 16. It is nevertheless necessary that we hold fast whatever truths we have already embraced and professed; and that, in the exercise of all that knowledge, grace, and holiness which we have attained, we should, with the greatest exactness and harmony, think and act according to the plain revelations of Scripture. 17. In your whole principles and practice study therefore, with one accord,

CHAPTER III.

1 He warneth them to beware of the false teachers of the circumcision, 4 showing that himself hath greater cause than they to trust in the righteousness of the law: 7 which notwithstanding he counteth as dung and loss, to gain Christ and his righteousness, 12 therein acknowledging his own imperfection. 15 He exhorteth them to be thus minded, 17 and to imitate him, 18 and to decline the ways of carnal Christians.

FINALLY, my brethren, 'rejoice in the Lord. To^b write the same things to you, to me indeed is not grievous, but for you it is safe.

2 Beware^c of dogs, beware of evil-workers, beware of the concision.

3 For we are ^athe circumcision, which worship God in the Spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh:

4 Though ^aI might also have confidence in the flesh. If any other man thinketh that he hath whereof he might trust in the flesh, I more:

5 Circumcised^d the eighth day, of the stock of Israel, of the tribe of Benjamin, an Hebrew of the Hebrews; as touching the law, a Pharisee;

6 Concerning^e zeal, persecuting the church; touching the righteousness which is in the law, blameless.¹

7 But what things were ^again to me, those I counted loss for Christ.

1 Paul speaks here of the position which, as a Jew, he occupied in the estimation of his brethren the Jews. He does not speak of his righteousness in relation to God: that was not before him. As a Jew of pure blood, of legal knowledge, of fanatical zeal, of perfect conformity to legal requirements—he had no superior. And yet all these distinctions he threw aside as worthless when compared with Christ.—P.

to imitate me and my faithful brethren in the ministry, whom the Lord has led into the spirituality and light of the New Testament dispensation. 18, 19. And this I recommend to you with the greatest earnestness and care, to prevent your being misled by judaizing teachers; for they and many other professors—as I often warned you while I was with you, and now again assure you, with deep concern and grief for the dishonour done to Christ and hurt to the souls of men—whatever their pretences be, are, from an aversion to take up their cross and follow Christ, both doctrinally and practically, inveterate enemies to the fundamental article of salvation through active faith alone, and their wickedness shall issue in their everlasting destruction; and even now they have nothing but the gratification of carnal views and pleasures for their principal aim and chief good, in opposition to God and his glory; and, boasting of their shameful doctrines and success, under all their religious professions, they attend to, relish, and pursue after nothing but mean, empty, uncertain, unsatisfying, and defiling earthly enjoyments. 20. Never follow nor imitate such corrupt and pernicious leaders, but make up your pattern, whose tempers and conduct are quite the reverse; for, being citizens of the heavenly Jerusalem, our hearts and affections are set upon things above, and carry on a constant correspondence with Father, Son, and Holy Ghost—looking, longing, and hoping for Christ's descent from thence at the last day to receive us to himself: 21. Who will then transform these vile and mortal bodies of ours—which for the present are so marked with weakness, weariness, or disease, and are clogs and hindrances to the spiritual and holy exercises of our soul, and which will be quickly rotten and corrupted in the grave—into the beautiful resemblance of his own most glorious body, by the working of that almighty power by which he is able to overcome every difficulty, and entirely subdue under himself every enemy, death not excepted.

Ver. 2. Beware of dogs. Rather, 'the dogs,' 'the evil workers.' The judaizing teachers are so emblematically called, either because they prowled or hunted like dogs in search of prey, or because they professed to be watchful as dogs in guarding against the apostle, whom they misrepresented as a robber. In the former sense it would be a term of reproach, which the apostle would scarcely use; in the latter, a self-chosen title, which he was therefore at liberty to employ. This circumstance renders the latter interpretation the more probable. C.

Ver. 5. An Hebrew of the Hebrews. A genuine Hebrew both by father and mother, without any admixture of foreign blood. C. Ver. 7. The word translated 'loss' is applied to loss in trade, and especially to that kind of voluntary loss which is incurred by casting wares overboard to lighten and save a sinking ship. C. Ver. 11. If by any means. Rather, 'in order that by any means (or sacrifice) I might attain to the resurrection from among the dead"—the resurrection that selects the justified for everlasting glory. C.

Ver. 12. Attained—had reached the goal, as in a race, and gained with the allotted honours.—I am apprehended. The apostle describes himself as 'apprehended of Christ' because he did not enter his service willingly, but was laid hold of with a gracious violence, and impressed, as it were, into the service of his Lord. C.

Ver. 14. High calling. Rather, 'of God calling from on high;' or, 'calling me on high.' See Col. 3.1, 2. C.

Ver. 15. Perfect. Of full growth, of men, and not children, in Christian knowledge. That it cannot mean moral perfection, is evident from ver. 16.—Be thus minded to press toward the mark, ver. 14.—Otherwise minded. And if you be once fully minded to press toward the mark, should differences of sentiment or feeling upon minor matters unhappily exist or arise, God will in due time reveal it, and bring you by his Spirit to see eye to eye. C.

Ver. 18. Enemies of the cross—because they superadded Jewish rites and observances as necessary to pardon, peace, and acceptance with God. C.

Ver. 21. Who shall change, &c. 'Who shall re-fashion this body of our humiliation, that it may become conformed to the body of his glory.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—With great earnestness should professors guard against the seduction of false teachers, especially such as set up men's own righteousness in the room of the justifying righteousness of Jesus Christ. And ministers have need to repeat their warnings on this head. Nothing goes down more sweetly with a corrupt heart than the doctrine of justification by self-righteousness. Amiable, yet very rare, is a lively, devout, cheerful, a duly self-denied Christian. But contemptible are all external privileges in comparison of Christ and his righteousness; and very unprofitable are human works in the matter of our justification. The faith and enjoyment of free justification through his glorious sacrifice powerfully animates and enables to the diligent study of holiness. And though there is no absolute perfection in this life, yet every one ought to press as near to it as possible, and carefully avoid the smallest appearance of backsliding in faith, profession, or practice, and tenderly bear with others in lesser differences. It is a great mercy for a church to have ministers of an exemplary practice and heavenly conversation. Eternal glory will crown their and their followers' labours along with Christ. But what a burden to ministers, a plague to churches, and what enemies to Christ, are untender, sensual, and worldly-minded preachers and professors!

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 1. In these views, my dearly beloved brethren, whose further proficiency and establishment I much desire and long for, and whom I now account the honourable seals of my ministry, and expect to be my crown of rejoicing in the last judgment,

8 Yea, doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord: for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may 'win' Christ,

9 And be found in him, not having ^amine own righteousness, which is of the law, but ^athat which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith:³

10 That ^aI may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death;

11 If by any means ^aI might attain unto the resurrection of the dead.

12 Not^a as though I had already attained, either were already perfect: but ^aI follow after, if that I may apprehend ^athat for which also ^aI am apprehended of Christ Jesus.

13 Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended: but ^athis one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, 14 I press toward the mark for ^athe prize of the ^ahigh calling of God in Christ Jesus.

15 Let us therefore, 'as many as be perfect,

I again earnestly entreat you to abide steadfast and recompense, my loving God and Father, who has fession of the Lord Jesus, as your Head and Saviour, 2. And I beg that those noted women, Euodias and Syntyche, would lay aside all their differences, and agree with the church and with one another in sentiment, profession, love, and affection in the Lord. 3. And I beseech you, my noted assistant in the work of the gospel, in the most prudent, tender, and affectionate manner, to advise and exhort them heartily to reunite in the common cause—who, by their prayers, their sympathy, and their supplies, were so remarkably useful to me, and to Clement, and my other fellow-preachers, who, I am persuaded, are noted favourites of God, and from eternity chosen to be heirs of salvation. 4. And let all of you true believers, in the view of the blessings which ye have in hand, or which ye hope for, always, and in all circumstances, rejoice and triumph in the Lord Jesus, your Head and Saviour, and in all that he is, has, or does for you, and even in your sufferings for his sake. 5. And—as knowing that he is at hand to observe your behaviour and take your part, and will quickly appear to execute justice on his Jewish, heathen, or antichristian opposers, and ere long to judge the world—labour to maintain and discover a meek, patient, and gentle temper of spirit towards all men, your most furious persecutors not excepted, and a weariness of affection from the things of this life. 6. Yea, whatever difficulties, wants, or dangers may befall you relating to this present world, never perplex yourselves with anxious, distrustful, and distracting cares about them, how ye shall be able to avoid, bear up under, or get through them; but in every time, circumstance, or matter—in the firm faith of God's promises, and with humble pleadings and earnest importunity and perseverance, and with thanksgiving for mercies received or promised—lay your whole case and requests before God as your reconciled Father in Christ, that, as the hearer of prayer, he may give you whatever help, comfort, deliverances, or blessings are for your real advantage: 7. And in so doing, the most excellent peace with God, with your own consciences, and with one another, and a transcendently sweet calmness of spirit, shall, through the merits of Christ, your union to him, and influences from him, fortify and preserve your souls from sinking or fainting under the heaviest troubles. 8. And, in fine, my brethren, beloved in the Lord, whatever things are agreeable to the gospel of truth, and consist in or promote truth and sincerity, in words or actions, professions or engagements; whatever things are venerable, decent, or becoming in dress, language, or deportment,

VIEW OF THE TIBER. [Philippians, iv:23.]—The Tiber is the largest river in Italy. It intersects the city of Rome from north to south in three wide curves. The river is about 65 yards wide and about 20 feet deep. The river was once the medium of connection between Rome and the trade of the outside world. The city is mainly on the left bank of the Tiber. In the above view we see the river flowing between banks which have been lined with stone. This, however, is modern. The whole length of the river, in a direct line, is not more than 140 miles. It is a muddy, slow-moving stream, and its size is no adequate index to the famous position it occupies among the rivers of the world. The Tiber owes its influence among rivers to the great men who have lived upon its banks.

which were sent from you, 'an odour of a sweet smell, a sacrifice acceptable, well-pleasing to God.

19 But my God shall 'supply all your need, according* to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus.

20 Now 'unto God and our Father be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

inclined your hearts to show me such kindness for his sake, will richly reward you, not only with all needful temporal good things, but chiefly with all spiritual and eternal blessings, suited to your various wants, and that with an abundant liberality, in proportion to his own infinite treasures of grace and glory, which he has provided and treasured up in Christ, and gives together with him and for his sake, and in virtue of our union with him.—20. Unto that all-sufficient and infinitely liberal Giver of all temporal, spiritual, and eternal blessings, and our Father in Christ, let us jointly ascribe all possible and eternal honour, thanksgiving, blessing, and praise, on account of what he is in himself, and what he has been, is, and for ever will be to us. 21, 22. I, and all the faithful preachers and professing believers here, chiefly they who have been lately converted to Christ in the emperor Nero's own family, hereby present to every one of you who are truly renewed and sanctified in your hearts, our most cordial testimony of love and regard. 23. And may the free favour of our common Lord and Saviour, and all the distinguishing fruits thereof, be abundantly manifested to and upon each of you singly, and all of you jointly. This I heartily desire and firmly expect.

REFLECTIONS.—Faithful ministers greatly delight in, have a high esteem of, and ardent affection to sincere and lively Christians; and are grateful in acknowledging their kindness. Very desirous are they that all things may turn out to their edification, and much concerned for their establishment in the faith, profession, and holiness of the gospel; for their continual comfort, and their unity in heart, design, and labour, to help forward the work of the Lord. Very patient also toward enemies, weaned from this world, free from anxious care, fervent and hopeful in prayer, peaceful in mind, and universally lively in practice, ought Christians to be—in the faith of Christ's being with them, and of his certain and sudden appearance to judge them. And it is a necessary duty and an honourable attainment to have learned in his strength to be always cordially contented with all the diversified changes of our lot, as wisely and kindly ordered by our gracious God and Father.—Happy is it to have him the Supplier of all our wants, and the Rewarder of all our friends' kindnesses to us. And highly delightful to view ourselves and millions around us eternal sharers of his infinite, his inexhaustible stores of grace, laid up for us in Christ in a manner suited to the glory thereof.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE EPISTLE TO THE PHILIPPIANS.

Happy Europe! whose first planted church gave such early indication of holy fruitfulness! and though the harvest has come short of the hopes of the spring, and though many tares have been sown by the enemy in the midst of the wheat; yet, thanks to the Lord of the harvest, many a fair field has been ripened, and reaped, and gathered into her garner.

The church at Philippi was specially distinguished by missionary liberality, ch. 4. 15, 16, 18; a grace which God, in those days, seems to have restored, in some degree, to the reformed churches in Europe and their descendants in America.

No doubt Christian liberality is still repressed; yet is it making glorious progress; wherefore, 'let us thank God and take courage.' And let not Christians be afraid of giving back what God has given to them, but let them rely upon the word which testifies that what they lend to the Lord, their God will repay; and if the spirit of worldliness should tempt them to withhold from the gospel, lest they should not have enough for their own necessities, let them remember that God, and God alone, has supported them for the past; and that, for the future, he is able to 'supply all their need according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus.' C.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE COLOSSIANS.

Colosse was a large and populous city of Phrygia, in the north-west of Lesser Asia, where (not the apostle Paul, but) Epaphras, or some other faithful preacher, had planted a church. To establish those Christians in the faith, in opposition to the heathen philosophers, and especially to the judaizing teachers, Paul wrote them this epistle; in which, after salutation, thanksgiving, and prayer for them, he, in a most exalted manner, represents to them Jesus Christ, in his glorious dignity and gracious fulness, as infinitely preferable to all philosophical notions and Jewish ceremonies, ch. i. ii.; and exhorts them to improve their union to and fellowship with him in holy duties, personal and relative, ch. iii. iv.

[Colosse was a city of Phrygia-Pacatiana, in Western Asia. It is said to have perished in a violent earthquake, in the tenth year of the reign of Nero, and shortly after the date of this epistle, which is generally assigned to A.D. 62. It was afterwards restored, and Constantine Porphyrogenitus says that in his time it was called Chonæ; and is supposed to have occupied the site of a village now called Konous. By whom the church of Colosse was founded is not recorded; but it would appear from ch. 2. 1 that Paul had not that honour, though they feel for him as children, during his imprisonment, and he, for them as a father in the Lord. The tenor of the epistle, especially ch. 1. 3-6, indicates a healthy state of the church; while the warnings and precepts of holiness which it conveys clearly show that no present attainments can supersede the necessity of that watchfulness and prayer which are employed by the Spirit as the safeguard and the nourishment of the life of God in the soul. C.]

The church at Colosse was composed chiefly, if not exclusively, of Gentiles; yet false teachers of a judaizing tendency had found their way into it, and were attempting to corrupt the purity and simplicity of their faith, ch. 2. 13-23. The principal errors against which Paul warns the Colossians are:—(1) Ritualistic observances, fasts, feasts, and ceremonies, which were necessary under the Mosaic dispensation as types of Christ, but are useless and pernicious under the spiritual dispensation of Christ. (2) Angel-worship, which had then begun, being borrowed in part from heathen mythology, and which has since been productive of the grossest superstitions. (3) Bodily austerities—asceticism in fact; under the vain impression that by weakening and enervating the physical powers, the soul would attain closer communion with God. (4) Jewish theosophy, which, attempting to attach a deep and mystic meaning to the plain narratives of Old Testament history, and an allegorical sense of a fanciful and absurd character to the whole Mosaic ritual, perverted the meaning of Scripture, and tended largely to corrupt the purity of Christian truth. The Jews of the Alexandria school especially professed to be able in this way to fathom profound mysteries which the initiated alone could apprehend. These corruptions seem to be referred to in ch. 2. 18. P.]

Ver. 16. This description can never be applied to a moral or evangelical, but must refer to a natural creation. See ch. 2:15; Ep. 1:20; 6:22. C.

Ver. 20. All things that, having rebelled against divine authority, needed reconciliation, and were given to Christ by the Father, Jn. 17:2, that they might be called, gathered, kept, saved, and glorified, Ro. 8:31. C.

Ver. 24. As if he had said, 'I who formerly took a cruel pleasure in persecuting others, now feel the highest joy in enduring, through what yet remains of my life, such afflictions as my Lord himself endured, and as he appoints for me, that thereby I may edify and confirm in patience, hope, and love, every persecuted member of his mystical body, the church.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—Ministers ought never to lose sight of their mission from Christ; and Christians ought never to lose sight of the divine authority of the Scriptures. Abundant is the grace, peace, and other blessings which Christ and his Father give, and which we ought therefore to wish to all his people. It is a great mercy to hear the gospel, to have its power manifested in our hearts, its glorious fruits appearing in our lives, and to hear of the like in others. And very thankful should we be that the gospel of our salvation, which was so long concealed under obscure figures and in dark promises, and almost confined to the Jews, is now plainly manifested to both Jews and Gentiles. Happy is it to experience its power in enlightening our mind, renewing our will, delivering us from the slavery of Satan, and translating us into the kingdom of Christ, that he may dwell in us as the hope of glory! With much assurance may prayers be made for the increase of saints in light and grace, their strengthenings unto all patience and comfort under present trials, and unto all fruitful and holy walking with God, and meetness for their heavenly inheritance. Infinite are the glories of our Redeemer, as the essential, necessary, and eternal Son of God; the Creator, Preserver, and Governor of all things; the Head of the church; the Storehouse of all spiritual blessings; the reconciling Mediator between God and men; and abundant the peace, pardon preservation, sanctification, and everlasting glory which his people receive by faith in him. Great is the honour to be made wise, faithful, diligent, and successful preachers of Christ. No sufferings nor received, when tenderly preached to both Jews and Gentiles, and of which God, in his infinite mercy, has appointed me a stated and inspired preacher. 24. And in the view of your steadfastness, I am so far from repining at the severe persecutions and present imprisonments which have befallen me on account of my preaching the gospel to Gentile sinners, that I greatly rejoice and glory in all these outward tribulations which I, who was once a persecutor, do or may endure, according to the appointment of Christ, and for his glory, and for the confirmation, edification, and comfort of his mystical body the church: 25. Of which church God, by his immediate authority, has constituted me an apostolic minister, according to that infinitely gracious order which he has fixed for dispensing the gospel, which is committed to me as a sacred trust, for the fulfilment of the ancient promises of the conversion, edification, and salvation of you Gentiles; 26. Which gospel is indeed a mystery, as it contains the unsearchable riches of Christ; and as it was for many ages concealed in its brightest glories, not only from the Gentile nations, but even in a great measure from the Jews, but which is now revealed, as clearly as the nature of the things permits, to his holy prophets and apostles, and by them to all true believers who, by repentance, faith, and regenerating grace, are his saints; 27. To whom, of his everlasting love, according to his compassion and ancient predictions, God would now, under the New Testament, make a plain discovery of the exceeding riches of the glory and incomprehensible excellency of the gospel tidings of salvation among you Gentiles—the all-comprehending sum of which is Christ, in his person, offices, relations, fulness, and work; who also is preached among you, and dwelling in your hearts by faith as the foundation, author, and object of all your hopes of eternal life. 28. And it is this Christ, in his natures, person, and mediation, and in the believing, affectionate, obedient regards due to him, whom we faithful preachers of the gospel make the grand subject of our ministrations, wisely and prudently admonishing all sorts of persons, Jews or Gentiles, to consider their sinful and miserable state by nature, and to beware of rejecting him; and instructing them, as God enables us, in the knowledge of the manifold wisdom of God, as displayed through him in the gospel revelation, to render them truly wise unto salvation, that we may be honoured instruments of presenting them to God as true and uncorrupted believers, renewed in all the faculties of their soul and members of their body, and remarkably fruitful in the several graces of the Spirit—who are perfect already in Christ their Head; and to be, through him, perfected in all knowledge and grace, holiness and happiness.—29. For this end, and in this work, as one excited and assisted by the remarkable influences of the almighty power of God, I labour to my utmost in prayer and preaching, and every other means, amidst all difficulties, and in the face of all opposition.

Ver. 7. It would seem from the way in which Epaphras is here mentioned that he was the first teacher of the Colossians, and perhaps the founder of the church there. He was a native of Colosse, ch. 4:12, and shared Paul's imprisonment, for a time at least, in Rome, Phil. 23. It seems to have been from him the apostle learned so much of the Colossians, ch. 1:8. P.

Ver. 12. An allusion, most probably, to the fact that the Israelites who came out of Egypt were not admitted to the inheritance of Canaan; while their children, under the teaching of Moses, and by the power of the Spirit, were prepared to enter in with Joshua, and to conquer and possess the land. C.

Ver. 15. Who is the image of the invisible God. God is essentially invisible; but 'the Word that was God' 'became flesh, and dwelt among us,' and in that flesh men 'beheld his glory;' and thus 'he that saw Christ saw the Father,' Jn. 14:9; that is, in the works of love and power which Christ wrought.—The first-born of every creature. According to ver. 16, 17 Christ was before all things, and by him were all things created; therefore the title 'first-born' cannot signify that the Creator was a creature, for that were a contradiction; but the title primogenitus appears to be taken, as in Jn. 1:15, 30, for primus, and signifies that Sonship of the Word which existed before any being was created, agreeably to the scriptural mode of describing eternity. See ch. 8:23; 24:26; comp. 1 Jn. 1:2. C.—This expression in the Greek may signify either (1) That Christ was the first-born of every creature, which might imply that he was himself a creature; or, (2) That he was begotten before every creature; and, consequently, that he could not himself be a creature. While the grammatical form of the clause will bear either signification, sound canons of hermeneutics compel us to attach to it the latter meaning, which alone accords with the analogy of Scripture. He was 'begotten antecedently to everything that was created;' his eternal Sonship is here set forth. P.

10 And ye are ^acomplete in him, which is the head of all principality and power;

11 In^a whom also ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands, in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ;

labours must be reckoned too hard for his sake, or for the edification, comfort, and eternal salvation of souls.

CHAPTER II. Ver. 1. I mention these my earnest endeavours to present every man perfect in Christ Jesus, to make you sensible of my great care and fervent prayers for you and your neighbours of Laodicea, and others who never had an opportunity of attending on or being profited by my ministrations; 2. That their hearts may be abundantly filled with divine consolation, as believers who are closely and firmly cemented together in the most cordial affection to Christ and to one another, and are thoroughly united in their endeavours for attaining a distinct, clear, and complete acquaintance with the gospel plan of salvation, in all its riches of spiritual and eternal blessings, unto the entire satisfaction of their souls, and their making an honourable, steady, and public profession of those deep things of it which were from all eternity intended and prepared in the gracious mind of God the Father, and are secured, revealed, and bestowed through faith in Christ, as the great Mediator between God and man; 3. In which mystery of the gospel, and especially in which Christ, are truly, safely, and incomprehensibly laid up and contained all the inexhaustible treasures of wisdom and knowledge for managing all the affairs of providence and grace, and for manifesting the whole will of God as to our salvation, and seasonably supplying our wants, enlightening our minds, and daily directing our steps to the heavenly glory. 4. And I would lead you to consider this inexhaustible fulness of wisdom and knowledge laid up for you in Christ and the gospel, in order to prevent your being seduced from him and his truths by pretenders to heathen philosophy and Jewish learning. 5. For though in bodily presence I am, and always have been, absent from you, yet my heart is with you, delightfully reflecting on what I have heard of your faith, love, and hope; and, through the suggestions of God's Spirit, I have a view of your rich attainments and diversified trials; and am affected as if I were present among you, rejoicing in your orderly behaviour and regular discipline, and in your firm, solid, and steady adherence of faith to the person, mediation, and doctrines of Christ, notwithstanding all the artifices which have been used to corrupt your minds, and draw you off from him. 6. As therefore ye have by faith received the Lord Jesus Christ in his person and offices, as your Prophet, to instruct you; your Priest, to make atonement and intercede for you; and your King, to defend, rule, and govern you,—be careful, by virtue of union to and gracious influence from him, to cleave to him with full purpose of heart, and to walk in a daily exercise of faith on him, and in a constant observation of all his ordinances and commandments, answerably to your profession of and relation to him: 7. As trees of righteousness, being rooted in and fastening on him, to keep you fixed and immovable, and drawing nourishment from him for your spiritual growth; and as a spiritual house, being built upon him and closely united to him, as the only foundation of your faith and hope, security and salvation—that ye may be confirmed in the doctrine and grace of faith in him, as ye have heard by the ministry of Ephraim; and may exceedingly abound in the daily increase of knowledge, faith, and every other grace, with enlarged thankfulness and praise to the author and finisher of all that concerns you.—8. Take heed lest seducers make a prey of you, and draw you off from Christ and his pure gospel, and rob you of its privileges and blessings, through the subtleties and corruptions of heathen philosophy, Jewish traditions, or the observation of Mosaic ceremonies; none of which things are, according to the mind and will of Christ, revealed in the gospel, nor do any of them, as now urged and observed, lead your soul to him only for salvation, who alone hath an all-sufficiency for it in himself. 9. For all the perfections of the Godhead, in their utmost fulness, for ever and substantially abide and dwell in his incarnate person, or temple of his manhood, in a personal and infinitely more glorious manner than ever JEHOVAH dwelt in the Jewish tabernacle or temple. 10. And ye who have received him by faith, and are united to him as members of his mystical body, have all your defects made up, and all your securities or blessings completed in him as your Head, made of God to you wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption; who, answerably to the infinite dignity of his divine person, is, in his office capacity, exalted to be the sovereign Ruler of all ranks

12 ^aBuried⁸ with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead.⁹

13 And^a you, being dead in your sins and the uncircumcision of your flesh, hath he quickened together with him, having ^aforgiven you all trespasses;

14 Blotting^a out the hand-writing of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross;

15 And^a having spoiled principalities and powers, he made a show of them openly, triumphing over them in it.¹

16 Let^a no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink,² or in respect³ of an holy day, or of the new moon, or of the sabbath days:

17 Which^a are a shadow of things to come; but the body ^ais of Christ.

18 Let^a no man beguile you⁴ of your reward in a voluntary humility⁵ and worshipping of angels, ^aintruding into those things which he hath not seen, vainly puffed up by his fleshly mind, 19 And not holding the ^ahead, from which all the body by joints and bands having nourishment ministered, and knit together, increaseth with the increase of God.

20 Wherefore, if ye be ^adead with Christ of angels or men, good or bad. 11. In him therefore ye are so complete as to have no need of ceremonial circumcision, as judaizing teachers pretend, being spiritually circumcised by the Holy Ghost, who hath renewed your heart and cut off your whole system of inward corruption—removing the guilt, power, and defilement of it, not by any human influences, but merely by the cleansing and sanctifying operation of Jesus Christ. 12. And in that baptism, which Christ hath instituted in the room of circumcision, ye have received the sign of and obligation to that holiness which is, or ought to be, in you as God's faithful people; and have had represented, sealed, and applied to you a certain and continued death to sin, and a quickening and resurrection to a life of holiness, in conformity to and by virtue derived from his death and resurrection, through that faith you have exercised in your hearts by the same almighty influence by which God raised up Christ from the dead, and will, by virtue of his resurrection, at last raise you up to eternal life. 13. And you, who, in your sinful unregenerate state, were dead in law, lying under a just sentence of condemnation, and dead to God and everything spiritually good, lying under the power and filth of your inward corruptions, which circumcision anciently signified, hath God now raised up to a new life of grace and holiness, in order to a heavenly life of glory and blessedness together with Christ as your Pattern and Head of influence—having, on account of his righteousness imparted, freely pardoned to each of you all your iniquities, original and actual, lesser or greater, and given you a full and glorious title to eternal life; 14. Blotting out, as it were, all our transgressions by the blood of his Son, and thereby disannulling that federal or ceremonial obligation to punishment on account of them which testified that we were transgressors, and which separated the Gentiles from the church and privileges of the Jews, and was the cause of much enmity between them; and by his death entirely removing and utterly destroying it, that it might never be produced in judgment against us. 15. And having, by fully honouring all law and justice, disarmed Satan and all his subordinate ranks of apostate angels of their power, which arises from the curse of the law, he exposed them to open contempt in the view of all the holy from the rudiments⁶ of the world, why, as though living in the world, are ye subject to ordinances, 21 (Touch^d not; taste not; handle not;

22 Which^e all are to perish with the using;) after^o the commandments and doctrines of men?

23 Which things have indeed^a a show of wisdom in will-worship, and humility, and neglecting⁷ of the body; not in any honour to the satisfying of the flesh.

CHAPTER III.

1 He sheweth where we should seek Christ. 5 He exhorteth to mortification, 10 to put off the old man, and to put on Christ; 12 exhorting to charity, humility, and other several duties.

IF ye^a then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God.

2 Set^d your affection¹ on things above, not on things on the earth.

3 For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God.²

4 When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory.

5 Mortify³ therefore your members which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and covetousness, which is idolatry:

6 For which things' sake the wrath of God cometh on the children of disobedience:

7 In the which ye also walked some time, when ye lived in them.³

8 But now ye also put off all these; anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy, filthy communication out of your mouth.

9 Lie⁴ not one to another, seeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds;

22 Servants,¹ obey in all things your masters according to the flesh: not with eye-service, as men-pleasers; but in singleness of heart, fearing God:

23 And² whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men;

Lord has thus freed to retain those rites, or add others, in the worship of God, as if such things could render us acceptable in his sight.

24 Knowing¹ that of the Lord ye shall receive the reward of the inheritance: for ye serve the Lord Christ.

25 But² he that doeth wrong³ shall receive for the wrong which he hath done: and there is no respect of persons.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 1. If, according to your profession, ye be indeed risen from under the law, and the guilt and power of sin, to a life of righteousness and holiness—together with, in conformity to, and by the quickening virtue of, our risen Redeemer, applied by faith—let your hearts, in their temper and exercises, and in all your meditations, views, inquiries, and pursuits, by prayer, and every other ordinance of God, aspire after realizing clear and enlarged experiences and assurances of the durable, substantial, and satisfying things of the heavenly state, where he, your ascended Head, is exalted in all his majesty and authority, dignity and glory, rest and safety, to make intercession, and prepare a place for you. 2. Let all your affections of desire and hope, love and delight, be supremely fixed upon the excellent things which belong to and are transacted in that heavenly state, and not upon the empty, uncertain, perishing, and defiling pleasures and enjoyments, or even the carnal ordinances of this world. 3. And this is highly proper, since, by profession and obligation, and many of you by actual communion with Christ in his death, are really dead in your hearts and affections to the Mosaic law, and are crucified with him to sin, Satan, and the world, and all the pleasures and enjoyments of your spiritual life are maintained and promoted in secret and mysterious transactions and fellowship between God and your souls, by virtue of Christ, who is one with him, till it be perfected in that eternal life which lies so much out of sight in this life, but is nevertheless secured and treasured up with Christ in the tender love and immediate presence of God for you. 4. And when Christ, who is the source, author, sustainer, finisher, scope, and end of our spiritual life, and lives in us, shall appear in all his glory to judge the world, ye who accept him by faith shall be glorified together with and in conformity to him in soul and body. 5. In the prospect therefore of that blessed day, and in reflection on the spiritual purity and sublime happiness which ye shall then enjoy, as men dead to sin and risen with Christ, labour to have all your carnal and sinful dispositions, which are like members to the body of inward corruption, and are influenced and exerted by your bodily members, more and more weakened and slain, particularly all inclinations to unchastity in thought, word, and deed, and all excessive or irregular desires after the enjoyments of this world, whereby ye put creatures into an idolatrous competition with or preference to God. 6. Abhor and abstain from them, as polluting abominations which draw down the fearful judgments of God in this life, and especially in the next, upon unbelieving obstinate sinners. 7. And the more earnest care is necessary in this matter, as, in the days of your heathenism and unregeneracy, of free choice and with great eagerness, ye lived in the love and practice of these abominations. 8. But now, as Christians, ye ought to have no further fellowship with these or any other works of darkness; such as causeless and intemperate anger, furious passion, malicious revengefulness, reproachful speeches, particularly of God and sacred things, and all immodest expressions, which tend to defile your own or others' minds. 9. And never, either rashly, in jest, in excuse, in ill-will, or for gain, speak anything contrary to strict truth, since, in profession, and I hope in reality, ye have absolutely cast off and renounced the whole system of inward and original, of subtle, but just now decaying and dying corruption, with all its pernicious and defiling practices; 10. And, by a work of heart-changing grace, ye have, as it were, clothed yourselves with the holy qualities and beautiful ornaments of a new nature, formed after the image of God, the Creator and Renewer of men; 11. In which new creation there is no partial respect shown to persons on account of any external distinctions or privileges, whether they be Jews or Gentiles, savage or polite, slaves or freemen; but Christ is ALL IN ALL in the whole of their salvation, in all their experiences and privileges. 12. Therefore, in an entire dependence on Christ, and imitation of him, and as persons living in him, and accordingly helped into holiness, and regarded as the objects of God's distinguishing love, instead of indulging or practising works of wickedness, earnestly practise, and, as it were, clothe and adorn yourselves with the most tender compassion towards the distressed, and with a generous and benevolent temper and behaviour towards all men, with modest thoughts of yourselves, and condescension to persons of low degree, with gentleness, mildness, and candour towards all, and persevering patience under repeated and long-continued provocations; 13. Bearing with and forbearing one another's various infirmities; mutually forgiving one another their offences and injuries, in imitation and for the sake of Christ, who, at the expense of his own blood, has fully and freely pardoned all your infinite crimes. 14. And especially let the exercise of brotherly love, as an upper garment, add a beautiful lustre to and regulate all the other graces—which is at once the fulfilment of God's law, and knits together the members of Christ in the most perfect harmony, till his whole mystical body arrive at its perfect stature in him. 15. And for the more effectual cultivation of this brotherly love and every other grace, let the sense of God's friendship with you, through Christ, engage you always to practise and live under the influence of that excellent peace and concord among yourselves of which God is the author, approver, and commander, and to which ye are called by the grace of the gospel, and your union as members in Christ's church; and let the sense of mercies received or expected animate you to constant thankfulness and praise. 16. And for the same purpose let the Holy Scriptures, of which Christ is the author, matter, and end, be applied to and fixedly reside in your hearts, as the constant mean of renewed influences from him, and of directing your whole conversation; and be mutually helpful in instructing and exciting one another to bless and praise God in every proper form—not only with grateful and harmonious voices, but with spiritual and gracious affections towards Jesus Christ, and God in him. 17. And whatever ye do in thought, word, or deed, in public or private, in things religious or civil, let it be done with a conscientious regard to the authority and command of the Lord Jesus Christ, with an humble dependence on him for all direction and assistance, and with an eye to his Father's glory—always giving God thanks for his unnumbered mercies through him, through whom the blessings themselves are granted, and your thanksgivings for them accepted.—18. And as the Christian religion does not dissolve but strengthen all moral obligations to relative duties required by the law of nature, let each of you carefully attend to them, notwithstanding your differences in other things; particularly see that ye Christian wives behave in a meek and submissive manner to your lawful husbands, as far as consists with your superior relation and obedience to Christ. 19. And ye, Christian husbands, treat your wives with all possible tenderness, kindness, and affection, doing all that you can for their temporal and spiritual ease, comfort, and happiness; and never exercise a severe and arbitrary lordship over them, or abuse them by passionate words, blows, or other severe conduct. 20. Ye Christian children, love and honour your parents, of whatever character or condition they be, and conscientiously obey them in every just and reasonable command; for this is agreeable to the will of Christ, and acceptable to God through him. 21. On the other hand, see that ye parents carefully study the tempers of your children, and by prudent, kind, and gentle methods establish your authority over them; but never, by furious or opprobrious language, unreasonable impositions, or unmerciful corrections, sour their minds, break their spirits, and fill them with prejudices against you and the religion which ye profess. 22. And ye servants, whether bought or hired, be diligent and faithful in executing the trusts and doing the business which your masters commit to you, fulfilling all their commands as far as ye can in consistency with your duty to Christ, your Master in heaven; and that cheerfully and sincerely, at all times, from regard to God's honour and authority, and as in his sight. 23. And whatever ye are called to do in their service, let it not be done with grudging and reluctance, but with a willing and ready mind, from a sense of duty towards the Lord Jesus Christ, in obedience to his command, with a view to his glory, and not from a selfish mercenary spirit, which aims only at pleasing of men. 24. And to animate you to cheerfulness and fidelity in your service, know that, whatever ill treatment or unrighteous returns ye meet with, instead of a suitable reward, from your masters on earth, ye shall now, and especially hereafter, be graciously rewarded with the heavenly inheritance; for in doing your duty to earthly masters ye really pay honour and do service to the Lord Jesus himself, who hath placed you in your subordinate station for that purpose. 25. But he, whether master or servant, who indulges himself in wronging the other by any injustice, shall receive a just and impartial recompense and reward for all his iniquitous conduct, none being respected by Christ more than another upon account of any external circumstances.

Ver. 2. The chief of the 'things above' are—the Father and his eternal love; Christ and his righteousness and intercession; the Holy Spirit and his graces; the company of angels and the spirits of just men made perfect; rest from labours; happiness and glory. C.

Ver. 4. The 'glory' mainly consists in victory over sin and Satan; in acknowledgment as faithful servants, dear children, and heirs of God; in copartnership in the throne of God and the Lamb; in companionship with the blessed; in perfected holiness of heart implanted by the Spirit; and in the glory of renovated bodies, together with the inconceivable splendours of the paradise of God. C.

Ver. 11. Christ is all things to the believer. He is his light, his life, his wisdom, his righteousness, his sanctification, his redemption, his hope here, his glory hereafter.—Christ is... in all; that is, in all believers, of whatever nation, kindred, or tongue; and 'in all' places where two or three are assembled in his name; and 'in all' times and circumstances, even to the end of the world. C.

Ver. 14. Above all—not as if other graces could exist without charity, or as if charity were better than them all; but charity is to be put on as a covering, ornament, or cincture, to all the other garments which believers were required to put on. C.

Ver. 17. In the name of the Lord Jesus—asking of God, speaking to men, and acting in public and private, as instructed of him by his Word and Spirit, and in all conducting yourselves as his disciples, representatives, and servants. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How dignified and happy are they who are risen with Christ, and whose life is laid up with him in God! Certain is their glorious appearance with Christ in the last judgment, and their eternal reign with him in heaven. And it is necessary that they set their affections on things above, and abhor and mortify every lust, shun every sinful practice, and study to be like Jesus their Head, their Saviour, their Portion, their Master, in both heart and life. A worldly and wicked mind and a heavenly hope are quite inconsistent. It is absurd to conceive ourselves members of Jesus Christ, redeemed to God by his blood, while we live in unchastity, covetousness, sinful passion, malice, falsehood, or blasphemy. If we belong to him, we must prove it by our conformity to him in our tempers and practice. Actuated by the faith of his forgiving kindness, what merciful compassion, what meekness, what humility, what forbearance, what readiness to forgive injuries, what brotherly love, what calmness of mind, what experimental and abundant knowledge of the Scriptures, what labours to edify one another, what thankfulness to God, what constant improvement of Christ, what punctuality in relative duties, ought to mark every Christian! And in every relative duty great regard must be had to Christ as the commander, the source, the motive, the pattern, the end of them all.

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 1. And as servants ought to obey their masters in all lawful things, so ye Christian masters ought to deal justly and equitably with them, allowing them proper work, provision, and wages, and giving them proper reproofs or encouragements in their work, knowing that ye yourselves serve the Lord Jesus Christ, and must give an account of your treatment of servants, as well as of every part of your conduct, to him who now inspects, and will hereafter judge and reward you. 2. But to return to general exhortations, let all of you daily, at set seasons, in secret, private, or public prayer to God, in the name of Christ, plead for his blessings—temporal, spiritual, or eternal. Watch for special calls of Providence and needful assistances of spiritual influence, to make you ever ready, fervent, and persevering in prayer; and watch against all hindrances of it, or deadness or wandering in it. And let all your supplications for mercies be joined with grateful praises and cheerful thanksgivings for what ye have received or expect. 3. And in all your addresses to God earnestly plead with him that I and my fellow-labourers in the ministry may be favoured with extensive opportunities and abilities to preach the gospel in a right manner, and with remarkable success, and to lay open the deep things, and exhibit and offer the unsearchable riches of Christ (for doing of which I am now a prisoner in bonds); 4. That, as far as Providence shall grant me opportunities, I may be eminently assisted in declaring the whole counsel of God with a proper frame of spirit, and in a duly free, extensive, and plain manner. 5. And let the whole of your conversation toward your unbelieving neighbours be managed with such Christian skill, circumspection, and prudence that ye may not be defiled by them, or encourage them in sin; but may, by your example, win them to Christ. In this manner improve and extend every opportunity of doing your proper duty, and doing good to them. 6. And let your speech be always such as proceeds from the grace of God in your heart, and as may recommend his free favour to others, and promote in them a gracious temper, that thereby ye may know how to give a reason of your hope with all modesty, meekness, and wisdom; and how to answer scrupulous doubts, serious inquiries, and captious cavillings relative to any point of Christian faith, duty, or experience which may be proposed to you.—7. As to my outward circumstances and inward comforts, Tychicus, my beloved fellow-Christian and faithful minister of Christ, who brings you this letter, will fully inform you. 8. And being desirous to know how matters in religion stand with you, I have ordered him to make a thorough inquiry, and inform me of them—while he comforts you by his good counsels, and his informations of God's kindness to me. 9. He and Onesimus your countryman, who is now a noted convert to Christ, and comes along with him, will inform you fully of everything important about this place. 10, 11. Aristarchus, the Macedonian, who endangered his life for my sake, and is now my fellow-prisoner; and John Mark, nephew to Barnabas, my dear old colleague in apostolic labours (whom, if he come to you, I hope ye will respectfully receive, according to the recommendations he hath received); and Joshua Justus—the only three Jewish preachers who have here assisted me in propagating the gospel, and comforted me under my sufferings,—send you their heartiest wishes of temporal and spiritual blessings. 12-14. Epaphras, your fellow-citizen, who spends much of his time in earnest wrestlings with God in prayer, that ye may continue steadfast in the faith, be fully instructed in and eminently conformed to the will of God, and who manifests an uncommon concern for your present and eternal happiness, and your neighbours in Laodicea and Hierapolis; Luke, the beloved physician and evangelist; and Demas,—send you their Christian respects. 15. Present my cordial love to your brethren at Laodicea; and particularly to Nymphas, and his regular, holy, and religious family, or other Christians who meet at his house for public worship. 16. And when ye have, in a proper and public manner, read this letter among yourselves, let an exact copy of it be sent to and read in like manner by the church in Laodicea; and let the letter from the Laodiceans be also publicly read among you. 17. And as ye are surrounded with subtle enemies who seek to pervert you, entreat and respectfully admonish Archippus, under a deep sense of the excellent nature, design, and importance of his ministerial work, to lay out himself to his utmost in the authority and strength of Jesus Christ, and for his glory, to fulfil the duties of his office with all wisdom, diligence, faithfulness, and perseverance; explaining, confirming, vindicating, and enforcing the great doctrines of revelation, in exemplifying them in his own conduct, in reproving sin and confuting error, and in every other thing in his power, for the furtherance of the gospel in the conversion of sinners, and the edification and comfort of saints. 18. To conclude in my usual manner, I send you, in my own handwriting, my hearty respects, wishing that the full favour of God, with all the precious manifestations and effects thereof, may abound towards you. This I heartily desire and hope for; and that my letter may have the greater weight with you, and render you the more earnest in prayer for me, remember that I am suffering, with patience and cheerfulness, in bonds, for preaching the gospel to you Gentiles.

Ver. 1. The 'servants' here spoken of were bond-servants or slaves, therefore the apostle is the more careful to commend them both to justice and equity—principles that could not long be in exercise until slavery would first change its character, and then cease to exist. C.

Ver. 3. A door of utterance—acceptable capacity and favourable opportunity of preaching the gospel. C.

Ver. 6. With grace—courteous, respectful, free from all rudeness real or affected.—Seasoned with salt—commingled with such wisdom as would render it agreeable to the intellectual taste, worthy of being preserved in memory, thought of, and repeated—even as salt seasons food, and preserves it from putrefaction.—That ye may know, &c. That having your thoughts in a state of preservation and readiness, and your minds habituated to a respectful and agreeable, because sincere and humble, manner of address, you may be able to reply to the learned or unlearned, the rich or the poor. C.

Ver. 9. Onesimus had been Philemon's slave (see Phil.), and is most probably sent as a free man, as the best practical and living commentary on the apostle's directions for masters. C.

Ver. 11. These only. It is worthy of remark that Paul had now but five fellow-soldiers at Rome; and yet, let none 'despise the day of small things;' for these were the leaders of that army that finally subdued that gigantic heathen empire.—Note. Among the millions of an unconverted world, let the ministers of Christ never despond; God, who encouraged Gideon to assail and conquer Midian with a reduced army, is able to conquer the whole kingdom of darkness by whatever handful he may please to commission. C.

Ver. 16. The epistle from Laodicea. Some suppose this to refer to a lost epistle; but this is gratuitous and unauthorized. Some think it to refer to 1 Ti.; others, to the epistle to the Ephesians left by Tychicus on his way to Colosse. What epistle it was is unknown, and conjecture is useless. The record, however, is most valuable, as it inculcates the duty of reading the apostolic writings. C.

REFLECTIONS.—With great equity, mildness, and mercy ought masters to treat their servants, in the view of God's authority over them, and of their accounting to him. Great is the necessity of fervent and persevering prayer for fellow-Christians, and especially for ministers—that they may preach the gospel with proper wisdom, courage, and success. And much wisdom and grace are necessary to make Christians improve their time, and order their speech to the honour of Jesus Christ and the edification of their neighbours. Much mutual esteem of one another, and fervent wrestlings for the church; great sympathy towards the distressed; courtesy to all men, especially the saints; and studious care to fulfil their ministry in the Lord—ought to prevail in every minister of Christ. And earnest care to vie with one another in every grace and duty, and to edify one another in love, and even to render their pastors duly diligent and faithful, ought to take place among all Christian professors.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE EPISTLE TO THE COLOSSIANS.

There is a considerable similarity between the epistles to the Ephesians, the Philippians, and the Colossians; so that they may be most advantageously read as mutual commentaries. The Epistle to the Colossians has in it, however, several particulars that are not referred to in the others. Among these the most prominent are, the germinant doctrines of angel-worship, and acts of voluntary austerity and will-worship, which were subsequently matured by the popedom of Rome;—which voluntary austerities, in penances, pilgrimages, and such like, 'have indeed a show of wisdom and humility, and neglecting of the body;' but have in reality sprung from that ignorance which has rejected, even as the Jews rejected, 'the righteousness of God,' Ro. 10. 3; which will-worship has superseded the all-prevailing intercession of Christ, by conjoining with him apostles, saints, and angels, all exalted to be objects of confidence, not only without, but in defiance of, the divine commandment, Mat. 4. 10. Thus early did the enemy begin to sow the tares where even the hands of apostles had sown the wheat! And, no doubt, they will be permitted by a wise and merciful Providence to 'grow together until the harvest,' when the tares of false doctrine and evil practices shall be separated, and the wheat of truth and holiness shall be gathered for the garner of the Lord, Mat. 3. 12; 13. 25. C.

THE FIRST EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE THESSALONIANS

Thessalonica was the chief city of Macedonia, rebuilt by Philip the father of Alexander the Great, and so named to commemorate his victory over the Thessalians. Here Paul planted a Christian church, consisting partly of Jews and partly of Gentiles; but was quickly driven from them by the fury of the Jews, Ac. 17. 1-10; and his attempt to return to them seems to have been hindered by the same cause, ch. 2. 18. To show his great affection for, and care of them, and to prevent their being seduced by false teachers, or discouraged by persecution, he wrote them this epistle;—in which he affectionately thanks God for his mercy manifested in their conversion, ch. i.: represents the engaging example he had set before them, and the tender care he had of them; his intention to send Timothy to comfort them, and his praying for their welfare, ch. ii. iii.: and, in view of the approaching judgment of the world, admonishes them to make proper preparation in all the branches of holiness, ch. iv. v.

[Thessalonica was a flourishing city and seaport, the capital of Macedonia. This name was given to it by Philip, father of Alexander, in memory of his conquest of Thessaly. We learn from Ac. 17. 1-9 that Paul, during his first tour in Europe, preached the gospel in Thessalonica with considerable success, but was driven thence through the malice of the unbelieving Jews. From Thessalonica he went to Berea, and thence to Athens. From Athens he sent Timothy to Thessalonica to inquire into the state of the church, and confirm the new converts in the faith. Timothy, on his return, found Paul at Corinth,—whence, about A.D. 52 (as is generally supposed), he wrote this epistle, the topics being suggested by Timothy's report. This is also generally believed to have been the first of that glorious series of epistles with which Paul afterwards enriched the churches. Particular references are made in this epistle to Ge. 15. 16; Is. 59. 17; Zec. 14. 5; 1 Co. 15. 22, 51, 52. C.]

4 Knowing, brethren beloved, your election of God.¹

5 For your gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance; as ye know what manner of men we were among you for your sake.

6 And ye became followers of us, and of the Lord, having received the word in much affliction, with joy of the Holy Ghost;

7 So that ye were ensamples to all that believe in Macedonia and Achaia.

8 For from you sounded out the word of the Lord not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but also in every place your faith to God-ward is spread abroad; so that we need not to speak any thing.

9 For they themselves show of us 'what manner of entering in we had unto you, and how 'ye turned to God from idols, to serve the living and true God;

10 And 'to wait for his Son from heaven, whom^a he raised from the dead, even 'Jesus, which delivered us from the wrath to come.

CHAPTER II.

1 In what manner the gospel was brought and preached to the Thessalonians, and in what sort also they received it. 18 A reason is rendered both why Saint Paul was so long absent from them, and also why he was so desirous to see them.

FOR yourselves, brethren, know 'our entrance in unto you, that it was not in vain.¹

2 But^b even after that we had suffered before, and were shamefully entreated, as ye know, at Philippi, we 'were bold in our God to speak unto you the gospel of God with much contention.²

3 For^a our exhortation was not of deceit, nor of uncleanness,³ nor in guile:

4 But 'as we were allowed of God to be put in trust with the gospel, even so we speak; not as pleasing men, but God, 'which trieth our hearts.

5 For 'neither at any time used we flattering words, as ye know, nor a cloak of covetousness; 'God is witness:

6 Nor^d of men sought we glory, neither of you, nor yet of others, when 'we might have 'been burdensome,⁵ as the apostles of Christ.

7 But we were 'gentle among you, even as a nurse cherisheth her children:

8 So, 'being affectionately desirous of you, we were willing to have imparted unto you, not the gospel of God only, but also our own souls, because ye were dear unto us.

9 For ye remember, brethren, 'our labour and travail: for labouring night and day, because we would not be chargeable unto any of you, we preached unto you the gospel of God.

10 Ye^e are witnesses, and God also, how holily and justly and unblameably we behaved ourselves among you that believe:

assistants did not merely reach your ears; but while it was attested by miracles, the almighty influence of the Holy Ghost brought it home to your hearts, and produced in your souls an unshaken assurance of the truth and importance of it, and of your personal interest in the blessings thereby conveyed; God thus owning our plain, patient, and faithful preaching of the gospel among you, in order to promote your eternal salvation. 6. And by this powerful influence of the gospel on your hearts ye immediately became imitators of us preachers, and of Christ our glorious Master, in faith, obedience, and patience, having, amidst all your severe persecutions, firmly believed the truths of the gospel, and thereby received such inward consolations of the Holy Ghost as sweetly supported you under your sufferings; 7. So that ye became eminent, encouraging, and exemplary patterns of faith, patience, and holiness, to all those who in Greece were afterwards turned to the Lord. 8. For the gospel of Jesus Christ, having had such glorious success among you, was thenceforward published far and near with great reputation and advantage—the fame of your faith in God through Jesus Christ, manifested by remarkable fruits of holiness, having so spread abroad that we have no occasion to speak of it; 9. For wherever we travel we meet with persons who are disposed, with wonder and joy, to mention to us what happy effects our ministrations had among you; with what sincerity ye embraced the gospel which we preached; and how, by its powerful influence, ye voluntarily and quickly renounced your heathen idols, and with indignation turned from them, to believe in, adore, and obey that God who alone has all life, glory, and blessedness in himself, and is the fountain of all created life, natural, temporal, spiritual, or eternal; 10. And to wait with faith, preparation, patience, desire, and hope, under all your present sufferings, for the glorious appearance of his eternal Son, whom he hath raised from the dead to judge the world—even Jesus Christ, who, by his obedience and suffering, secured, and by his loving sacrifice seeks, our deliverance from his dreadful wrath, which will be for ever coming, like a perpetual torrent of deep displeasure, to the wicked.

More accurately—'Even as ye know (ye yourselves from personal observation and experience) what manner of men we proved to be (i.e. were shown by our acts, and the authority and power with which we proclaimed the gospel) among you, on your account' (so as thus to promote your eternal interests by pressing gospel truth on your acceptance). Ver. 8. Thessalonians being a sea-port, the news of the conversion of so many of the inhabitants would readily obtain a wide circulation—so graciously does God overrule all local circumstances to the advancement of the kingdom of his Son! O that Britain, the great sea-port of the world, would combine the gospel with all her commerce, and supply the nations with that merchandise which is better than gold, and enrich them with that gain which is better than fine gold! C.

Ver. 9. They themselves—that is, 'all that believed in Macedonia and Achaia,' ver. 7. C.

Ver. 10. Hope—the hope especially of Christ's second coming—is the chief subject of this epistle. It is the pole-star of the church on earth; for then, and only then, will be consummated the church's happiness. The Greek word does not convey the idea of immediate expectation, but rather of deep, abiding, patient faith and expectation. P.

REFLECTIONS.—Thrice happy is it when the gospel is really accepted in the hearers' hearts; and when they, by their conversion from idols to God, and a holy imitation of Christ and his servants, in love, patience, and purity, prove their active faith in him! They are a credit to their religion who receive the gospel with full assurance of its divine truth, excellence, and importance, and with joy in the Holy Ghost, amidst manifold tribulations. With great pleasure should faithful ministers assist one another, and reflect on the success of their labours, regard their spiritual children, pray for them, and labour to promote their edification. And nothing is more endearing, comforting, or animating to holiness, than saving views of Jesus Christ the Son of God and his everlasting salvation.

CHAPTER II. Ver. 1. And yourselves, my dear Christian brethren, know that, as I and my two fellow-preachers did not entertain you with unprofitable subjects, or a mere sound of words in our ministrations, so they were not without that good fruit which the promise of God had given us ground to expect. 2. And in hopes of this, even after we had been treated with the utmost cruelty and contempt at Philippi, we, in an humble dependence on our God, publicly preached the gospel among you with a holy resolution and undaunted courage, and with great zeal and fervour of spirit—striving for your conversion, and against the furious opposition of the unbelieving Jews. 3. For our exhortations to duty, and comforting encouragements under sufferings, did not consist of erroneous doctrines leading to licentiousness, but of the pure gospel of Christ, productive of holiness in heart and life; nor did we minister to you in hypocritical pretences of piety and zeal, or of love to you, in order to promote our own selfish ends, but in the sincerity of our hearts, for the glory of God and your real welfare. 4. There was no falsehood or impurity in the matter, or insincerity or selfishness in the manner of our preaching; but as God had chosen, authorized, and furnished us for, and intrusted us with, the preaching of the gospel, so we endeavoured to preach it exactly as we received it from him—not in a manner suited to the corrupt taste, notions, and fancies of men, but with such purity and sincerity as God, the searcher of hearts, could not but approve of. 5. We can appeal to you, and even to God himself, that we never studied, by fawning or complimentary speeches, to ingratiate ourselves with any of you; nor did we ever encourage any to expect salvation in their sins, or by their own righteousness or strength; nor did we ever make use of religion as a pretence to cover some secret design of making advantage of you; 6. Nor were we ever ambitious of being honoured by men, or ever contrived, intended, or endeavoured to be admired, caressed, or applauded by any among whom we ministered; nor, though as messengers of Christ we might have justly claimed it, did we ever require a maintenance from you; 7. But, on the contrary, we behaved among you with such humility, modesty, meekness, and self-denial, as plainly marked the most tender and affectionate concern to do everything possible for your spiritual benefit, help, comfort, and eternal salvation; 8. Inasmuch that we not only took great pleasure in preaching to you the gospel of Christ in a suitableness to your necessities, but were ready to testify our affection to you in the most tender compassion, exhausting our strength and spirits, and nazarizing or even laying down our lives to promote your spiritual and eternal welfare. 9. In proof of which, ye cannot but remember, that while we were among you we not only spent our strength in our ministerial labours, but even worked early and late at our secular callings for our livelihood,—that, as an evidence, it was not your wealth, but your spiritual and eternal salvation, we were earnestly desirous of—we might preach the gospel to you without putting you to any expense. 10. We can appeal to your consciences, and even to the all-seeing and heart-searching God, that we exercised ourselves in a conscientious discharge of all the duties of religion towards God, and of righteousness towards men; and always in such a sober, humble, benevolent, and inoffensive manner as might best recommend the good ways of the Lord among you, who were brought to the faith of Christ by our ministrations. 11, 12. And while we set you a good example in our own behaviour, ye cannot but know how we counselled, entreated, excited, and encouraged every one of you to practise the like Christian duties in your respective stations, and did all that we could to comfort you under your tribulations; and, with the greatest earnestness and affection, in the name and authority of Jesus Christ, solemnly charged you to live answerably to the holyness and will, and to the blessed favours of God as your God, who has truly invited you by the gospel to partake of all the blessings and honours of his kingdom of grace in this world, and of his kingdom of glory in that which is to come. 13. In reflection upon which, we are exceedingly thankful to God, and daily praise his blessed name, that, when we were sent by him to preach the gospel to you, your hearts were opened to attend to it, and embrace it with reverence, faith, love, and obedience, not as a human scheme, or on the ground of human authority, but as indeed a revelation from God, and upon the ground of his authority, as a doctrine of which none but God himself is the contriver and author, and which, through his blessing, worketh so powerfully in changing the 11 As ye know how we exhorted, and comforted, and charged every one of you, as a father doth his children, 12 That ye would walk worthy of God, who hath called you unto his kingdom and glory.

13 For this cause also thank we God without ceasing, because, when ye received the word of God which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, but, as it is in truth, the word of God, which effectually worketh also in you that believe.

14 For ye, brethren, became followers of the churches of God which in Judea are in Christ Jesus: for ye also have suffered like things of your own countrymen, even as they have of the Jews;

15 Who both killed the Lord Jesus, and their own prophets, and have persecuted us; and they please not God, and are contrary to all men;

16 Forbidding us to speak to the Gentiles that they might be saved, to fill up their sins alway; for the wrath is come upon them to the uttermost.

17 But we, brethren, being taken from you

CHAPTER III.

1 Saint Paul testifieth his great love to the Thessalonians, partly by sending Timothy unto them, to strengthen and comfort them; partly by rejoicing in their well-doing; 10 and partly by praying for them, and desiring a safe coming unto them.

WHEREFORE, when we could no longer forbear, we thought it good to be left at Athens alone;

2 And sent Timothy, our brother, and minister of God, and our fellow-labourer in the gospel of Christ, to establish you, and to comfort you concerning your faith;

3 That no man should be moved by these afflictions: for yourselves know that we are appointed thereunto.

4 For verily, when we were with you, we sentiments, inclinations, and views of you who believed it. 14. As a proof of which blessed operation in you, ye had no sooner embraced it in faith and love than ye became imitators of us and of the believers in Judea—courageously, calmly, patiently, and even cheerfully submitting to the persecutions of your countrymen for the sake of Christ, even as they did to those of their Jewish brethren, 15. Who, in the madness of their rage, murdered the Lord of glory and only Saviour of mankind, as their fathers did the ancient prophets; and who have all along, and everywhere, persecuted us ministers of Christ—acting in direct opposition to the merciful nature and holy law and gospel of God, and even to the common welfare of men; 16. Doing what in them lies to hinder our preaching the gospel to you Gentiles, for your conversion and salvation; and thus, through their obstinate prejudices and furious opposition to Christ and his servants and cause, filling up the measure of their own and their fathers' iniquities, till the righteous wrath of God, which has already begun against them, dreadfully complete their ruin, and without remedy destroy their church and state for many ages, till the fulness of the Gentiles' conversion to Christ occasion their restoration. 17, 18. Being, by their outrageous persecution, driven from you exceedingly against our will, when, in your tribulation and danger, ye had much need of our further counsel, admonitions, cautions, and encouragements, my brethren, and especially myself, have been extremely desirous, and have once and again attempted, to pay you a visit; but Satan, that adversary of Christ and his ministers, and of your salvation, has hitherto, by his instruments, laid such entanglements and obstacles in our way as rendered it improper. 19, 20. We are, nevertheless, still as mindful of you as ever, and as affectionately desirous to see you, if the Lord permit; for what is the hope which chiefly animates us in our ministrations? What is our chief joy in them? Or what is the crown of glory we expect as our reward at the end?—Is it not that we shall present you and other converts as chaste virgins to Christ; that when he who is our life shall appear, ye, together with us, may appear with him in glory, and sit on his right hand?

REFLECTIONS.—Great patience, courage, candour, diligence, humility, prudence, tender affection, self-denial, unblamable holiness, and equity, are necessary for ministers in all their ministrations and conduct. And happy is the church in which such are found, and where hearers receive the gospel into their hearts upon the testimony of the Holy Ghost, and experience it powerfully influencing them to universal holiness and readiness to suffer for its sake! Desperately malicious are apostate professors against Christ, his truths, and people, and certain and dreadful is their punishment. In manifold forms Satan bestirs himself to hinder the spread of the gospel by faithful ministers.—But dear is the affection such bear to their spiritual children; great the comfort they take in them now, and exalted the honour they will have by them in the great day of account.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 1. Such was the distressing care of my mind about you, as young converts in perilous circumstances, that, when I found I could by no means quickly return to you myself, I chose rather to struggle alone with difficulties unnumbered at Athens than neglect anything which might contribute to your edification; 2. And therefore cheerfully parted with my dearly beloved brother Timothy, whom God has by his grace called to, richly furnished, and rendered most laborious and faithful in the ministerial office, and sent him to labour among you in exciting, strengthening, and confirming your faith in Christ and the great doctrines of the gospel, and that he might revive in your souls a sweet sense of the glorious advantages and delights which result from your faith in this, and especially the other world; 3. That so none of you might be disheartened or staggered at the afflictions and persecutions which ye or we have to endure for the sake of Christ; especially as ye know that God, in his eternal, infinitely wise, and holy purpose, has appointed us, the servants and followers of Christ, to suffer with and for him, as well as to reign with him. 4. For when I and my fellow-labourers in the work of the gospel were present with you, we warned you that both you and we must expect trouble and persecution in following Christ; and ye know it quickly came upon us before your eyes. 5. And on account of the troublesome circumstances in which we were forced to leave you, I could no longer forbear sending Timothy to inquire concerning your spiritual condition, lest, by the violence of persecution, the subtlety of false teachers, or the deceitfulness of your own hearts, Satan—that malicious, artful, and busy adversary—should prevail to draw some of you back from the truths and ways of the Lord, after all the promising appearances ye had made.—6. But when Timothy returned to us at Corinth, and informed us that, notwithstanding all your trials, temptations, and dangers, ye stand fast in the faith of the gospel, and in your love to Christ and his truths, ordinances, ministers, and people, and retain an affectionate remembrance of us in your daily prayers, and a lively sense of the excellent doctrines which we preached among you, and are often speaking of us with esteem and honour, and earnestly desirous of another visit from us; 7. These good tidings of your steady perseverance in the faith of Christ, and the genuine fruits thereof, entirely removed all our painful anxiety about you, and exceedingly comforted us under all the troubles to which we have been exposed for the gospel's sake. 8. For whatever were our difficulties, dejections, and solicitude concerning you before, we are now alive and comforted in our souls, and go on cheerfully in our work, since we knew that ye continue so steadfast in your adherence to the Lord Jesus, and hold fast the profession of your faith without wavering. 9. For, considering the happy state of your affairs, how can we ever be thankful enough to God, in fresh returns of praise, for his grace bestowed on you, and for giving us hearts to rejoice so exceedingly and sincerely in it before him: 10. In all our stated and occasional devotions praying with uncommon fervour, earnestness, and importunity, that, if it be his will, we may be allowed to visit you again, and be further instrumental in instructing, establishing, and building you up in knowledge, faith, comfort, and holiness, unto complete and eternal salvation? 11. And to promote these valuable purposes, may God himself, whose kingdom ruleth over all, and who is your loving God and Father; and our Lord Jesus Christ, who, as Mediator, is Head over all things to his church—by his overruling providence, grant us a speedy and unobstructed opportunity to visit you. 12. And whether we be permitted to come to you or not, may the Lord Jesus, as your Head of influence and government, enable you, by his Spirit, still more abundantly to increase in Christian love towards one another, as members of the same mystical body of Christ, and children of the same heavenly Father, and even in all good-will towards all men, with all sincerity and fervour, even as our affection increases towards you; 13. To the end that he may thus strengthen, stablish, and confirm your whole souls in the doctrines of the gospel, and in every grace, and may preserve you blameless in every good word and work, and in all holy conversation before our all-seeing God and Father, till ye be presented holy, unblamable, and unreprouvable, when Jesus Christ, attended by all his holy angels and glorified saints, shall come to judge the world.

REFLECTIONS.—Ministers should be very solicitous to demonstrate their love to their people, and use every mean possible for their establishment and comfort in the truth; and to prevent their being seduced by deceivers, or dispirited by sufferings, especially when they are but newly converted and babes in Christ.—The told you before that we should suffer tribulation; ⁴even as it came to pass, and ye know.

5 For this cause, ⁵when I could no longer forbear, I sent to know your faith, ⁶lest by some means the tempter have tempted you, and our labour be in vain.

6 But now when ⁷Timotheus came from you unto us, and brought us good tidings of your faith and charity, and that ye have good remembrance of us always, desiring greatly to see us, as we also to see you;

7 Therefore, brethren, ⁸we were comforted over you, in all our affliction and distress, by your faith:

8 For ⁹now we live, if ¹⁰ye stand fast in the Lord

9 For what ¹¹thanks can we render to God again for you, for all the joy wherewith we joy for your sakes before our God;

10 Night¹² and day praying exceedingly that we might see your face, and might ¹³perfect that which is lacking in your faith?

11 Now¹⁴ God himself and our Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, direct¹⁵ our way unto you.

12 And¹⁶ the Lord make you to increase and abound in love one toward another, and toward all ¹⁷men, even as we ¹⁸do toward you:

13 To the end he may ¹⁹stablish your hearts unblameable in holiness before God, even our Father, at the ²⁰coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints.

CHAPTER IV.

1 He exhorteth them to go forward in all manner of godliness, 6 to live holily and justly, 9 to love one another, 11 and quietly to follow their own business: 13 and, last of all, to sorrow moderately for the dead. 15 And unto this last exhortation is annexed a brief description of the resurrection, and second coming of Christ to judgment.

FURTHERMORE then ¹we beseech² you, brethren, and exhort³ you by the Lord Jesus, that ⁴as ye have received of us how ye ought to walk and to please God, ⁵so ye would abound more and more.

2 For ye know ⁶what commandments we gave you by the Lord Jesus.

3 For⁷ this is the will of God, ⁸even your sanctification, that ye should abstain from fornication:⁹

4 That every one of you should know how more thoroughly professors count the cost at their entrance on religion, the better they will withstand Satan's temptations to apostasy. And when church-members persevere and increase in knowledge, faith, love, and good works, it gives great comfort to their faithful ministers; yea, it supports them under their distresses, engages their thankfulness to God, and animates their prayers for and delight in them.—But it is Jesus Christ, and his Father, and his blessed Spirit, who are alone the proper source of believers' gospel privileges, growth and establishment in grace, and happy meetness for and comfortable appearance in the last judgment.

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 1. In order to your being established in holiness at the great coming of our Lord Jesus, with the most tender affection we entreat, and with the highest authority, in the name and for the sake of the Lord Jesus, we exhort and charge you, that, according to the inspired directions which ye have received from us, how to order your whole conversation in a manner acceptable to God through Christ, ye would, by his grace, more and more labour to improve and excel therein every day. 2. For ye cannot but know and remember what holy precepts we delivered to you when with you, as the rule of your behaviour in all things; and with what solemn and evangelical arguments we enforced and pressed them on your consciences, by the immediate authority of the exalted Lord and Saviour of his body the church. 3. For the ordaining, approving, and commanding will of God, and his end in bestowing his grace upon you, concur in this—that, encouraged by the promises of his word, ye should cleanse yourselves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in his fear; and particularly that ye should carefully avoid and to ¹possess his vessel⁴ in sanctification and honour;

5 Not⁵ in the lust of concupiscence, even as the Gentiles which know not God:

6 That no ⁶man go beyond and defraud⁵ his brother in ⁷any matter;⁶ because that ⁸the Lord is the avenger of all such, as we also have forewarned you and testified.

7 For ⁹God hath not called us unto uncleanness, but unto holiness.

8 He therefore that despiseth,⁷ despiseth¹ not man, but God, who ⁸hath also given unto us his Holy Spirit.

9 But⁹ as touching brotherly love, ye need not that I write unto you; for ye yourselves are ¹⁰taught of God to love one another.

10 And indeed ye do ¹¹it toward all the brethren which are in all Macedonia: but we beseech you, brethren, that ye ¹²increase more and more:

11 And that ¹³ye study to be quiet, and to do your own business, and to work with your own hands, as we commanded you;

12 That ¹⁴ye may walk honestly toward them that are without, and ¹⁵that ye may have lack of ¹⁶nothing.⁹

13 But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are ¹⁷asleep, that ¹⁸ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope.

14 For ¹⁹if we believe¹ that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which ²⁰sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.

15 For this we say unto you ²¹by the word of the Lord, that ²²we which are alive, ²³and remain unto the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent them which are asleep.²

16 For³ the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout,⁴ with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: ⁵and the dead in Christ shall rise first:⁴

17 Then we ⁶which are alive ⁷and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds,⁵ to meet the Lord in the air: and so ⁸shall we ever be with the Lord.

18 Wherefore ⁹comfort⁶ one another with these words.

¶ The first epistle unto the Thessalonians was written from Athens.

that they may not be exposed to shame, so they who indulge themselves in carnal security, or immoderate cares or pleasures of this world, delight in and are under the power of ignorance, error, guilt, and corruption. 8. But let us who are spiritually begotten unto God by, and endowed and surrounded with, the light of gospel truth and grace, be vigilant and moderate in our affections or pursuits of earthly enjoyments; and being in a state of warfare with sin, Satan, and the world, let us make use of our Christian armour for defending ourselves—particularly of faith in Christ, and in God through him; and of love to him, and to one another in him, which, as a breastplate, may defend our heart; and of a well-grounded, solid, and satisfying hope of eternal life through him, which, as a helmet, may secure our head, till we come off more than conquerors through him that loved us: 9. For by what God has wrought for and in us, it is evident that he would have none of us through our sins to be lost without hope for ever, but come to a free, rich, and everlasting redemption through the merits and mediation of Christ. 10. Who, as our Saviour, obeyed and died in our room and stead, to take away our sin, that, by the merit and efficacy of his death, we who believe in him, whether we be found dead or alive at the last day, should, together with, in union to, and fellowship with him, be solemnly admitted into eternal blessedness. 11. Wherefore, with the views and hopes of and converse about these glorious events, labour, as ye have begun, to comfort, establish, and edify one another. 12. And as they who minister in holy things are the ordinary means and instruments which Christ hath appointed for the instruction, conversion, and edification of men's souls unto complete salvation, we earnestly entreat and charge you to converse freely with, own, and honour, and show your liberality, love, and respect to all his faithful servants and their ministrations—who painfully labour among you for the good of your souls; and, by virtue of their commission and ability from Christ, watch over your spiritual concerns, according to the laws which he has enacted in his Word; and who, as occasions require, warn you against all sin, error, and danger; reprove what is amiss in your conduct; and exhort, counsel, and encourage you to persevere in the ways of truth, sobriety, and holiness; 13. And to esteem them in the most honourable and affectionate manner, on account of the dignity and importance of the work in which they are employed for the glory of God and your spiritual advantage; and, as ye would not dishonour Christ, grieve them, or his Spirit in them, nor prevent your profiting by their labours, follow the things that make for harmony, peace, and friendship, with them and with one another. 14. And we further beseech both ministers and people among you, in their respective stations, to admonish those that are any ways disorderly in their walk towards God or men, and to warn them of their sin and danger, and the dishonour which they bring on their holy profession, and the pernicious influence of their conduct on others, and thus endeavour to reclaim them. Encourage and comfort distressed, timorous, and dejected fellow-Christians; deal tenderly with and endeavour to strengthen the weak in faith or knowledge, and labour to uphold them from falling or stumbling; and, as far as ye can, without sin, exercise patience and forbearance towards all men, friends or enemies. 15. Whatever injurious treatment ye receive, see that ye never attempt to revenge the injuries done you, but render good for evil; and always apply yourselves to do whatever is kind, useful, and beneficial, not only to fellow-Christians, but to every one with whom ye are connected.—16. And as to personal duties, study, for the credit of religion and your own comfort, always to maintain a cheerfulness of temper, rejoicing in the Lord Jesus Christ, and God in him, in whatever he is in himself or to you, or has done, does, or will do for you. 17. But as in this world your weakness, sinfulness, necessities, and dangers are constant, let your souls always maintain a praying frame; and see that ye daily, on stated or other occasions, abound in fervent prayer for yourselves and others. 18. Always, and in all circumstances, mingling your supplications with hearty thanksgivings to God for the unnumbered mercies, spiritual and temporal, which ye have or do receive, and the eternal which ye have in hope; for this is the grateful tribute which God, by the strongest obligations, requires of you for his honour in the receipt of these favours. 19. And as none of these duties can be performed without the special assistance of the Holy Ghost, beware of neglecting, stifling, and extinguishing his gifts, graces, or operations; but carefully comply with, cherish, and improve his gracious illuminations, suggestions, and motions, to excite and enable you to proper fervour in every good work. 20. And as the Holy Ghost works by means of and according to the Word of God, see that ye never contemn, but highly prize and improve the Scriptures, and every gospel ministration thereof, whether extraordinary or not. 21. But as many false teachers are gone abroad into the world, take care, under the direction and assistance of the Holy Ghost, thoroughly to try all doctrines and practices by the rule of God's Word; and whatever ye find to be really true, good, and honourable, steadfastly cleave to it in your faith and practice. 22. And, with the greatest care, avoid everything erroneous or sinful, and even the most distant appearances thereof, or temptations thereto. 23. And, for these purposes, may that God who is reconciled to you in Christ, and who is the author, giver, commander, and approver of all true peace with himself, or with each other, thoroughly purge you from all iniquity, and make you eminently partakers of his image; and may he preserve all the powers of your soul—all your animal spirits, senses, appetites, or natural tempers, and all the members of your body, from every sinful inclination or work, that ye may be found perfect at the coming of Christ. 24. On his faithfulness ye may indeed depend; for he who has by his grace lovingly called you to his kingdom and glory, will, according to his promise, carry on and perfect whatever concerns you in your way to glory, if you will only continue faithful. 25. As we ministers are so earnest in our prayers for you, we beg that ye will daily and fervently pray for us, that, by the direction and assistance of the Holy Ghost, we may be inclined, enabled, and encouraged to the diligent and faithful discharge of our important trust, and at the end receive a crown of glory as our gracious reward. 26. Let our most affectionate and religious respects be presented to all our Christian brethren with you; and see that ye testify your cordial love to one another in the most sincere, friendly, chaste, and pious manner. 27. And as the contents of this letter are of great importance and general use, I solemnly charge you, in the name of the Lord Jesus, that it be distinctly read unto all your members, who, I hope, live together as brethren in faith, profession, holiness, and comfort.

Ver. 1. Times. Long periods marked by prophetic signs.—Seasons. Briefer periods wherein the prophecy is fulfilled. C.

Ver. 7. Even among the heathen drunkenness during the day was considered so utterly scandalous that the apostle, writing to the Thessalonian converts, treats of it as a thing unknown. What a humiliating contrast with the state of many countries nominally Christian, where drunkards may be seen revelling in their streets in the open face of day; and so far from being ashamed, glorying in their beastly degradation. C.

Ver. 8. Believers are here described as putting on their armour, because they are considered as in a state of constant danger from inveterate enemies. C.

Ver. 17. Pray without ceasing. Not as if it were possible to have the thoughts always engaged in prayer, but to observe such regular and stated times, seasons, and opportunities as the Word of God prescribes, the practice of his people exemplifies, or as Providence or the Spirit calls us to observe and improve. C.

Ver. 23. Spirit. The separable intellectual being that 'has neither flesh nor bones,' and which, when 'the dust returns to the earth,' returns for judgment 'to God who gave it.'—Soul. Man, considered as a living and sentient being.—Body. The members that obey the will in good or evil. C.

REFLECTIONS.—To desire to know the time of Christ's great coming is but needless and sinful curiosity. But great is the importance of earnest watchfulness and diligent preparations for it. With sudden ruin it will dreadfully overwhelm the world of the ungodly; but will bring the most abundant comfort to those who are begotten again to a lively hope of eternal felicity through the resurrection of Christ from the dead. And the blessed, the distinguishing grace of their pardon, will then most evidently appear. What activity, watchfulness, and sobriety; what daily warring against the devil, the world, and the flesh, in the exercise of faith, love, and hope; what mutual harmony and study of one another's edification and comfort; what due regard to the messengers, ministration, and Spirit of Christ; what careful examination of doctrines and practices, and of our own hearts, by the Word of God; what steadfast adherence to and following after that which is good; what careful avoiding of sinful anger, and every other appearance of evil; what a joyful, prayerful, and thankful frame of spirit; what cordial love and friendship—are necessary to prepare us for that great event! Infinite then is the mercy that the God of peace hath undertaken our sanctification, and will, through faith, certainly effect it. And it is his grace, power, and faithfulness, and our living faith, that are the great security of our eternal happiness. Never then let me murmur at nor fear the event of any duty when my reconciled God is so full of compassion for me; and in fervent prayer and serious perusal of the Scriptures let me be a worker together with him.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE FIRST EPISTLE TO THE THESSALONIANS.

This epistle is remarkable for its consolatory doctrines and precepts addressed to mourners. The sincere mourner is always an object of deep interest to a believer, for he beholds in him—not merely a brother in trouble, and, as such, entitled to his sympathy—but a copy, as it were, of the Lord Jesus himself, who was emphatically 'a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief.' There are not a few who address themselves to mourners as if they were, in some degree, guilty of a sin when they mourn. And, no doubt, there may be in mourning a rebellious murmuring against God. There may be ungrateful forgetfulness of past mercies, and unbelieving distrust for the future. Still, all this will not prove that mourning for the loss of friends is, in itself, sinful. Abraham mourned for Sarah; Joseph for Jacob; Martha and Mary for Lazarus; and the women stood afar off weeping at Calvary. The true remedy, therefore, for mourning, is not condemnation, but right direction. That direction guides to the coming of the Lord, the rising of the departed dead, and the hope of meeting in glory,—topics that inculcate no stoical insensibility, but accompany us to 'the house of mourning,' and sanction, while they moderate, that 'sadness of the countenance by which the heart is made better.' C.

GENERAL VIEW OF THE ACROPOLIS. [I. Thessalonians, v:28.]—The first Epistle of Paul to the Thessalonians was written from Athens, and we give a view of the Acropolis and Parthenon which stood in St. Paul's day, and also a glimpse of modern Athens as it appears to-day. We are looking toward the north. We see the ruins of the theater of Bacchus and of the Parthenon, and of the Erechtheum; and of the Propylea. To the right of the Parthenon we see Mount Lycabettus, and to the right of Mount Lycabettus we see the palace of King George I. We see a road passing along at the foot of the Acropolis over which St. Paul passed often during his stay in Athens. The Parthenon that stands upon the Acropolis, dismantled and desolate, is even to-day the most perfect specimen of architecture on the earth.

THE SECOND EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE THESSALONIANS.

This, like the former epistle, appears to have been written, not from Athens, according to the unauthorized note at the end of both, but from Corinth. It evidently was written soon after, and with the view of correcting a misapprehension of some expressions in the former epistle. Twice (1 Th. 4. 15, 17) the apostle had spoken in such a manner of 'the day of the Lord,' that they had concluded it was just at hand. This impression would appear to have led to such a cessation from secular duties as would soon have produced want in families, and have exposed the Christians to the ridicule of the Jews and heathens. The apostle, therefore, writes to rectify this error, while he labours to strengthen their faith and hope under existing persecutions. The epistle contains evident references to the following portions both of the Old and New Testaments:—Ex. 7. 11, 12; 8. 18; 9. 11; Mat. 16. 14; Ac. 14. 22; 2 Pe. 1. 20, 21. C.

CHAPTER I.

1 Saint Paul certifieth them of the good opinion which he had of their faith, love, and patience: 11 and therewithal useth divers reasons for the comforting of them in persecution, whereof the chiefest is taken from the righteous judgment of God.

PAUL,^a and Silvanus, and Timotheus, unto the church of the Thessalonians in God^d our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ:

2 Grace^b unto you, and peace, from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

3 We^c are bound to thank God always for you, brethren, as it is meet, because that your faith groweth exceedingly, and the charity of everyone of you all toward each other aboundeth;

4 So that we ourselves ^aglory in you in the churches of God, for your patience and faith in all your persecutions and tribulations that ye endure;

CHAPTER I. Ver. 1. Paul, an inspired messenger of Christ, and Silas and Timothy, his assistants in planting the gospel among you, to those in Thessalonica who have been graciously turned from heathen idols to the true and living God, and to Jesus Christ as the only true Messiah; 2. Again earnestly wish that the divine favour, in all its manifestations and effects, and all manner of spiritual peace and prosperity, may abound to all and every one of you, from God as the fountain, and through Christ as the compassionate dispenser thereof. 3. Reflecting upon what we have further heard of the remarkable increase of your faith towards God and love towards one another, we find ourselves sweetly constrained solemnly and daily to thank God for the marvellous influences of his grace on your hearts, by which these and all other graces are maintained and improved. 4. And in all the churches of Christ whither we come, with the highest esteem, honour, and delight, we make mention of your firmness of mind, calm submission, holy resolution, strong and lively faith, and steadfast adherence to Christ and the gospel, under all the persecutions and afflictions which have all along attended you for his sake; 5. Which is a manifest token that God has appointed a future, just, and impartial judgment of the world, which will set all things to rights, and in which he will adjudge you to that heavenly kingdom for the honour of which, and in hope of the enjoyment of which, ye so cheerfully suffer; 6. Since it cannot but be agreeable to God's righteous nature, will, law, and government, that in due time severe punishment be inflicted upon those that unjustly vex, distress, and cruelly persecute you on account of your adherence to the truth of the gospel; 7, 8. And that, in and through Christ, he should give you and us, who are persecuted for his cause, a release from our present tribulations, and an entrance into a state of perfect rest and peace; when our Lord Jesus, who has redeemed us to God by his own precious blood, shall, in the most public and awful manner, attended by all his millions of mighty and holy angels, appear in the clouds at the last day, cate our everlasting God of all grace, that, by the them, Jews or Gentiles, who continue in their sins, strangers to the true knowledge of God, and rebellious against the light of nature; or who continue to disobey, reject, and condemn the gracious calls of our Lord Jesus Christ in the gospel: 9. Both which sorts of sinners shall then begin to be punished with an everlasting loss of and banishment from his blissful presence, and all the glorious effects of his saving power, and an eternal suffering of the most inexpressible remorse in their souls because it shall then appear that the day of repentance and opportunity is past; 10. At the very time in which he will appear, to your joy, to glorify himself in the full performance of all his promises, in the complete salvation of all his believing ones; and to be glorified and adored by them who by faith cordially embrace the testimony of the gospel preached by us—in thankful and everlasting wonder at the riches of his grace, and the great things he has done for them. 11. In reflection upon these important events, and in hopes of your escaping the terrors and sharing the joys thereof, we daily and earnestly supplicate to adjudge the reward of their doings upon all almighty operation of his Spirit, he would gradually fulfil all his promises, and perfect your faith and other graces, and all the fruits of good works proceeding therefrom, and thus make you meet for the full enjoyment of that heavenly inheritance to which ye are called by the gospel. 12. That so the person, authority, and doctrine of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ may be exalted, in their happy effects upon you, and in your high esteem thereof and holy conversation answerable thereto; and that, by virtue of your union with him, ye may arrive at the most glorious state of perfect joy and praise, according to the free favour and grace of God, who has called you to it, and of Jesus Christ, who has secured and promised, and will bestow it upon you.

Ver. 5. The meaning seems to be this:—Admitting, as all men do, that God is a righteous Judge, he must therefore, at some time, render to every man according to his works. To you he has assigned present persecutions, but has therewith given you grace as the foretaste and token of rest and glory; to your persecutors he has given present power, but as they will they are given over to Satan's temptation, their own evil passions, and the torments of an evil conscience—a punishment already begun in time as a 'manifest token' that it will be continued in eternity. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Happy is the state of believers in God through Christ; and rich and abundant the mercies that flow from both to them. There is great ground of thankfulness when the faith, love, and patience of Christians grow exceedingly, even under great tribulation and cruel persecution. And why should saints fret at their present troubles, when the last judgment will so quickly set everything right! Awfully tremendous, but infinitely glorious, will be that appearance of our Redeemer! Fearful is the work he will then and through eternity make on obstinate sinners, especially such as rebelled against the clear light, and refused the precious blessings of the gospel. But delightfully will he glorify himself in the public honours and eternal salvation of his saints. And there is need of prayers, care, and diligence on their side, and of the work of the Spirit on his, to prepare them for that grand event.—My soul, wait and long for thy coming, thy quickly-coming Redeemer! Rejoice in hopes of thy eternal nearness to, vision, and admiration of him! Rejoice that thy worthiness lies in his righteousness and riches of grace, and in your holding by faith to the truth as it is in Christ!

CHAPTER II. Ver. 1. But, having attempted to comfort you under your present tribulations with the certain prospect of Christ's appearance to judge the his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe (because our testimony among you was believed) in that day.

11 Wherefore also we pray always for you, that our God would count you worthy of this calling, and fulfil all the good pleasure of his goodness, and the work of faith with power;

12 That the name of our Lord Jesus Christ may be glorified in you, and ye in him, according to the grace of our God and the Lord Jesus Christ.

CHAPTER II.

1 He willeth them to continue steadfast in the truth received, 3 sheweth that there shall be a departure from the faith, 8 and a discovery of antichrist, before the day of the Lord come. 15 And thereupon repeateth his former exhortation, and prayeth for them.

NOW we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him,

2 That ye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter, as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand.

3 Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day shall not come except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition;

4 Who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he, as God, sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God.

5 Remember ye not, that, when I was yet with you, I told you these things?

20 I cannot think the apostle could refer in such terms as these to a simple misunderstanding or misinterpretation of his own former epistle. He must have heard while at Corinth that an epistle, falsely ascribed to him, had recently been circulated among the Thessalonians, and that they were being led astray by it. His object now is to expose the forgery, and to correct the wrong impressions.—P.

6 And now ye know what withholdeth, that he might be revealed in his time.

7 For the mystery of iniquity doth already work: only he who now letteth, will let, until he be taken out of the way.

8 And then shall that Wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming.

9 Even him, whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all power and signs and lying wonders,

10 And with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved.

11 And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie:

12 That they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness.

13 But we are bound to give thanks alway to God for you, brethren beloved of the Lord, because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth;

14 Whereunto he called you by our gospel, to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ.

15 Therefore, brethren, stand fast, and hold the traditions which ye have been taught, whether by word, or our epistle.

world, I must now, in the most solemn manner, entreat and adjure you, by your belief, expectations, and desire of that awful event, and by your hopes of being gathered, along with us and other saints, to his right hand, and of being for ever with the Lord, 2. That ye take heed that none, pretending to a spirit of prophecy, or misconstruing our words, or appealing to spurious writings which pass in our name, or any old tradition, mislead and perplex your mind, or stagger your faith, by insinuations that the coming of Christ to the last judgment is instantly to take place; the failure of which, if believed, might tempt you to disbelieve his coming at all, or even the whole truth of the gospel. 3. Let no pretences whatever decoy you into this pernicious notion; for, by revelations from God, I can assure you that the last judgment shall not happen till there has been a remarkable general apostasy from the faith, worship, and holiness of the gospel; and an antichristian succession of impious men, Romish popes, and their agents, has manifestly appeared in the church, countenancing and propagating the vilest corruptions in doctrine, worship, and practice, and, by seduction and persecution, destroying the souls and bodies of multitudes, till they themselves at last sink into everlasting destruction: 4. Who also, by pretended claims to civil and ecclesiastical authority, shall proudly assume a sovereign power over magistrates, ministers, or even angels, good or bad—a power in heaven, earth, and hell, superior to what had ever been ascribed to heathen gods; and shall set themselves in opposition to Christ in his mediatorial offices and members, and even pretend a power equal to or above the most High—in disposing of his worship to other objects, dispensing with his laws, nullifying or establishing his ordinances at pleasure; and, sitting in the church, shall assume titles, and exercise authority to confer gifts and graces, pardons and salvations, as if they were God himself. 5, 6. And as ye know I warned you that Christ would not appear to judgment till after this dreadful apostasy, I now inform you that it is the subsistence of the Roman empire under one political head which at present restrains the complete revelation of that anti-christian empire which I have just mentioned. 7. For that apostasy, which includes an unsearchable depth of error and wickedness, is already, in a secret manner, spreading its malignant influence in the pride, worldly-mindedness, will-worship, and corruption of the doctrine of free justification before God, which take place among Christian professors, and would quickly appear in all its extent, power, pomp, and grandeur, were it not that the present imperial pagan government of Rome will prevent and restrain it till God, in his appointed time, remove the seat of the emperors from Rome, and even abolish the present form of the empire: 8. And then, through the growing ambition and luxury of church-rulers, under the protection and indulgence of the Christian emperors, and the division of the empire into ten kingdoms, all submitting to the delusion, shall that wicked and lawless system of the Papacy appear in its full power and pomp, and continue till the Lord Jesus, by the pure preaching of the gospel, and the zealous opposition of the Reformers, and by his fearful judgments, when he comes to fill the whole earth with his glory, shall utterly destroy it.—9. The introduction and maintenance of which papal system will, in imitation, and by the special influence and craft of Satan, be effected, by high pretences of authority from Christ, to work miraculous and wonderful operations for its honour; 10. And, at his instigation, will be carried on, by every subtle and deceitful artifice, managed in the most unrighteous manner, so as to delude those into eternal perdition who, through the influence of Satan and their own corrupt lusts, did not heartily receive the truths of the gospel, and Christ therein, as the only means of their salvation: 11. To punish which dislike and rejection of the truth as it is in Jesus, God shall deliver them up to the hardening, blinding, and delusive influence of their own hearts, that, by means thereof, they may consent to the merest forgeries, and the most absurd errors, vile idolatries, and gross superstitions; 12. That thus being left to the foolish and perverse influence of their own hearts, all of them may be condemned and punished with everlasting destruction who rejected Christ and his gospel truths, and took pleasure in perverting his Word, corrupting his worship, violating his laws, and persecuting his people. 13. But, in both duty and affection, we must bless and thank God that he hath warned you against such ruinous apostasy, having, in his universal, undying love, called you to complete and eternal salvation, to which he has sought by faith and through the universal and gradual renovation of your nature and knowledge, righteousness and true holiness wrought in you by the Holy Ghost, and through a faithful trust in Christ, and faithful adherence to him, as manifested and offered in the gospel, as God's appointed means of eternal happiness; 14. To which complete and eternal salvation, in consequence of faith in Christ, he has tenderly called you by the gospel which we preached unto you, that, through the attending operation of the Holy Ghost, ye might be fully entitled to, prepared for, and at last introduced into, the eternal enjoyment of that glorious blessedness which our Lord Jesus Christ has secured and prepared, taken possession of, promised to, and bestowed upon, his believing people. 15. Inconsideration therefore of the secret and subtle operations of Antichrist to draw men from the faith, and of what God has done for and promised to you, we earnestly beseech you to stand fast in the faith, hope, comfort, and holiness of the gospel—steadfastly maintaining all those important points of truth and duty in which ye have been instructed by me, and my fellow-ministers of Christ, by word or writing. 16. And, for this purpose, may the Lord Jesus Christ, who has redeemed us by his blood, and secured eternal glory for us, and will at last confer it upon us; and God, his and our Father, who has loved us with an everlasting love, and often revived our souls by those everlasting consolations which flow from and are founded on it, and given us a solid, scriptural, and well-grounded hope of eternal life, confirmed by his Holy Spirit dwelling and working in our hearts.—17. Fill your souls yet more and more with all joy and peace in believing, and effectually comfort your hearts under all your troubles, fears, and dangers, and more and more establish you

16 Now^a our Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God, even our Father, which hath loved us, and hath given us^a everlasting consolation and good hope through grace,

17 Comfort^y your hearts, and stablish you in every good word and work.⁷

6 The word 'tradition' is liable to be misunderstood. Its Greek equivalent in the original means 'lesson,' or 'oral teaching.' The apostle first taught the Thessalonians orally: it is to the doctrines and precepts he then set before them that he here refers, and not to anything which we could legitimately call tradition.—P.

name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye ^kwithdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which he received of us.⁶

7 For yourselves know how ^lye ought to follow us: for we behaved not ourselves disorderly among you;⁷

8 Neither did we eat any man's bread for nought; but ^mwrought with labour and travail night⁸ and day, that we might not be chargeable to any of you:

9 Not⁹ because we have not power, but ⁿto make ourselves an ensample unto you to follow us.

10 For even when we were with you, this we commanded you, ^othat if any would not work, neither should he eat.

11 For we hear that there are some which ^pwalk among you disorderly, working not at all, but are busy-bodies.

12 Now them that are such ^qwe command and exhort by our Lord Jesus Christ, ^rthat with quietness they work, and eat their own bread.

Ver. 4. This 'man of sin'—this patron of sin—this 'son of perdition'—this heir of destruction—is to be found sitting 'in the temple of God,' the church, 1 Co. 3.16, 17; 2 Co. 6.16; 1 Ti. 3.15; Re. 3.12. 'He exalteth himself above all that is called God'—above all authority in churches and states, Ps. 82.6; Jn. 10.34—'showing himself that he is God,' by assuming his titles, attributes, and powers. Now these characteristics have never been discovered in any man or succession of men, but in the Papacy. There, however, they all meet.—Wherefore the conclusion is inevitable—the prophecy describes the Papacy. C.

Ver. 6. The Roman empire 'withheld' and prevented the erection of the Papacy. So soon as it 'was taken out of the way,' the papal dominion, as great and as despotic, was erected upon its pedestal. C.

Ver. 8. That 'that Wicked' or 'lawless one' may, according to Scripture, represent a succession or be an individual, is unquestionable. The two views are not inconsistent with each other. Among the successive pontiffs of Rome there may yet arise one who shall surpass in pride, presumption, and anti-Christian despotism, and be punished with such accumulated and personal judgments as were dealt out in detail to his typical predecessors. C.

Ver. 11. Not that God will send 'delusion' purposing to mislead; but God will send truth to inform and rebuke, and self-interest will reject God's testimony; and wicked men, listening to the voice of their own counsel and the impulses of their own passions, will be deluded into a rejection of God's holy call to reformation, as Pharaoh's heart was hardened by God's righteous demand of his people's freedom. See Ex. 9.34, 35. C.

Ver. 13. From the beginning is an equivalent for eternity. Comp. Pr. 8.23 with Ep. 1.4. C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is dangerous to fix the periods which God has concealed. Disappointment of the events expected may tempt us to discredit the whole gospel. That Christ will come is certain; our business is not to inquire when, but to be always ready to meet him. Happy will be the time when all the ransomed millions shall be gathered to and be for ever with him! By what strange wickedness of men does God punish obstinate and haughty professors, and carry on the designs of his glory! The most fearful lengths in wickedness will seducers go when left to their own hearts' lusts. But the triumphing of the wicked is short. Evil consequences overtakes them in due time. And when God has accomplished his purpose for the trial of his saints he leaves those who reject Christ to the reward of their doings.—But there is great ground of thanksgiving that nothing can defeat his blessed purpose; nothing can defeat his gracious and sanctifying influence; nothing can separate from his love; nothing can rob us of his comforts; nothing can undermine the faith or hope which is founded on his Word.—Stand fast, my soul!

ceive his precious truths, and give thyself unto prayer; so shalt thou be comforted and established in every good word and work.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 1. Now, my dear brethren in Christ, let me entreat your most fervent prayers for me and my fellow-labourers in preaching the gospel, that we may be graciously directed, assisted, and owned of God, in our great and difficult work; and that the gospel of salvation, of which Christ is the author and principal subject, may be speedily and successively spread far and wide; and may, as with you, be honourably received, and produce glorious effects in the conversion, edification, and holy conversation of multitudes, wherever it is preached: 2. And that we may be kept or rescued out of the hands of unbelieving Jewish zealots and false brethren, who are so insolently perverse and absurd in their reasonings and prejudices, and maliciously wicked in their principles and practices—labouring everywhere to defame, vex, and cruelly persecute us; for many who pretend to religion, and even to Christianity, do not cordially embrace Jesus Christ in his gospel by a true faith, which works by love, and purifies their heart. 3. But let neither the falls of others, nor their violent opposition to you or your way, for the sake of the gospel, discourage you; for God, whose faithful promise ye have heartily embraced, will graciously fulfil whatever he hath spoken, in confirming, establishing, and strengthening you in the doctrine and grace of faith, and in your profession of it, and practice of godliness according to it; and will preserve you from the ruinous influences of sin, Satan, and the world. 4. And as your preservation must be in the way of holy obedience, we firmly and joyfully trust in the Lord Jesus, that, through union to and gracious influences from him, ye shall, as heretofore, be enabled to persevere in an exact observance of all those commandments which we have delivered to you in his name and authority. 5. And in this hope we earnestly pray that the Holy Ghost would, by his grace, light, and influence, rectify every irregular motion of your hearts, and really direct and carry them into a clear and experimental acquaintance with the love of God to you, and into the most lively exercises of love to him, under a sense of his having first loved you; and into a patient continuance in well-doing, under all manner of trouble and persecution for Christ's sake, and a patient waiting for his great coming, to put an end to your trials, and make you a rich and everlasting, but gracious amends. 6. But, as we understand, some of your society, notwithstanding our former admonitions, continue to be idle and busy-bodies, by virtue of our commission from Christ, we do, in his name and authority, charge you to remove from your holy communion, and avoid all unnecessary familiarity with, every member of your church who thus obstinately perseveres in a course so injurious to public and family peace, dishonourable to the Christian character, and contrary to the rules of the gospel. 7. For ye know how ye ought to persist in following the holy, just, active, and unblamable pattern which we carefully set before you when among you; 8. Labouring to our utmost in preaching the gospel, and in working at our trades for our necessary subsistence, that we might give to no one the smallest occasion to pretend we were burdensome: 9. Not because we had not a divine right to a proper maintenance, as apostles and ministers of Christ, but that we might prevent every prejudice against us, and propagate the gospel more successfully, and that we might set you a good example, and excite you to industry in your respective callings. 10. For having observed some appearances of an indolent temper among you, we, when with you, strictly commanded, that if any of your members should, through wilful indolence, reduce himself and family to straits, he should not be allowed any maintenance out of the public charity of the church, which ought only to be applied for the relief of such as through sickness, old age, or the like, are not able to work for themselves. 11. And we still insist on this, as we are credibly informed that there are some of you who, in contradiction to our express injunctions, the general rule of Christianity, the express requirements of the moral law, and the order of the creation, and of all regular societies, indulge themselves in idleness, sauntering about, and curiously prying, and officiously thrusting themselves into other people's business, to the disturbance of neighbours, and creating of jealousies, misunderstandings, and quarrels among friends. 12. Such as are of this slothful and pernicious temper, we again solemnly charge, by the authority of God, and earnestly entreat, by the endearing love of Jesus Christ, and as they would avoid his fearful displeasure, and honour their profession of his name, that, with a quiet, meek, and peaceable frame of spirit, they would apply themselves diligently to the work of their stations, that, by the blessing of God, they may honestly provide for themselves and their families. 13. And we beseech such of you as attach yourselves to your proper work, unweariedly to persevere in the diligent discharge of the civil and religious duties of your respective stations, and particularly in liberality to the industrious poor epistle was doubtless occasioned by the circulation of the forged letter referred to in ch. 2. 2. Paul here states that while he employed ordinarily an amanuensis, yet he authenticates each genuine epistle by a closing salutation in his own hand.—¹ 2 See Ro. 10. 24. 1 Th. 5. 28. 2 Th. 2. 25.

among you. 14. And if, notwithstanding our present and former admonitions, any persist in their idleness, or other disorderly courses, let your church set a brand of infamy on them, turning them from her fellowship; and let every particular member abstain from all unnecessary converse with them, that, being put to shame, they may, through the influences of God's Spirit, be made to reflect on, and repent of, loathe, and abhor their sin. 15. But never treat them with austerity or roughness, as if ye aimed at their temporal or spiritual ruin, nor immediately look on them as implacable and incorrigible enemies to Christ and the gospel; but, in all your reproofs, censures, and admonitions, deal tenderly and affectionately with them, as brethren, in hopes that, by your diligent and repeated attempts, they may be reclaimed and restored to their former place in the church. 16. Now may the Lord Jesus Christ, the author, fountain, and bestower of all manner of peace and prosperity, by all the means of his own appointment, continually and abundantly confer it upon you, in your personal and relative capacities; and may he himself afford all and every one of you his special presence in the way of providence and grace, to protect, guide, assist, comfort, and perfect all that concerns you. 17, 18. Marking therefore my kindest wishes to you in my own hand-writing, as I do in all my letters, as a token of their being genuine, I earnestly pray and hope that the full love and favour of our Lord Jesus Christ, inclusive of all its manifestations, fruits, and effects, may continually abound to all and every one of you, from this time henceforth and for ever.

Ver. 2. Faith here evidently signifies faithfulness to resolutions, promises, and obligations, as appears from comparing this with the following verse, where the Lord is distinguished as 'faithful.' C.

Ver. 6. Disorderly. A military allusion signifying out of rank, out of union with the general movement, and without or contrary to the word of command. C.

Ver. 17. The apostle, either from tremor of the hand, inexperience in the Greek characters, or perhaps because he worked and dictated at the same time, usually employed an amanuensis, but affixed his own signature to prevent imposition. C.

REFLECTIONS.—There is need of much fervent prayer for the success of the gospel, and for the preservation and assistance of faithful ministers, that their labours may not be obstructed by the craft or violence of wicked men. And it is an inconceivable mercy to have God's promise and care for securing our endurance and comfort in an evil day. Thrice happy are they whom the Holy Ghost directs into the love of God, and into a patient waiting for Christ's great coming; and whose hearts truly accept the faith, holiness, and hope of the gospel.—It is necessary, for the honour and safety of the church, that scandalous professors be prudently and carefully censured and withdrawn from; but true kindness, not harshness, must be used to bring them to repentance. The industrious, but helpless poor, should be relieved with cheerfulness, according to their wants; but idle and disorderly persons ought to receive, not liberality, but correction, from both church and state.—It is a great mercy to have exemplary ministers, persevering and lively Christians, but especially to have a gracious Redeemer present in the church.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE SECOND EPISTLE TO THE THESSALONIANS.

This epistle naturally suggests the necessity of caution and careful examination when some new and striking doctrine is propounded; especially when such a doctrine rests upon some isolated portions of Scripture. The prophetic utterance in the Gospel by Matthew (ch. 24. 30, 34), conjoined with that of Paul (1 Th. 4. 15, 17), seems, when superficially examined, to indicate the speedy, the almost immediate, coming of the Lord to judgment. By superficial examination is meant, an examination of the passages by themselves, without the light to be derived from 'comparing spiritual with spiritual,' scripture with scripture. Such comparison, humbly and prayerfully conducted—as all scriptural examination specially requires—would have enabled the Thessalonians to discover that, while the Lord, as judge, is ever at hand, the precise time of his coming is utterly unknown (Mat. 24.

36, 42), and that a long series of events, most precisely foretold, must be realized before the day of his final coming to the judgment of the quick and the dead. The Thessalonians, in thus hasting to a conclusion apparently warranted by some few passages of Scripture which they had not paused to compare with others, exhibited, however, nothing but what is common in the history of all ages of the church. Hence have arisen errors and heresies upon the one side; and, to escape them, the lethargic sleep of infallibility, on the other. But God, who always brings good out of evil, light out of darkness, and order out of confusion, has overruled this propensity in the case of the Thessalonians, and drawn from the apostle this second epistle, in which their error is corrected, and a salutary warning against precipitate judgments furnished to all future ages of the church. C.

THE FIRST EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO TIMOTHY.

Descended from a Jewish mother and grandmother, Timothy had been very early instructed by them in the knowledge of the Old Testament. By the ministration of Paul at Lystra he was converted to the Christian faith, and remarkably enriched with the gifts and graces of the Holy Ghost, Ac. xvi. Having circumcised him, that the Jews might take no offence at him on account of his father being a Greek, Paul took him to be his companion, under the character of an evangelist. And having left him at Ephesus to rectify and establish the complete order of the church there, he sent him this and the subsequent epistle, to fix upon his mind the instructions which he had formerly given him, and enable him to communicate the same to others. In them the apostle testifies his affection, warns him of danger, and directs him in his personal and ministerial conduct.—The second was written from Rome, perhaps several years after the first.

[The date of this epistle is supposed to be about A.D. 64, soon after the apostle's imprisonment at Rome. It contains references to the following passages in the Old Testament:—Ge. 45. 10, 11; De. 19. 15; 32. 39; Ezr. 6. 10; Is. 1. 15; 14. 12; Je. 29. 7; Eze. 33. 9; Mal. 1. 11. C.]

CHAPTER I. Ver. 1. Paul, an inspired and immediately commissioned messenger of Jesus Christ, who is the great Lord and Redeemer, the author, object, ground, and bestower of all our solid hopes of grace here, or eternal glory hereafter—and of God our Father in him; 2. To his dearly beloved Timothy, of whose conversion, and establishment in the grace and doctrines of faith, God has made him the honoured instrument—earnestly wishes the most abundant manifestations and effects of God's infinite love and tender compassion, to support, relieve, and comfort you under all the temptations, labours, difficulties, and dangers of your station, together with all manner of peace with God, your conscience, and the saints, and all manner of prosperity, temporal or spiritual, from God the fountain of blessings, and from Jesus Christ who gives them to all believers. 3, 4. I earnestly desired you to tarry some time at Ephesus after I departed thence into Macedonia, that you might, in the most solemn and authoritative manner, charge the judaizing Christians there to beware of corrupting the gospel of Christ, which I preach, with anything different or contrary; and that they never regard or propagate any foolish and ill-grounded traditions, or any frivolous genealogies of descent from Abraham or any other patriarch, which leads to useless, intricate, and endless controversies, and have no tendency to promote the conversion of sinners to God, their establishment in the doctrines of faith, or their diligent perseverance in walking with God.—5. Now the end of that charge, which I ordered you to enforce, as well as of the whole law of God, in opposition to fabulous, fruitless, and perplexing disputes, is, to promote a spirit of love to God, to Christ, and to one another, as springing from a sanctified heart, and a faithful, pure, and quiet conscience, purged from dead works by the blood of Christ, and from an inward principle of sincere faith, without the least hypocrisy; 6. From which grand scope and important ingredients of practical religion some having wandered, have turned aside into a course of vain talking of things altogether unprofitable, and serving only to stir up animosities, strifes, and doubtful disputations; 7. Affecting to set up for doctors and interpreters of the law, and to impose it upon the Gentiles, while in reality they neither understand the true scope and design of it, nor what they say in their confident pretensions to explain it. 8. But we who, through the knowledge of the gospel, are enlightened in the principal design and tendency of the whole Jewish dispensation, are fully convinced that the law is a good appointment of God for answering good purposes, if it be properly used as a mean of bringing us to Christ; and that even the ceremonial law is of great use, if we consider it as a typical representation of Christ and the gospel church, and now fulfilled and abolished; and that the law in its own nature is holy, just, and good, and is of admirable use to convince us of our sin and misery, and to make us flee to Jesus Christ; and, as a rule of obedience, to direct us how to depend on him, and gratefully improve the benefits which we receive from him! 9-11. Fully satisfied that the moral law, though still continuing in force as the law of Christ's kingdom, is not designed to condemn a true believer, who is made the righteousness of God in him, and who, from a principle of faith, has an impartial respect to all his commandments, but stands in force for the condemnation of all impenitent, unbelieving, and obstinate transgressors, particularly those who have no fear of God in their hearts, no desire after him, and no care to be subject to his authority; and for those who wilfully rebel against his laws, and worship false gods; those who, being destitute of true holiness, condemn God and religion; those who murder their near relations or others, or who indulge themselves in fornication, adultery, sodomy, or other unnatural lusts; those who steal men or women, that they may either use or sell them as slaves; those who addict themselves to lying in jest, excuse, malice, or to procure gain; those who violate their promises, vows, or oaths, or swear falsely in courts of judicature; and, in fine, those who indulge themselves in any form of wickedness, contrary to the pure doctrines of revelation, and to the holy nature, design, and obligation of the gospel of our salvation through Christ, which so illustriously displays the glorious perfections, counsels, and operations of the infinitely happy, ever-blessed, and self-sufficient God, who communicates to creatures whatever happiness they enjoy—the preaching of which gospel was committed to me as a precious trust, to be faithfully preserved and dispensed wherever I come. 12. And while I think of the high honour of this important trust, I cannot but, from the very bottom of my soul, bless and praise our infinitely gracious Saviour and Lord Jesus Christ, who has qualified, authorized, and strengthened me as an apostle faithfully to minister the gospel of his grace; 13. Even me, who, before my heart was graciously and powerfully reached and converted, had been a furious blasphemer of his divine Person and doctrine, an outrageous persecutor of his members, a most injurious reviler of his name, people, and interests. But my transcendent wickedness, proceeding from ignorant and blind zeal, not from any desperate and malicious opposition to the Holy Ghost's clear convictions of his Messiahship, to the everlasting astonishment of angels and men, and especially my own, I, after all, freely received forgiving and converting mercy, and was graciously put into the apostleship. 14. Yea, the free favour of the infinitely compassionate Lord Jesus to me—ward superabounded all expectation, estimation, or conception, in awakening and convicting my unbelieving heart, and developing deep and strong love to him, his people, and cause, to which I had formerly been so inveterate an enemy; and in the conversion of multitudes to himself by my ministrations. 15. Thus my own experience, as well as the whole tenor of the gospel revelation, bears witness, for the encouragement of sinful men, that its grand or summary article may be depended on as infallibly true and faithful, and every way worthy to be universally believed and affectionately embraced by all men, viz. That the great end of Christ's assuming human nature, and coming into the world under the character of a Saviour, to fulfil the law, and suffer and die for them, and of his being offered to them in the gospel, was and is that he might deliver them, Gentiles as well as Jews, from sin and wrath, and bring them to that eternal salvation which is in him—a transcendent and amazing instance of which has appeared in me, who exceeded all other sinners, however notorious, in my inalignant blasphemy of Christ and persecution of his members. 16. And for encouraging the most enormous transgressors to believe in him, it must be remarked, that this astonishing instance of free, loving, and abounding grace towards me, was designed, by the infinite wisdom and goodness of God, not merely for the salvation of my soul, but that in me first of all, and as the very chief of sinners, Jesus Christ might set forth a distinguished example to what amazing length his patience and mercy can extend—as an encouragement to every sinner who shall ever, by his grace, be led to trust in him alone for pardon and eternal life. 17. Let therefore that infinitely gracious Lord Jesus, who is the Sovereign of all things, and head over all things to his church—everlasting, incorruptible, and purely spiritual; and who, together with his Father and blessed Spirit, is the infinitely and only wise God, and Giver of all wisdom to creatures—be henceforth and for ever magnified and adored in the loftiest strains.—18. The above charge I have committed to your special care, that, according to some prophetic intimations concerning you before you entered on the ministry, you may be more excited to improve your superior gifts and miraculous powers in acting the part of a diligent, courageous, and faithful soldier of Jesus Christ, in fighting under him against sin, Satan, and the world, and valiantly standing up for the truth against all opposition; 19. Holding fast the doctrines of the gospel in a firm faith and constant profession thereof, and holding it forth to others in your ministry, and studying to be conscientiously upright in preaching it, and living answerably to it; which some neglecting and rejecting, have, to their inexpressible danger, loss, and damage, entirely renounced its doctrines and their profession of it, and abandoned themselves to error and immorality; 20. Of which apostates I mention two infamous ring-leaders, that you, and all other Christians, may beware of them, and bear testimony against them; namely, Hymeneus and Alexander, whose notorious subversion of the faith and holiness of the gospel, and dangerous errors and immoralities, laid me under the disagreeable necessity of apostolically casting them out of the visible church, and delivering them up to Satan, as his subjects—that by means of such awful discipline, they might be brought to a conviction and repentance of their wickedness, at least deterred from persisting in their blasphemous defamations of the name, doctrines, and ways of the Lord.

Ver. 3. When I went into Macedonia. This journey was made after Paul's release from his first imprisonment in Rome, which took place about A.D. 63. Immediately after his release, he probably carried out his intention of visiting Spain; then he turned again eastward, and after a missionary tour through Asia Minor, settled down for a time at Ephesus. He left Ephesus perhaps about A.D. 66, and wrote this epistle from some place in Greece, after passing through Macedonia. I think its date can scarcely be earlier than the close of the year 66. P.

Ver. 4. The genealogies of the Jews were intricate and traditional pedigrees, whereby they sought either to establish their offices as priests or Levites, their rank as descendants of David or the princes of tribes, their titles to properties, as descendants of the original owners; and, in other cases, the origin and preservation of their vain traditions, which they asserted they had received, and affected to trace, from Joshua and the elders.—Note. Even so, till this hour, does the popedom assert a 'genealogy' ascending to Peter, vainly denominated 'prince of the apostles.' And, though even tradition fails to establish any uniform consent as to the imaginary line of 'apostolic succession,' yet upon that unsettled, and therefore endless 'genealogy,' does Rome found her claim to supremacy over all churches, and infallibility in all doctrines. own house, how shall he take care of the church of God?)

6 Not a novice,⁴ lest being lifted up with pride, he fall into the condemnation of the devil.

7 Moreover he must have a good report of them which are without; lest he fall into reproach and the snare of the devil.

8 Likewise must the deacons be grave, not double-tongued, not given to much wine, not greedy of filthy lucre;

9 Holding⁴ the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience.

10 And let these also first be proved; then let them use the office of a deacon, being found blameless.

11 Even^m so must their wives be grave, not slanderers, sober, faithful in all things.

12 Let the deacons be the husbands of one wife, ruling their children and their own houses well.

13 For^o they that have used⁵ the office of a deacon well, purchase to themselves a good degree, and great boldness in the faith which is in Christ Jesus.

14 These things write I unto thee, hoping to come unto thee shortly:

15 But if I tarry long, that thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground⁶ of the truth.

16 And, without controversy, great is the mystery of godliness: God was manifest in the flesh,⁷ justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory.⁸

and a praise to them that do well. The extent of God's grace, and of Christ's mediation, to all sorts and ranks of men, should excite us cheerfully and powerfully to pray for them. And infinite is the mercy that in God's grace and Jesus' merit there is room for us all. The gospel and ordinances of God are now confined to no place in the world; but faithful ministers may preach it to every creature; and men may everywhere have full access to God in his worship. But let us always remember the holiness and reverence with which we ought to approach him.—Since sin entered by a woman, what reason have women to be remarkably holy and humble, and to avoid all ostentation of dress, which is but a badge and memorial of sin! And there is need of faith and love, and a holy conversation, in order to their safe and sanctified endurance in childbirth.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 1. And with respect to offices in the Christian church, it is certain that he who, having suitable qualifications, is inclined, from a regard to the glory of God and the edification of souls, to enter upon the office of a pastor or overseer in it, aims at a very honourable, important, and useful, though laborious office: 2. It is nevertheless necessary that you, and all others concerned in their admission, take care that their qualifications be truly proper and edifying. Every pastor or ruler in the Christian church ought to be of an unexceptionable moral character; must never be connected with more than one wife at once; must be very circumspect and diligent in his work; watchful against Satan and all his instruments, and over his own spirit, words, and actions, and for the souls of those committed to his charge. He ought to be very moderate in his appetites, passions, and pleasures; to be affable, courteous, prudent, and engaging in his behaviour; to be ready, according to his ability, to relieve the necessities of the poor, and entertain godly ministers, or others properly recommended; and should be furnished with a good stock of Christian knowledge and experience, that he may be capable of expressing his sentiments with freedom, clearness, and propriety, for the instruction of others, and for supporting and defending the truths of the gospel on all suitable occasions. 3. He must by no means be given to long or frequent drinking, nor be of a furious and quarrelsome temper; nor so fond of earthly riches as to be ready to procure them by unworthy means; but should be of a meek, calm, peaceable, and forbearing spirit: not abusive, noisy, and clamorous, in talking or disputing; nor covetous of what belongs to his neighbour; nor inordinately attached to the things of this world. 4. And if he have a family, he must be one who maintains a prudent authority over his children and servants, obliging them to submit to his lawful commands respecting either religion towards God or decent behaviour towards men. 5. For if a man do not govern his own family right, it cannot be expected that he has prudence or resolution enough to be a ruler in the more high and difficult affairs of the church of God, where everything must be conducted with decency and order. 6. Nor ought he to be a raw upstart; nor, in ordinary cases, one newly converted to the faith of Christ; lest, being lifted up with a high conceit of his own abilities, early honour, or popular applause, he should, through the instigation of Satan, fall by pride into eternal ruin, as the devil did. 7. Moreover, he ought to have a clear reputation among the unbelieving world around, whether Jews or Gentiles, who earnestly watch for the halting of church-officers, lest the stain of his character should bring a reproach upon the name, doctrine, and ways of the Lord, and so the devil seize an advantage against him, to the hurt of his own soul, the marring of his usefulness, the discredit of religion, the triumph of its adversaries, the grief of the godly, and the stumbling of young converts.—8. The deacons also, whose office it is to manage the public funds of the church, ought to be men of a grave, decent, and venerable behaviour, and of good report; not given to speak one thing while they mean another, nor to talk contumaciously at different times to serve a turn; not indulgers of themselves in the too free use of intoxicating liquors, which would blemish their character, and render them unfit for their work; not of an avaricious temper, that might tempt them to withhold from the poor, or apply it to their own use. 9. And as to their religious character, they ought to be steadfast adherents to the pure, unmixed, but mysterious and incomprehensible truths of the gospel, with all the sincerity of a heart purified by faith, and purged from an evil conscience by the blood of Christ. 10. And it is proper that their qualifications, moral and religious, be well tried and manifested before they be admitted to their office. 11. And if they are in a married state, their wives, for the credit of religion and of their husbands, ought to be of a grave, chaste, and decent behaviour, free from all lightness of temper, words, dress, or deportment; not slanderers, nor injurious tale-bearers, but watchful over their tongues and tempers; moderate in eating and drinking, and frugal in their management; faithful to God, to their husbands, and every trust committed to them. 12. The deacons also, as well as the pastors, must have but one wife at a time, and should avoid all unlawful divorces; and, for an example to others, should rule their own children and servants in a truly Christian manner. 13. And to these things they ought carefully to attend, as their faithful and prudent execution of their office, for a considerable time, will render them highly respected in the church, and increase their gifts and graces answerably to their station, and will em-

CHAPTER IV.

1 He foretelleth that in the latter times there shall be a departure from the faith. 6 And to the end that Timothy might not fail in doing his duty, he furnisheth him with divers precepts belonging thereto.

1 The Greek words signify 'teachings of devils,' and not 'doctrines about devils,' or 'demon-worship.' That many of those false doctrines which prevailed in the early church, and still prevail, had their origin in the teachings or suggestions of Satan and his angels, cannot be questioned. It is to this Paul here alludes.—P.

7 But^l refuse profane and old wives' fables, and exercise thyself ^m rather unto godliness.

8 For bodily exercise profiteth ⁿ little;² but godliness is profitable unto all things, ^o having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come.

9 This^p is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation.

10 For^q therefore we both labour and suffer reproach, because we ^r trust in the living God, who is the ^s Saviour of all men, ^t specially of those that believe.

11 These^u things command and teach.

12 Let^v no man despise thy youth;³ but be thou an ^w example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity.

13 Till^x I come, give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine.

14 Neglect^y not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery.

15 Meditate^z upon these things; give thyself bolden them to an open, free, and courageous profession of the doctrines of Christ, and of their faith in him, by which they have derived grace from him, to render them faithful in fulfilling their trust for his glory.

—14. These things I write for the present direction of you or others, hoping, ere long, to see you at Ephesus, or somewhere else, and give you further instructions. 15. But if our interview should be deferred beyond my expectation, this letter will serve to direct your behaviour in that religious society which the only living and true God has formed and established, for his own spiritual residence and honour, of credible professors of his truths, animated by his Spirit; and which holds forth and maintains the doctrines of the glorious gospel upon which it is founded, and of which Jesus Christ is the sum and substance. 16. For, without all controversy, that doctrine which furnishes us for and animates us to the strictest piety towards God and love to our neighbour, is a great, glorious, and incomprehensible mystery, viz. that the eternal Son of God, one in nature and equal in glory to his Father and blessed Spirit, was manifested in his incarnation and debasement in this world; and having honoured God's law and justice by his obedience, sufferings, and death, was set apart and made of God as the Saviour and righteous Head of his church; and being by the Holy Ghost raised from the dead for our justification, was honourably attested in the miraculous confirmation and success of the gospel; and as angels had all along admired and ministered to him, they did, in his resurrection and ascension, and will at his great coming, attend him; and being raised from the dead, and ascended to heaven, he was, is, and will be, preached to both Jews and Gentiles, and by faith received by multitudes of them, particularly the latter, as their only and all-sufficient Saviour: yea, as he was gloriously received up to his Father's right hand to receive all glory and power, so he has been and shall be gloriously received, owned, and professed by multitudes under the glorious dispensation of his Spirit; and shall, after his judging the world, be solemnly introduced, with all his mystical body, into all the inexpressible glories and felicities of the eternal state.

Ver. 2. Blameless. Furnishing the enemies of the gospel no just cause of accusation.—The husband of one wife. Not conforming to the Jewish or heathen custom of having more at once than one wife, or having married another after an arbitrary repudiation of a former wife. Some have supposed the apostle to prohibit a bishop from marrying a second time, arguing chiefly from the parallel phrase ch. 5. 9. The authority of expositors, however, is in favour of the former view.—Sober. Rather, 'sober-minded,' prudent, able to govern his passions.—Of good behaviour. Grave and decorous in his speech and manners. C.

Ver. 3. Not given to wine. Not attached to wine as matter of habit. The word also signifies what is generally consequent upon inordinate drinking—'imperious, abusive, insolent.'—No striker. Not quarrelsome. C.

Ver. 15, 16. Were not translations in favour of the present punctuation, the meaning would seem more plain, and the structure of ver. 15 and 16 more natural, by adopting the following change, viz. 'But if I tarry long, (I write) that thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God, which is the church of the living God. The pillar and the ground of truth, and great, without controversy, is the mystery of godliness: God was manifested in the flesh, &c. C.'

Ver. 16. God was manifested in the flesh. In favour of this reading it has been irrefragably proved by Matthei and Burton (Testam. p. 141, &c.), that it is, upon the whole, supported by the testimony of the Greek fathers; and the false reasoning of Griesbach and Beisham has been fully exposed in the British Critic, v. ii. p. 297. See also Bengel, Renck, Bull, Magee, Nolan, and Henderson; the last of whom, in particular, appears to have settled the criticism of the question for ever. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Highly should we esteem the Christian church, which, animated by his Spirit, is the peculiar dwelling of the Most High. Yea, God, in infinite mercy, has provided for her officers to manage both her spiritual and temporal concerns. Earnestly then should such labour for the important qualifications of solid experience, knowledge, blameless character, faithfulness, gravity, generosity, and affability; and be the most exemplary in the regular government of their passions, appetites, tongues, and families. And the more faithful, prudent, and diligent they are in discharging the duties of their office, they will be the more honoured in the church, and bold in their holy profession.—While the church holds forth and maintains the truth, upon what a glorious mystery of godliness is she herself founded! Unfathomable is the depth, importance, and glory of it, as it shines forth in God manifested in the flesh, to make atonement for sin, and mediate between God and men: raised from the dead, received up into glory, and attested by the Holy Ghost, in the glory of his person and cause, and of believers in him, beheld, witnessed, ministered to, and adored by angels; preached far and wide to and believed on by multitudes of Jews and Gentiles; exalted to his Father's right hand, and to be head over all things to the church; and at last, after the final conquest of the world, entering heaven with all his angels and ransomed saints!

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 1. And to stir you and others up to a steadfast adherence to this mystery of godliness, and to the rules which Christ issues forth for the government of his church, know that the Spirit of God has revealed to me, as well as to the ancient prophets, that in some future period of the Christian dispensation many professors will apostatize from the doctrines of Christ, and give heed to such as shall seduce them into idolatrous principles and practices, viz. the worshipping of angels and saints as a kind of subordinate gods or mediators; 2. And who, under hypocritical pretences of zeal for religion, will utter falsehoods to delude their followers and establish their own authority; and will refuse nothing, however wicked or absurd, to carry on their corrupt designs—their consciences being as unaffected with the guilt or dreadful consequences of sin as flesh seared with a hot iron is incapable of feeling; 3. And will forbid clergymen or others to marry, thus exposing them to temptations to unchastity; and will prohibit the use of those wholesome meats which God at first created for the sustenance of mankind, and which now, under the gospel dispensation, he allows all Christians their full freedom to use: 4. For everything, as God made it, is answerable to the purposes for which he created it; and nothing that is proper for food ought to be forbidden or scrupled, providing it be received with religious acknowledgments of God as the author and giver of it: 5. For it is sanctified to our lawful use of it by the gospel of God, which has removed all ceremonial uncleanness from it, and by his commanding a blessing on it, in answer to our prayers before and after our meals. 6. If you, my dear son in the faith, warn the Christian brethren of this great apostasy, and other things which I have mentioned to you, you will act the part of a useful, wise, and faithful servant of Jesus Christ, ordering your ministrations suitably to the circumstances and dangers of the times, and as one who has thoroughly digested and experienced the pure doctrines of faith in Christ. 7. But as for the fabulous traditions and useless genealogies, either of Jews or heathens, have nothing to do with them; but exercise yourself with the utmost labour, diligence, and vigour in promoting and exemplifying the doctrines and duties of true piety and obedience to God through Jesus Christ: 8. For no labour, in the mere external acts of religion, is either acceptable to God or useful to the souls of men; but evangelical, vital, and practical godliness in heart and life is every way profitable, having manifold blessings annexed to it, by the promise of God, in this life and that which is to come. 9. And these promises of divine favours, temporal, spiritual, and eternal, are glorious in their accomplishment, and worthy of our highest regard, esteem, and entertainment, as they afford a rich encouragement to serve the Lord, and cleave to him, amidst all difficulties, oppositions, and dangers. 10. Yea, in virtue of our assured trust in these promises of God—who has all life in himself, and is the Bestower and Preserver of all created life; and who is the providential Deliverer of all men, and the spiritual and eternal Saviour of the world—we patiently and cheerfully undergo the greatest fatigues and most abusive revilings in our holy ministrations, to advance his glory, interest, and kingdom, and gain souls to him. 11. These things therefore fully explain, and, by the authority of Christ, inculcate upon the consciences of your hearers. 12. Endeavour also, by his gracious assistance, to acquit yourself therein with such diligence, gravity, good judgment, prudence, and wholly to them; ^bthat thy profiting may appear to all.⁴

16 Take^c heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them: for in doing this thou^d shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee.

fidelity, and such evidence of your faith, and experience of what you preach to others, that none may have occasion to slight and condemn your person or admonitions, your office, or administrations of it, on account of your youth. And to prevent this, study to be always an amiable and shining example to other believers, in the excellency of your doctrine and edifying discourse; in the regularity of your religious and moral behaviour; in the sincerity and ardour of your love to God, to Christ, and to immortal souls; in your spiritual-mindedness, fervent zeal for God, and abounding in the fruits of the Spirit; in a steady and lively exercise and profession of your faith, and maintenance of the doctrines thereof; and in all chastity and purity of heart. 13. And, till I have an opportunity of seeing and further directing you, addict yourself to and spend much of your time in reading and praying over the Holy Scriptures, for the improvement of your own soul in gifts, graces, and comforts, that you may be the better qualified to instruct, exhort, and comfort others, for their conversion, or their establishment and growth in grace. 14. Yea, as God has richly furnished you with extraordinary gifts for his service, according to the predictions of the Spirit of God concerning you, and in consequence of your solemn ordination to your office by a meeting of church-rulers, constituted in the name of Christ his Son, take care that you stir them up, and exercise and improve them to the best advantage. 15. Let the things which I have just now mentioned, and other important articles of divine revelation, be the constant subject of your most earnest meditation; let your attention to, ministration of, and prayer for, a blessing upon them be the entire and delightful business of your life, that your proficiency in wisdom, gifts, and grace, and the experience of God's love, may in all things appear evident to all about you. 16. And if you wish your ministerial labours to succeed, see that your heart be right with God, in its principles, frame, temper, motives, and ends; that your gifts be duly cultivated, and the whole of your behaviour towards himself or your fellow-creatures be well-pleasing in his sight through Christ; and then take heed what doctrine ye preach—that it be sound, clear, important, and seasonable; evangelical and practical; and that it be well explained, confirmed, defended, and applied. And in a constant, persevering, and increasing study of this kind you will, under the influence of the Holy Ghost, be instrumental in promoting the spiritual and eternal salvation of yourself, and others who attend your ministry.

Ver. 3. Forbidding to marry. The Encratites, Manichees, and Montanists all agreed in denouncing marriage as unfavourable to holiness; and in this description they are therefore, in some degree, included. But, in a special sense, the prophecy refers to the Popedom, which, by the enforced and authoritative celibacy of the priesthood, alone 'forbids' what these earlier heretics merely slighted or condemned. C.

Ver. 8. Bodily exercise. Not formal worship, as some, nor bodily mortification, as others imagine; but those gymnastic exercises which the athletes practised to prepare them for the Grecian games—which exercises were profitable 'for a little' vainglory, or 'for a little' time, till the hard-earned praise was transferred to another, or the ear of the ambitious closed in death. See ver. 10; 1 Co. 9. 25. C.

Ver. 10. The Saviour—that is, the preserver of all men: of some, naturally, by his providence; and of the faithful, by his grace. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Dreadful plagues to the Christian church are apostasy and error, especially those of the Romish antichrist! and yet what a verification are they of the divinity of the Scriptures in fulfilling their predictions! Seducers in a most fearful manner turn things upside down, pretending sin to be duty, and what is lawful to be sinful. But no uncertain traditions must be regarded in religion, and no bodily service must be rested in.—It is only lively practical religion that entails present or future blessings on men by the promise of God. And the more we labour for the spiritual edification of others, the more shall we be edified and fitted for our work.—With determined courage may ministers, or even Christians, both labour and suffer, if they trust firmly in God himself. And great exemplariness in faith, in love, in all holy conversation—much study of divine truth—much self-excitement—and heedfulness of their own state, temper, practice, and doctrine, is necessary to render ministers accepted of God in their work, or useful to souls. But it is infinitely absurd and criminal for ministers to indulge idleness, or apply themselves to worldly business, when their own and other men's eternal salvation so much depends upon their fidelity and diligence in their awful employment.

CHAPTER V. Ver. 1, 2. And as the most decent behaviour is necessary to protect you, who are so young, from contempt, take care that you reprove aged professors, and especially church-rulers, when they fall into any sinful infirmity, with the utmost humility and meekness, treating them with all honour and respect; but such as are young rebuke in a more free, yet meek, affable, affectionate, and evidently modest and pure manner. 3. Take care that Christian widows who are poor, and have no relations able and willing to support them, be honourably provided for by the church. 4. But if any religious widows have children or grandchildren who are able to supply their necessities, let those children from a conscientious regard to God, and gratitude to their mothers for their labour, care, and kindness about them when young, exert themselves to provide for them; for such behaviour is in itself equitable, worthy, honourable, and well-pleasing to God. 5. Now, a widow, who is a proper and encouraging object of the church's charity, is one who, being destitute of relations to relieve her, trusts her temporal and eternal concerns to the care of God, and in consequence thereof is addicted to daily and fervent prayer for his gracious fulfilment of his promises. 6. But the widow who gives up herself to a jovial, loose, and voluptuous manner of life under the power of carnal inclinations, appears dead in trespasses and sins, while she enjoys a natural life, and renders herself unworthy of the care of either her friends or the church. 7. These things are of such importance to the edification of professors, and to the reputation, beauty, and order of churches, that you ought solemnly to declare and enforce them in your public and private ministrations—that such persons may walk orderly, and occasion no reproach to the church for misapplying her charity. 8. And if any professor unnaturally neglect, or refuse to do what he can for the support of his near relations, and chiefly his aged parents, wife, and children, he ought to be held as a practical renouncer of the gospel of Christ, and worse than a mere heathen. 9. Let no widow be admitted as an assistant to the deacons, in helping and administering to the poor and sick, unless she be at least sixty years of age, and have lived in a chaste and faithful manner with her own husband. 10. Nor, indeed, unless she be well known to have faithfully and prudently discharged the duties of the married state, in the careful and religious education of her own children, and in hospitable and kind entertainment of strangers, particularly ministers and saints; and in tender compassion to the afflicted; and, in fine, unless she has laboured with care and diligence to perform every good office toward God or men, as opportunity offered. 11. But let no younger widows be admitted; for they will perhaps grow voluptuous and lascivious, contrary to their profession of Christ, and consult their own ease and pleasure rather than his glory; and at last, to get rid of their restraints and labours, marry into a heathen family; 12. And thus expose themselves to shame and condemnation in the view of the world, to the censures of the church, and even to the righteous judgments of God here and hereafter, because of their rejection of their former Christian profession of faith in Christ, and desertion of the trust committed to them. 13. And, moreover, young widows addicted to pleasure soon contract a habit of idleness, and trifle away their time in gadding abroad for their amusement; nay, they even grow impertinent, flirting, loose, and foolish talkers, officious pry-ers and intruders into other people's affairs, and thus invent and carry about reports hurtful to the reputation and peace of their neighbours. 14. Instead therefore of admitting younger widows into the public service of the church, let them be allowed to marry in the Lord, if a proper opportunity offer itself; and in that station carefully educate the children which the Lord may give them, and manage their household and relative affairs with such faithfulness, prudence, diligence, sobriety, and modesty as shall oblige their enemies to forbear reproaching them, or the ways of Christ on their account. 15. I speak the more particularly and earnestly on this point, as some young widows have, by the instigation of Satan, already turned aside from their Christian profession, and followed the sinful courses which I have just mentioned. 16. And I again insist, that if any have mothers or grandmothers, or other near relations in widowhood, if capable, they shall supply their necessities, that the church stock, being eased of that burden, may be the more sufficient for the relief of such as have no friends able or willing to assist them. 17. It is very necessary that church-

11 But the younger widows refuse: for when they have begun to wax wanton against Christ, they will marry;

12 Having^o damnation, because they have cast off their first faith.

13 And withal^o they learn to be idle, wandering about from house to house; and not only idle, but tattlers also, and busybodies, speaking things which they ought not.

14 I will therefore that the younger women marry,^a bear children, guide the house, give none occasion to the adversary to speak reproachfully.⁹

15 For some^o are already turned aside after Satan.

16 If^a any man or woman that believeth have widows, let them relieve them, and let not the church be charged; that it may relieve them that are^o widows indeed.

17 Let^o the elders¹ that rule well be counted worthy of^o double honour,² especially they who labour^o in the word and doctrine.³

18 For the scripture saith, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn. And, The labourer is worthy of his reward.

19 Against an elder receive not an accusation, but before^o two^o or three witnesses.

20 Them that sin^o rebuke before all, that others also may fear.

21 I^o charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the^o elect angels,⁵ that thou observe these things^o without preferring^o one before another, doing nothing by partiality.

CHAPTER VI.

1 Of the duty of servants. 3 Not to have fellowship with new-fangled teachers. 6 Godliness is great gain, 10 and love of money the root of all evil. 11 What Timothy is to flee, and what to follow. 17 and whereof to admonish the rich. 20 To keep the purity of true doctrine, and to avoid profane janglings.

LET as^a many servants¹ as are under the yoke count their own masters worthy of all honour, that the name of God and his doctrine be not blasphemed.

2 And they that have believing masters, let them not despise them, because they are brethren; but rather do them service, because they are faithful² and beloved, partakers of the benefit.³ These things teach and exhort.

3 If^o any man teach otherwise, and consent not to wholesome words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the doctrine which is according to godliness;

4 He^a is proud,⁴ knowing nothing, but^o doting about questions and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings, rulers be duly provided for and honoured; let therefore all of them who conduct themselves in a prudent and faithful manner be reckoned worthy of high esteem and necessary maintenance, especially such of them as addict themselves to the painful and laborious work of faithfully preaching the gospel. 18. For the ancient law which allowed the oxen while treading out the corn to eat of it for their necessary refreshment, plainly hinted that they who employ their time and talents in instructing and governing other church-members, should, in return, partake of a liberal maintenance from such as receive spiritual benefit by them; and Jesus Christ has expressly declared that his labouring servants are worthy of a proper subsistence. 19. And as the support of their character is necessary to their usefulness, another branch of honour due to them is, that no accusation be received against them but before sundry witnesses, and where two or three credible persons are ready to confirm the truth of it. 20. But if they, or any others, be found guilty of public and enormous crimes, they must, without respect of persons, be publicly rebuked in presence of the whole church, that others as well as themselves may be deterred from the commission of the like wickedness. 21. And as an impartial regard to the censuring of offenders, and to other things which I have mentioned, is of great importance to the church, and very irksome to the administrators, I solemnly charge you, as in the presence of the all-seeing and heart-searching God; and of Jesus Christ, the only Head of his church, who will shortly judge the quick and the dead; and of those holy angels whom he has called to everlasting happiness; and as you will answer at his tribunal at the last day—to take heed that you maintain and practise these directions without any partial respect to or prejudice against any man whatsoever. 22. But in order that you may have as little of the disagreeable work of censuring church-officers as possible, be always extremely cautious, and careful and deliberate, in your inquiries into their character before they are admitted to their office; beware lest, by any precipitant and unadvised steps, you render yourself a partaker in the guilt and mischievous influence of unsound and ungodly ministers. 24. For as some men's erroneous principles and practices are so notoriously sinful as renders it a plain duty to refuse them admission to any office in the church, so there are others who can artfully conceal their sentiments and wickedness till after they have obtained a call or admission. 25. In like manner, the religious sentiments, gifts, graces, and moral temper and behaviour of some men are so remarkably good and manifest as to render their admission perfectly clear, while it will require much prudent, tender, and close converse with others, of a bashful and reclusive temper, to satisfy a conscientious inquirer whether they be fit or not.

Ver. 12. This cannot be intended as an absolute condemnation of a Christian widow for marrying again, for such marriages were sanctioned by the law of God; nor can it refer to widows who have entered into vows of celibacy, for such entangling vows are nowhere mentioned or sanctioned in the New Testament; but the reference is to widows who have 'cast off their first faith' to Christ. See ver. 15. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Aged persons, and such as are in office in the church, should be treated with great veneration even when overtaken in a fault. And with kind concern should the very youngest be cautioned and reproved for their sins of infirmity. Friends and church-rulers should take great care of poor widows. And it is necessary for the credit of religion that all widows behave in a grave, prudent, orderly, and holy manner. Alas! that any of them, unaffected with their husbands' departure into eternity, should ever wax wanton against Christ and his law!—It is not merely in acts of devotion, but in all our business, and particularly in managing our families, that we should serve God.—Church governors, particularly preaching elders, have a divine right, from both Old and New Testaments, to high respect and a liberal maintenance from their people, according to their ability. And what awful obligations to faithfulness in their work lie on ministers! They are Christ's deputies, and to him they must give an account. With great prudence, faithfulness, tenderness, courage, and impartiality, must they therefore proceed in rebuking the scandalous, or ordaining other church-officers. And the undoing or salvation of souls is deeply connected therewith. An ignorant, careless, and scandalous ministry is a great plague and reproach to a church. And it is hard for the most faithful to keep themselves from being partakers in other men's sins. But great is the mercy that Jesus', their Master's, blood cleanseth from all sin. Yea, he kindly allows them a moderate use of creature refreshments as their labours and bodily infirmities require.

CHAPTER VI. Ver. 1. As some judaizing teachers, to the discredit of religion and the violation of natural rights, encourage slaves or other servants, when converted, to renounce their servitude, I earnestly admonish you, on all proper occasions, to instruct and urge servants, however enslaved, to honour, reverence, and obey their heathen masters; that so the honour of God and credit of the gospel may not be reproachfully stained, as if it discharged men from their just obligations, and the natural or civil duties of their station. 2. And if any Christian servants are so happy as to have masters of their own religion, let them prize it as a great privilege, and honour and obey them the more cheerfully, affectionately, and diligently, because they are faithful believers, beloved of God, and partakers of all the blessings of redemption through the blood of his Son. 3. If any man teach what is contrary to these directions, and does not, in heart, speech, and behaviour, embrace and practise the pure and salutary doctrines of the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, concerning his person and offices, which is formed, designed, and blessed for promoting practical religion in all the branches of piety towards God, and relative duties towards men, from regard to his authority; 4. 5. tion in the church, he is but a haughty, self-conceited creature, puffed up by the vanity of his own mind, who knows nothing aright of the truth of the gospel, or of his own duty to God or to men; but, like a brain-sick person, is madly fond of impertinent, useless, and entangling questions, and empty disputes about words rather than matter; and which are fit for nothing but to kindle and inflame invidious thoughts and passions, angry debates, blasphemous and reproachful railings, injurious and ill-grounded jealousies, preposterously curious, vain, and froward disputings—proper only for persons of erroneous minds and vicious inclinations, who are utter strangers to Christ and the gospel, and to the reality of grace in their hearts, and reckon religion only so far valuable as it is subservient to their carnal views. Have nothing to do with such persons; abhor their principles and practices; and if they continue obstinate therein, let them be excluded from the church.—6. But whatever such carnal men think, true practical godliness, in which all suitable graces are exercised, in worshipping and serving God through Jesus Christ, under the influence of his Spirit, according to the gospel, attended with a holy and gracious contentment and satisfaction in the disposals of Providence towards us in this life, is the most pleasant, satisfying, and profitable course that can be conceived, and incomparably preferable to an affluence of temporal enjoyments, which at best are empty, precarious, and perishing; 7. For as we brought none of these earthly enjoyments with us into this world in our birth, but hold them by the mere bounty and gracious disposal of God, so we must quickly leave them all behind us at death. 8. If then the kind providence of God supply us in this world with necessary food, raiment, and dwellings, we ought to be fully contented with our lot, and thankful for what we enjoy, as very good, nay, best for us. 9. But they whose hearts are set upon riches, and resolve to have them at any rate, as if they were their chief good, plunge themselves into manifold temptations to dishonesty and other wickedness, and into the deep defilement of many foolish and hurtful lusts and passions, which will effectually swallow them up in temporal and eternal destruction: 10. For an inordinate esteem of and affection for wealth is the pregnant source of all sinful, injurious, and miserable principles and practices, in which, while some have indulged themselves, they have apostatized from their Christian profession and practice; and, instead of finding the satisfaction they expected, have plunged themselves into the most painful agonies of mind and distress of body.—11. But do you, Timothy, whom God hath so richly endowed with the gifts and graces of his Spirit, and who have solemnly devoted yourself to his service, abhor and flee from these corrupt principles, inclinations, and practices, and, in the strength of grace, earnestly endeavour after the richest attainments of the knowledge and exercise of righteousness in all your behaviour towards men; and of strict and evangelical piety in all your dealings with God; of faith in Christ, and in God through him; of that love which is the fruit of faith; of patience amidst wants, perplexities, and sufferings; and of a humble and gentle temper towards all men. 12. In this manner contend earnestly for the doctrines of faith; and, in the exercise of faith, fight, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ, against the devil, the world, and the flesh: press forward in faith and holiness, till you obtain the full possession of that eternal life to which you are tenderly called by the gospel, and to the honour of which ye have, in your ordination, preaching, conversation, and sufferings, borne the most public and solemn testimony. 13. And as this matter is of infinite importance to the glory of God and the salvation of men, I solemnly charge you, in the name, and before the face of that all-seeing and almighty God who quickens dead souls, and will quickly raise the dead to the last judgment; and by the authority and in the presence of Jesus Christ the great Messiah, at whose awful tribunal you must quickly give an account of your conduct; and who, when arraigned before Pontius Pilate the Roman governor, set you a glorious example of courage and steadfastness, in bearing a free and open testimony to the truth, when he knew it would cost him his life.—14. That you faithfully and diligently, and to the end of your life, perform your ministerial work, and sincerely and exactly follow the instructions which I have given you, in the full expectation of the glorious appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ to judge the world, and of the account we must give to him of our whole conduct; 15. Which appearance he will make in the most public view of angels and men in the appointed season thereof—who in himself is the infinitely happy and all-sufficient God, the only supreme and almighty Ruler over and source of all authority to all kings and lords on earth, being infinitely more glorious and excellent than any of them; 16. And who alone has an absolutely eternal life of glory and blessedness, originally, necessarily, unchangeably, and independently in himself, and is infinitely pure and inconceivable in his nature, and manifests himself on his heavenly throne in inexpressible and unapproachable glories. 17. In view of the importance of your trust, and of that awful account which you and others are to give of your conduct, solemnly and faithfully charge those Christians who have some share of worldly riches to beware of being lifted up with pride, self-sufficiency, and contempt of others, or of trusting in earthly possessions, which are so precarious and fleeting; and teach them to put their whole confidence in the only living and true God, who, through active faith, freely bestows upon us all the blessings of time and eternity. 18. Charge them also that, instead of hoarding up their riches, or lavishly mispending them on themselves, they do all the good they can with them; and study to abound in better riches, to their own and others' advantage, even in every good work which their affluence renders them capable of—cheerfully and liberally bestowing it in supplying the necessities of the poor, and promoting the cause of Christ: 19. Making Christ, and him crucified, the sole foundation of their hopes of eternal life, as a blessed possession, and proving and exercising their faith in works of liberality, which, through Christ, shall be for ever graciously rewarded in heaven, when they shall have obtained the full possession of eternal life.—20. And, as it is a matter of infinite importance, let me conclude with solemnly beseeching you, my dear son and brother in Christ, carefully to maintain and hold fast the doctrines of the gospel pure and uncorrupted, and employ to the utmost all your gifts and graces in fulfilling your ministerial office according to the directions I have given you, as a sacred trust committed to you by the Lord Jesus, to be managed in his name and for his glory, and of which you must give him an account; and for this purpose avoid and detest the impious, trifling, and noisy talk of judaizing teachers, as well as the vain philosophy of the Greeks, by both which, under the name of knowledge, they wickedly carry on an opposition to the gospel of Christ; 21. And by an attachment to which, some professed Christians have already lost sight of and renounced the doctrines of revelation.—And to direct, establish, and prosper you in all your important work, may the love and favour of God through Christ, in all its manifestations and fruits, be abundantly vouchsafed to you.

REFLECTIONS.—It is a great honour and encouragement to believing servants, that in Christ and the new kingdom they are on a level with the highest. But it is base and reproachful to their profession to abuse this privilege as a reason of disregard to their masters, whether profane or religious. The gospel was never designed to destroy civil distinctions, but to make men truly adorn them in performing the duties thereof. And the more kind and condescending masters are, the more respectful and obedient servants ought to be. Relative duties make a very important article of true Christian religion. And they who teach otherwise, or propagate any doctrine contrary to a holy practice, are evidently but troublesome, selfish, and worldly-minded seducers. But they who are fond of disputes in religion are seldom tender in their practice.—There is no true godliness but what springs from gospel principles; no true contentment with our lot but what springs from true godliness; no true care but where our soul is our first and chief concern.—What a poor empty world is this, where no enjoyment is certain to us for a moment! Nature is satisfied with little, grace with less, and covetousness with nothing, however much! The love of money, and hastening to be rich, is very ruinous to men's souls and characters, and even to their estates. What need then have the rich to be humble amidst their affluence, good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate;⁵

¶ The first to Timothy was written from Laodicea, which is the chiefest city of Phrygia Pacatiana.

which tempts so many to pride, and to place their faith, hopes, and delights, not in wealth, but in God through Christ!—And carefully should they prove the sincerity of their faith by such genuine charity as will entail a gracious but everlasting reward. Large measures of gifts, grace, cares, and labours are necessary for ministers, to render them duly useful and faithful. For the opposition they will meet with is great, and their account very awful and solemn.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE FIRST EPISTLE TO TIMOTHY.

There is generally in the human mind a strong desire to pry into the private life of individuals, especially of distinguished characters. Hence, on the death of such persons, every source of information is explored; and especially every letter, to any person, or upon any topic whatsoever, is sought out and published as a memorial and mirror of the mind of the dead. And when the eye of curiosity has discovered such relics, and they are published to the world, how many trifles do they often contain! how many 'unthought-of frailties' do they often reveal! and how many occasions do they furnish for the exultation of malice, the tear of pity, or the veil of charity!

To this ordeal Paul is here subjected. This epistle furnishes the first specimen of his private letters to his familiar friend. It admits us as to a mirror in which we can discover the most secret workings of his spirit. And oh, what a glorious discovery! What love, what holiness, what self-sacrifice! And then the church! Its most secret springs, its entire spiritual machinery, all laid bare! Its bishops and deacons, its old and young, its unmarried and its widows, its masters and servants, its rich and poor!—all are arrayed, not for public exhibition, but for private, most secret, and confidential inspection! And if any one can read this secret disclosure, without acknowledging the unparalleled holiness of the Christian system, his eyes may be blinded by the practical imperfections and sins of its professors, but he has not examined the glories of the system itself! Indeed, if any one will read this epistle, and thereby observe, not the outward garniture of the temple, but penetrate into its most secret chambers, it would appear impossible for him to deny that its 'builder and maker was God.' C.

THE SECOND EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO TIMOTHY.

That this epistle was written while Paul was a prisoner is evident from ch. 1. 17. That it indicates a second imprisonment appears more than probable from the following considerations. In the first imprisonment he 'dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, and received all that came to him,' Ac. 28. 30, 31; but when he wrote this epistle he was closely confined, ch. 2. 9, so that Onesiphorus had considerable difficulty in discovering him; ch. 1. 16, 18, and his situation was extremely dangerous, ch. 4. 6, 8, 16, 18. At his first confinement Timothy was with Paul, and is joined with him in writing to the Colossians, Philippians, and Philemon; but the present epistle shows that he was absent in Asia. During his first imprisonment Demas was with him, Phile. 24; now he had forsaken him and gone to Thessalonica, ch. 4. 10. During his first imprisonment Mark also was with him, Col. 4. 10, 11; Phile. 24; but at the date of this epistle Timothy is directed to bring Mark with him, ch. 4. 11. In the former epistle Paul looked confidently forward to his speedy liberation and departure from Rome, Phi. 2. 24; Phile. 22; but in this he is 'ready to be offered, and the time of his departure is at hand,—he has finished his course;' from which it is concluded that this epistle was written a short time before his martyrdom, which is generally referred to the 29th June, A.D. 66. And, as the apostle requests Timothy to come to him before winter, ch. 4. 21, the epistle was most probably written in the summer of A.D. 65. Like the former epistle its chief object is to instruct a young minister in the nature and importance of his office and duties in the church, and prepare him, if need be, for sustaining the persecution of the world. It is written with all the affection of a parent, and with all the solemnity of a man about to die. It contains references to Ex. 7. 11, 12; 8. 18; 9. 11; Mat. 26. 24; Ac. 14. 22; 2 Pe. 1. 20, 21. C.

The cause of Paul's second imprisonment at Rome appears to have been a charge made against him, as leader of the Christians, for being implicated in the burning of the city. This false and absurd charge was probably preferred when the apostle was in Nicopolis, a city of Epirus, Tit. 3. 12. He was there seized and sent to Rome, where he was no longer treated as one accused merely of breaking Jewish law, but as a common criminal, charged with a capital offence. He seems to have felt that his fate was certain: and one chief object in writing this epistle was to prepare Timothy for the trials and persecutions to which he knew the church would soon be exposed. Another object was to secure, if possible, a farewell visit from Timothy. He was now almost alone; all had left him except faithful Luke, ch. 4. 11. He was worn down by care, and sorrow, and bodily weakness; his end, his martyrdom, was drawing near; and yet 'in no epistle does the true, loving, undaunted, and trustful heart of the great apostle speak in more consolatory, yet more moving accents: in no portion of his writings is there a loftier tone of Christian courage than that which pervades these, so to speak, dying words; nowhere a holier rapture than that with which the reward and crown of faithful labour is contemplated as now exceeding nigh at hand.' P.

CHAPTER I.

1 Paul's love to Timothy. 6 He is exhorted to stir up the gift of God which was in him, 8 to be steadfast, and patient in persecution, 13 and to persist in the form and truth of that doctrine which he had learned of him. 15 Phygellus and Hermogenes, and such like, are noted, and Onesiphorus is highly commended.

CHAPTER I. Ver. 1. I Paul,—called and qualified to be an apostle of Jesus Christ, by the free and gracious appointment of God the Father, to bear witness to, and preach the once crucified, but now risen and exalted Saviour, among Jews, and especially Gentiles; according to the promise of eternal life, which was given in him before the foundation of the world, and in due time made to Abraham, to be fulfilled in his divine seed, by whom that life is secured and dispensed, and in whom it is deposited; and which is obtained through faith in him.—2. To Timothy, my dear son in the faith, of whose conversion to Christ, and appointment to the ministry, God made me the honoured instrument,—wish the most abundant and manifold manifestations and effects of God's full favour and infinite compassion; and all peace and prosperity, temporal, spiritual, and eternal, from God the Father, as the first Mover in the work of our salvation, and from Jesus Christ, our common Lord and Saviour, as the mediatorial Redeemer and Bestower thereof. 3. I heartily thank and praise that only true God, whom, after the example of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and other pious ancestors, I now religiously worship and adore, with a heart and conscience purified by faith in the blood of his Son, that, in my daily prayers, morning, evening, or at noon, I am particularly led out to recommend you to his grace and care. 4. 5. Being exceedingly desirous to see you once more before my approaching death, that I may leave with you my dying charges and paternal instructions;—and my desire is much inflamed by my deep and lively remembrance of that affectionate and filial grief which you manifested at our last parting, and by the manifold evidence you have given of that sincere and unfeigned principle of faith which dwells in your heart, as it did in the heart of your worthy mother and grandmother.—6. Therefore, in my great affection for you, and in consideration of God's distinguished favour in so remarkably fitting you for ministerial service, I again earnestly beseech you, by diligent reading, meditation, and prayer, to cherish, improve, and stir up to action those spiritual gifts which were so plentifully and freely bestowed upon you in your ordination to the sacred office of an evangelist. 7. And let no opposition of adversaries discourage you from or in the exercise of it: for God has not formed in us a cowardly temper of fear or timidity, but a spirit of holy fortitude and undaunted courage to encounter all difficulties and dangers,—and of fervent love to Christ, his cause, people, and the souls of men,—and of a sober and judicious government of ourselves, in steadfastly adhering to, and patiently suffering for, the gospel of Christ.

8. Never then be discouraged in or ashamed of bearing a bold and open testimony to our Lord Jesus, and to his gospel, in which he attests his own character and work by the declarations and influences of his Spirit,—or of owning, vindicating, and visiting me his imprisoned apostle; but let your whole soul be animated to sympathize with me and others in our persecutions, and cheerfully to endure the like yourself for the sake of the gospel, in an humble dependence upon the supporting, encouraging, and strengthening assistance of that God of infinite mercy and grace: 9. Who, to express his love and fit us for every good word and work, has provided for us an almighty Saviour, and a full, infinite, and everlasting salvation in him,—and has by the gospel, and the influences of his Spirit, tenderly called us to holiness and happiness,—not as influenced by any natural goodness in us, but because of our saving faith in his ever blessed Son our Saviour, in whom his love was fixed upon all sinful men before the world was created: 10. Which gracious purpose lay, from eternity, as a secret in the mind of God, and was long concealed under dark types and predictions, but is now discovered, with illustrious brightness, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ to secure and fix our redemption;—who by dying for our sins in our nature and stead, and rising again as our conquering Head, has taken away the sting of death, broken its power, and turned it into a blessing to them that believe, and delivered them from eternal death;—and who, by the preaching of the gospel, has made a certain and plain revelation of a blessed, excellent, spiritual, and eternal state of happiness and glory for both soul and body in the heavenly world, and of the proper means of our arriving at it through him.—11. For the ministrations of which glorious gospel I am immediately furnished and commissioned by Jesus Christ, as an authentic publisher and inspired messenger, to declare unto men, especially the Gentiles, the glad tidings of salvation therein contained, that they may hear and believe to the saving of their souls: 12. And it is for my faithfulness and zeal in discharging that office that I now actually suffer all the disgrace and severities of my present imprisonment, and am daily expecting martyrdom; but, in consideration of the glorious excellency of the cause, instead of being ashamed of Christ, or of his or my sufferings, I glory in them, and have the most joyful expectation of a happy issue of them in the future state:—for, in the light of God's word, and upon long trial and experience, I well know that a gracious, all-sufficient, faithful, and divine Saviour he is whom I have received and relied on by faith,—and on the most certain and infallible grounds am persuaded that he has a firm purpose, full power, authority, and will, to secure my soul, and all its eternal concerns, with which I have intrusted him, against the day of the last judgment, in which the everlasting misery or happiness of every man will be publicly, solemnly, and unalterably decided. 13. Whatever trials therefore you meet with, or may expect in the cause of Christ, see that, encouraged by my example of faith, patience, and hope, you keep in memory, cleave to, and resolutely profess and publish, the platform of the uncorrupted, wholesome, nourishing, and healing doctrines of the gospel, so productive of faith and love, which I have taught you by word or writing—as things which you, through Christ's grace, heartily believe and love,—and in order that faith in and love to him may be produced among your hearers. 14. And those useful and edifying gifts and doctrines, and that ministerial office which have been committed to you in your ordination, see that you faithfully maintain and improve, by the assistance of the Holy Ghost, who, in his person and influences, dwells in us, and other faithful ministers and believers, to enable us to fulfil the duties of our station in the face of all opposition and danger.—15. In these things you ought to be the more faithful and diligent, as you cannot but know, to your grief, that the generality of the Asian professors of Christianity, at least those here at Rome, have shamefully deserted me in my present sufferings, as being afraid or ashamed to stand by me in them. 16–18. But may the God of all grace multiply his merciful favours, temporal, spiritual, and eternal, upon the family of Onesiphorus, as a return of his distinguished kindness to me; for, notwithstanding the cowardice of pretended friends, and the fury of open enemies, with a truly Christian courage and compassion he often relieved, comforted, and refreshed me in my various distresses, by his kind visits and necessary supplies.—Yea, instead of being ashamed of me, or my ignominious imprisonment and reproach, from love to Christ and his cause, and to me, when he came to Rome, he took great pains to inquire after and obtain access to me.—May that Lord Jesus, for whose sake he showed me this kindness, according to the riches of his grace, reward him, not only in this world, but especially in that which is to come, mercifully owning him in the last judgment before his Father and an assembled world, and publicly adjudging him to eternal life.—And you know that at Ephesus, in many instances and forms, he supplied and comforted me under my trouble.

REFLECTIONS.—It is delightful for ministers to have a clear call from Christ to their work, remarkable success in it, and a habitual practice answerable to it. It is a singular mercy to have religious parents; and great is the blessing when God's grace is continued from age to age in a family. Happy they who receive the gospel with unfeigned faith and love, and serve God with pure hearts, after the example of pious progenitors, and diligently apply themselves to propagate it to others. For O the transcendent excellency of the gospel! It promises eternal life through Christ; it lays open the gracious mind of God; it is the mean of our blessed hope by his power and grace; it manifests death conquered, and immortal blessedness secured for men in Christ. Who would not delight to be an authorized teacher of it! Who would not, without fear or shame, cheerfully undergo the severest persecution for the sake of it and its blessings! Who would not, on the footing of it, commit his eternal salvation to the care of God!—A deep concern to discharge their office and improve their gifts; a holy fortitude, love, sobriety, wisdom, and sound judgment; great regard of, love to, sympathy with, and earnest prayers for their fellow-labourers, should signalize every minister of Christ. And infinite is the mercy, that, when some shamefully desert the cause of Christ and his persecuted servants, others are, by his grace, emboldened to own and regard them; nor shall they, in the last judgment, lose their gracious reward.

CHAPTER II. Ver. 1. Considering therefore the importance of your work, and the danger of mistakes in it or apostasy from it, I beseech you, my dear son in the faith, fellowship, and ministry of the gospel, not to be self-confident, nor to trust in any grace that you have already received; but always to depend on the inexhaustible fund of grace which is treasured up in Christ your Head, and in the full favour of God, residing, manifesting, and exhibiting itself in him, that out of his fulness you may continually receive grace for grace. 2. And, setting out in this strength for every duty, and for propagating the true doctrines of the gospel, which are so abundantly attested by the law and the prophets, and which, in a most public manner, I committed to your trust at your ordination,—take heed that you transmit them pure and uncorrupted to such other ministers as manifest themselves faithful believers, who have the glory of Christ and the welfare of souls at heart, and are furnished with knowledge and utterance, gifts and graces, to dispose and qualify them for explaining, proving, defending, and applying the whole counsel of God to their hearers. 3. And, as your office and work are so honourable, let no difficulties nor dangers discourage you; but, considering your sufferings as lying in the way to victory and triumph, act always with holy resolution, vigour, and courage, like a good soldier, that voluntarily fights in the cause and under the banner of Jesus Christ, who is able and willing to support you under and carry you through all your toils and troubles, and to crown them with everlasting honours. 4. And, to carry on the allusion, you must give yourself wholly to your ministerial work; must not follow any civil calling, unprofitable reading, or unnecessary diversion, to entangle your thoughts or swallow up your time; but your whole time, thoughts, words, and actions must be occupied in the spiritual service of Christ your gracious Lord, that you may acquit yourself agreeably to his will, who has appointed, called, and persuaded you to fight the good fight of faith, till you lay hold on eternal life. 5. And, in allusion to the laws of combatants in the Grecian games, you, who have entered into the service of Christ, must exert yourself, with the utmost labour and diligence, according to the prescriptions of his Word, for overcoming all the opposition of sin, Satan, and the world, as ever you expect that Christ should crown you with a glorious reward. 6. Yea, again, to allude to labourers in a field or vineyard, you must first be laborious in preaching the gospel for the glory of Christ and good of souls, and wait with patience for the coming of the Lord, when you shall abundantly share the fruits of your work. 7. Consider these things seriously, that you may look on yourself as a soldier, combatant, and husbandman in the work of the Lord, and may expect labours and hardships in attending your service, but comfortably hope for a blessed and gracious reward at the end of it. And may the Lord Jesus enable you thoroughly to understand and practise these instructions, and every other thing which concerns you as a Christian or minister of Christ. 8. The grand article which I enjoin you constantly to bear in mind, for your own support and encouragement under your trials and sufferings, and to preach to others for their conversion and establishment in the faith and hope of the gospel, is that Jesus, the anointed Saviour, who, according to the flesh, proceeded from the loins of David the renowned king of Israel, having suffered unto death as a sacrifice for sin, was raised from the dead for our justification, according to those glad tidings of salvation which I have laboured to preach chiefly among Gentile sinners: 9. For the preaching of which I am at present persecuted and restrained as an evildoer, not fit to live; but thanks be to God, that though I am restrained from preaching the gospel in my wonted manner, yet it is still published far and wide with remarkable success by others, and even confirmed by my patient and joyful sufferings for its sake. 10. And, in view of that which God hath and will do by the ministrations of it, I cheerfully submit to all the distresses which are or can be laid upon me, from a principle of love and zeal for the spiritual and eternal welfare of those whom God has from love called to salvation, through belief of the truth under the power of the Spirit,—that they, encouraged by my example, may be induced to believe, cordially embrace, and boldly profess the truth and excellence of the gospel, notwithstanding the violence and persecution of the times; and may, in this way of God's provision, arrive at the full possession of that eternal blessedness and glory which is secured by and reserved in Christ, and to be enjoyed in immediate fellowship with him. 11. Nor is this doctrine of Christ's death and resurrection, and the future glory of his people, more important than true and comfortable; for if, in conformity to him in his death, and by virtue derived from him, we, in our state of vital union with him, be dead to sin and to this world, and willing to lay down our lives for his sake, we also, in conformity to him, and by the power of his resurrection, shall certainly be quickened, and raised up to a glorious and eternal life with him in the heavenly state. 12. If we patiently endure reproach and trouble for his sake, as he did for ours, we shall also be exalted to sit with him on his throne, as kings and priests unto God; but if, for fear of losing our worldly honours, ease, wealth, liberty, or life, we, as ashamed of him, renounce our profession of his truth, or give up our Christian practice, he also will be ashamed of us, and publicly profess, before an assembled world of angels and men, that he never knew of nor accounted us his children or servants. 13. And whether we believe these comfortable truths on the one hand, or awful denunciations on the other, he, who is the God that cannot lie, the faithful and true Witness, will certainly perform his gracious promises to all true believers, and execute his just threatenings on apostates. For it is not consistent with the perfections of his nature or will to act contrary to his settled declarations of mercy or judgment.—14. Of these points, so closely connected with the eternal salvation of souls, seriously and solemnly, on the authority and as in the presence of Christ, put them in mind, who are in or may be admitted to the ministerial office; that they may attend to what is really substantial, and not to trifling debates, which tend only to puzzle men's minds, and pervert them from the truth of the gospel. 15. And let it be your constant care to yield and manifest yourself as a faithful and approved servant of God, who has no occasion to be ashamed on account of neglect, unskillfulness, unfaithfulness, or imprudence; but who, with care and judgment, separates between truth and error, things important and trifling; and applies the Word of God to men according to their circumstances; and, by ministration and example, marks out before them the right way of truth, holiness, and happiness. 16. But always avoid and oppose all irreverent, defiling, and noisy, but daring and empty discourses, which degrade the nature or perfections of God, or the purity of the gospel;—for these will gradually render men more and more erroneous and profane; 17. And will, by degrees, infect and, as it were, incurably eat out the whole system of truth, and vitals of religion in the church; as too plainly appears in the case of Hymeneus and Philetus. 18. Who, by such vain babblings, have been carried away from the truths of revelation into the most destructive errors, supposing that whatever Christ, or any of the inspired writers, have spoken of the resurrection of the dead, is to be taken mystically, with respect to some events already past, and not to any resurrection of the bodies of men at the last day; and by their bold and subtle reasonings they have seduced some from the truth which they once professed. 19. But notwithstanding all this, the doctrine of the general resurrection is certainly a fundamental truth of God, sealed by his miraculous approbation of the preachers of it. And notwithstanding such melancholy instances of apostasy, the blessed love and gracious promises of God—and Jesus Christ, as the sure foundation of eternal salvation, and the state and structure of grace built upon him—shall remain firm and unchangeable; plainly manifesting, that whatever becomes of others, the Lord will claim, and for ever keep, through faith unto salvation, those who cling to Christ and by constant watchfulness keep vitally united to him by faith; and that, as holiness and happiness are inseparably connected in the plan, and every step of the execution of it, all such as profess to trust in Christ for eternal happiness must labour in heart and life to keep at the farthest distance from sin. 20. But as in the houses of great men there are vessels of different materials, excellency, and use; so in the visible church there are ministers and professors, some excellent, honourable, and approved of God, and others who are mean, contemptible, dishonourable to and disapproved by him. 21. If any one, who claims a share in the blessings, privileges, and services of the great Lord of the church, keep himself from corrupt teachers, errors, and practices, he will appear formed for the noblest purposes, and purified, consecrated, and qualified by the Holy Ghost for whatever use he may be called to. 22. And if you, Timothy, would approve yourself to God, and to your own conscience, in the discharge of your work, labour diligently, by his grace, to flee from all youthful ambition, self-conceit, rashness, or sensuality, and in your preaching and practice pursue after what relates to righteousness before God and men, faith in and fidelity to Christ, and to God through him, and to a charitable and peaceable temper and carriage towards all those worshippers of him whose hearts are sincere and consciences purified by his blood. 23. But shun, as an infectious plague, all impertinent and fruitless inquiries and debates, knowing for certain that they tend only to beget angry contentions, to the disturbance of the church, and the hindrance of

with the affairs of this life; that he may please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier.

5 And if a man also strive for masteries, yet is he not crowned, except he strive lawfully.

6 The^a husbandman that laboureth must be first partaker^d of the fruits.⁵

7 Consider^d what I say; and ^{the} Lord give thee understanding in all things.

8 Remember that Jesus Christ, ^{of} the seed of David, ^{was} raised from the dead according to ^{my} gospel:

9 Wherein^o I suffer trouble, as an evil-doer, even unto bonds; but ^{the} word of God is not bound.

10 Therefore^a I endure all things for the elect's sakes, that they may also obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus with eternal glory.

11 It^r is a faithful saying: For ^{if} we be dead with him,⁶ we shall also live with him:

12 If we suffer, we shall also reign with him: if we deny him, he also will deny us:

13 If^u we believe not,⁷ yet he abideth faithful: he cannot deny himself.

14 Of^o these things put them in remembrance, charging them before the Lord that they strive^x not about words to no profit, but to the subverting of the hearers.

15 Study^y to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, ^{rightly} dividing the word of truth.

16 But^u shun profane and vain babblings; for they will increase unto more ungodliness:

17 And their word will eat as doth a canker:⁸ of whom is ^{Hymeneus} and ^{Philetus};

18 Who^o concerning the truth have erred, saying that the resurrection is past already; and overthrow the faith of some.

19 Nevertheless ^{the} foundation of God standeth ^{sure},¹ having this seal, ^{The} Lord knoweth them that are his.² And, ^{Let} every one that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity.³

the success of the gospel. 24. It is very unbecoming for any minister of the gospel of peace, or even private Christian, to engage in disputes with a litigious temper of spirit; yea, on the contrary, he ought to be kind and courteous towards all men, conveying the truth into their minds in the most clear and scriptural manner, patiently bearing with their infirmities, and even their prejudices. 25. Endeavouring to win upon the adversaries of truth by softness, calmness, and sweetness of temper, as well as by strength of argument,—in hopes that God, in due time, may convince them of their error, and lead them to embrace and boldly profess the truth as it is in Jesus; 26. And that by these means they may be awakened out of the ensnaring errors and practices by which they had been lulled asleep and intoxicated, and in which Satan had caught and held them fast as captives, to be enslaved, domineered over, and ruined by him, according to his malicious will and pleasure.

persecutions I endured: but out of them all the Lord delivered me.

12 Yea,

thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus.

16 All¹ scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction,⁷ for instruction in righteousness;

17 That⁸ the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished⁸ unto all good works.

CHAPTER IV.

1 He exhorteth him to do his duty with all care and diligence, 6 certifieth him of the nearness of his death, 9 willeth him to come speedily unto him, and to bring Marcus with him, and certain other things which he wrote for, 14 warneth him to beware of Alexander the smith, 16 informeth him what had befallen him at his first answering, 19 and soon after he concludeth.

I CHARGE^a thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ,^b who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom;¹

2 Preach^c the word; be instant in season, out of² season; ⁴reprove,³ rebuke,⁴ exhort,⁵ with all long-suffering and doctrine.

3 For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine;⁶ but after their own lusts⁷ shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears;

4 And^d they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables.

5 But^e watch thou in all things, ^hendure afflictions, ⁱdo the work of an evangelist, ^kmake full proof of⁹ thy ministry.

6 For I am now ^jready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand.¹

7 I^k have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith:

8 Henceforth there is laid up for me ^la crown of righteousness, which the Lord, ^mthe righteous Judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, ⁿbut unto all them also that love his appearing.

9 Do^o thy diligence to come shortly unto me:

10 For ^pDemas ^qhath forsaken me, having laid up in Christ and reserved in heaven—that perfection of holiness and happiness secured by his sacrifice, and which he, as the faithful and righteous Judge of the world, shall publicly and freely bestow upon me in the last judgment; and not only on me, but on all those who have by faith, and with pleasure and suitable preparation, waited, looked, longed, and hoped for his great and glorious appearing. 14, 15. Alexander the coppersmith has, by his false accusations and otherwise, proved a most malicious and bitter enemy to me. I therefore leave him, as an utter and irreclaimable apostate, to the righteous anger of God, to be punished according to his deeds in time and eternity. Beware of him, for he has violently set himself against and inflexibly opposed the gospel of salvation, which I preach to the Gentiles as well as Jews. 16, 17. At my last appearance to take my trial before the emperor Nero, none of my Christian friends, who might have been of use to me, had courage enough to own and countenance me, or to appear as witnesses on my behalf, but all deserted me, as his disciples did my Master Christ. I heartily pray the Lord may forgive them their sin in so doing, and render them deeply penitent for it. But, while they deserted me, my almighty and fast Friend, the Lord Jesus, appeared for me, and strengthened me by his Spirit to make such a bold and plain representation of my cause as fully manifested that the gospel, in its matter and success, is of God, and no way hurtful to the interests of civil government, and gave many of the Gentiles who were present an opportunity of hearing it; yea, he marvelously delivered me from the rage and cruelty of the emperor, who, under the influence of his father the devil, sought to destroy me. 18. And, by his Word and my past experience, I have an entire confidence in his power, faithfulness, and grace, that he will always keep me from doing anything unworthy of the Christian or minister, though it be to escape the most cruel persecutions or death, and enable me, with faith and patience, to persevere in his way till he transport me to his glorious kingdom above. 22. May the Lord Jesus dwell in and fill all the powers of your soul with his presence, graces, and influences—to guide, support, strengthen, comfort, and sanctify you.

Ver. 13. The cloak. As some think, a cloak-bag, or portmanteau. Whatever it was, the mention of it affords a striking evidence of the disinterestedness of the apostle, who now, at the close of a long and laborious ministry, needed to send to such a dis-loved this present world, and is departed unto Thessalonica; Crescens to Galatia, ^rTitus unto Dalmatia.

11 Only ^sLuke is with me. Take Mark, and bring him with thee; for he is profitable to me for the ministry.

12 And ^tTychicus have I sent to Ephesus.

13 The cloak that I left at Troas with Carpus, when thou comest, bring with thee, and the books, but especially the parchments.³

14 Alexander^u the coppersmith did me much evil: the Lord ^vreward him according to his works:

15 Of^w whom be thou ware also; for he hath greatly withstood our words.³

16 At my first answer ^xno man stood with me, but all men forsook me: ^yI pray God that it may not be laid to their charge.

17 Notwithstanding^z the Lord stood with me, and strengthened me; ^{aa}that by me the preaching might be fully known, and that all the Gentiles might hear: and ^{ab}I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion.⁴

18 And^{ac} the Lord shall deliver me from every evil work, and ^{ad}will preserve me unto his heavenly kingdom: ^{ae}to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

19 Salute ^{af}Prisca and Aquila, and ^{ag}the household of Onesiphorus.

20 Erastus^{ah} abode at Corinth: but ^{ai}Trophimus have I left at Miletum sick.

21 Do^{aj} thy diligence to come before winter. ^{ak}Eubulus greeteth thee, and Pudens, and Linus, and Claudia, and all the brethren.

22 The^{al} Lord Jesus Christ be with thy spirit. Grace be with you. Amen.

¶ The second epistle unto Timotheus, ordained the first bishop of the church of the Ephesians, was written from Rome, when Paul was brought before Nero the second time.

+ Sinful practices always generate erroneous opinions for their palliation or defence.
Nevertheless, 'God is not mocked'—what a man soweth, that shall he also reap.
He that soweth to his flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption.—C.

More exactly—I am already being offered. The charges were already preferred and the processes begun against the apostle, which, he knew, must terminate in his death.
There was now no escape. His close imprisonment prevented him from helping his brethren as he had been accustomed to do.—P.

tance for an article apparently of so little value. Of the other articles—'books and parchments'—nothing certain can be discovered; and in all such cases conjecture is of little value. C.

Ver. 14. Surely this prayer of the apostle needs no such apologies as commentators have laboured to make for it. For if God will 'reward every man according to his works,' surely it cannot be wrong to pray that he would do soon what he has promised to do finally! If such a petition were an ebullition of passion, it were sin. As an appeal from man to a wise, merciful, and righteous God, it is piety. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Ministers, as well as others, have great need to be excited to their work by serious reflections on the last, the general judgment.—How extensive is their office! There is need of much activity, patience, perseverance, boldness, and impartiality—and happy and honoured are they who are faithful—in it. Christ stands by, assists, and delivers them in their warfare, and at last graciously rewards them and all his friends with inexpressible blessedness. And it is a mercy to have him with us when some basely desert or oppose us, or are necessarily at a distance from us. To what dreadful lengths in wickedness apostates from Christ will go! and to what certain ruin they expose themselves! But not the best can stand fast unless the Lord Jesus be with their spirit.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE SECOND EPISTLE TO TIMOTHY.

This, though not the last in order of position, is probably the last the apostle ever wrote. About this time Nero, an emperor proverbially cruel, had set fire to Rome, and, in order to divert the public odium from himself, charged the crime against the Christians, and had them condemned to death in great numbers; some were crucified; others being covered with combustibles and burned as night-lights in his gardens; others covered with skins of wild beasts and exposed to dogs, others cast to the lions (Tacitus, Annales, lib. xv. cap. 44). Under these circumstances, and in prospect of some such death, the apostle wrote. And certainly he thus serves in an especial manner 'to show with what composure a Christian can die.' C.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO TITUS.

This epistle, as well as the two preceding to Timothy, chiefly contains directions for those in the ministerial office. Titus, to whom it was written, was a Gentile, early converted to Christ, perhaps by Paul's ministry. Being found faithful and diligent in the improvement of his spiritual gifts and evangelical trusts, Paul left him in Crete—now Candia, a large island in the Mediterranean Sea—as an evangelist, to put in order the affairs of that infant church.—In this epistle he directs him to appoint proper officers, who might, by their life and doctrine, confute the judaizing preachers and wicked heathens, ch. i.; and to recommend, by his example and instruction, a truly religious behaviour to Christian professors in every station, answerable to that grace of the gospel which they had heard and experienced, ch. ii. iii.

[Of Titus nothing is certainly known than that he was a Greek, and one of Paul's early converts who frequently attended him in his journeys, ch. 1. 4; Ga. 2. 3; 2 Co. 2. 13; 7. 6, 7, 13, 15; 8. 16, 23; 12. 18; neither is there any certain record of the time when, or the individual by whom, Christianity was first introduced into Crete. But it is probable it was introduced at an early period; for, on the day of Pentecost, there were Cretians present, Ac. 2. 11, who would naturally carry with them the account of what they had seen and heard, and thus, either prepare the way of the gospel, by the excitement of curiosity and inquiry, or actually found the church which Titus was now instructed more perfectly to organize. Nor is there any account of Paul's labours in the island, except the bare fact of his visit, which may be inferred from this epistle, ch. 1. 5, though Luke mentions that he touched at the Fair Havens and Lasea on his voyage to Rome. It may therefore, with considerable probability, be inferred that Paul's ministry in Crete was subsequent to his first imprisonment at Rome, and previous to his second, about A.D. 64. It is evident that Paul must have found the inhabitants of the island considerably advanced in the knowledge of the gospel, or that his own ministry had been crowned with much success. But it appears that, from some cause unknown, he was hurried away, and was necessitated to leave Titus behind to assist in completing the apostolic organization of the infant churches. Titus is represented, in ecclesiastical records founded upon early traditions, to have continued in Crete till the age of 94, and to have died and been buried there. The epistle contains references to De. 7. 6; 14. 2; Is. 29. 13; Eze. 36. 25; Ac. 10. 45; Ro. 3. 20; Ep. 5. 2; 1 Ti. 3. 2; 2 Ti. 1. 9; He. 9. 14; 1 Pe. 2. 9. C.]

After his release from his first imprisonment from Rome Paul made a missionary tour among the various churches both in Europe and Asia. It was towards the close of this tour that he visited, apparently for the first time, the island of Crete. He did not remain long; and he left Titus there to complete the work of ecclesiastical organization which he had commenced. From Crete Paul appears to have travelled through the western part of Asia Minor, and then through northern Greece, on his way to Nicopolis, in Epirus, where he had determined to spend the winter. He wrote this epistle when on his way to Nicopolis, and probably about A.D. 66. P.]

CHAPTER II.

1 Directions given unto Titus both for his doctrine and life. 9 Of the duty of servants, and in general of all Christians.

BUT speak^a thou the things which become sound doctrine:

2 That^b the aged men be sober,^c grave, temperate, sound in faith, in charity, in patience.

moting practical godliness in heart and life, in all the duties thereof towards God or man: 2. Which truth is believed and professed, and godliness practised, in the exercise of a lively hope of the incorruptible and undefiled inheritance of eternal life, which the infinitely sincere and infallibly faithful JEHOVAH promised to all in Christ, as their blessed head, before the world began, and quickly after the fall published to our first parents in paradise; 3. And which now, in the fulness of time, he has clearly made known by the publication of his gospel, which is revealed and committed to me, as his apostle, to dispense it to Gentiles as well as Jews, according to the express commandment of Jesus Christ our divine Saviour, from sin and wrath:—4. To his dearly beloved Titus, of whose instruction in the principles of the Christian religion, spiritual regeneration, and saving faith, God made him the instrument, —heartily wishes all the abundant manifestations of divine favour, and all peace and prosperity, in time or eternity, from God the Father as the fountain of all good, and from our Lord Jesus Christ as the revealer, source, and bestower of it. 5. You well know that I left you at Crete, when I departed from it, that you might complete whatever remained unfinished with regard to the doctrine, worship, discipline, and manners in the Christian congregation there planted; and particularly that, as an evangelist, you might preside in the election and ordination of teaching and ruling elders or bishops to take the oversight of the professed Christians in every city there, and feed them with knowledge and understanding according to the orders which I left with you: 6. Remember therefore that these overseers ought by all means to be persons of an unspotted moral character, unblemished with polygamy or causeless divorce; careful to bring up their children in the nurture, admonition, and ways of the Lord; and never suffering them to live disgracefully in a luxurious, dissolute, refractory, ungovernable, disobedient manner. 7. For the nature of an evangelical office, the honour of religion, and the good of souls, require that church-rulers, particularly ministers, be under no reproach or scandal in their life and conversation, be not chargeable with neglect, unfaithfulness, or partiality in dispensing the mysteries of God; nor of a headstrong, conceited, obstinate, inflexible temper; nor of a hasty spirit, falling into a passion upon every slight provocation; nor lovers of nor addicted to immoderate drinking of liquor; nor contentious nor violent in their behaviour, ready to strike such as displease them; nor of a niggardly, sordid, covetous spirit, bent to catch and keep all that they can of base worldly gain, by which the consciences of men are so frequently defiled: 8. But persons who take pleasure, on all proper occasions, to exert themselves in acts of benevolence, particularly to religious ^aangers, travelling preachers, and persecuted Christians, —being hearty lovers and encouragers of whatever is good, having a cordial affection for all sincere and pious men; and being modest and humble, grave and prudent, upright and faithful, in all they say and do; exemplarily holy in their whole conversation, and chaste and moderate in their desires and pursuits after the pleasures of this life.—9. They ought also to be well enlightened and established in their faith and profession of the pure truths of the gospel, as they have learned them from their inspired writers and publishers—that, by a due application thereof, they may be able to comfort believers, and excite them to their duty; and to confute the errors, silence the cavils, and rebuke the perverseness of opposers.—10. For in Crete, as well as in other places, I understand there are many pretenders to Christianity, especially Jewish zealots for the Mosaic ceremonies, who are refractory and disorderly, not submitting to any divine rule in their doctrines or manners; but are most pernicious, proud, self-conceited disputers about trifles, and crafty seducers of the simple: 11. Whose mouths ought to be stopped, and their errors confuted, by scriptural proofs, solid arguments, and good examples, since they are so indefatigable and subtle, insinuating themselves into Christian families, and carrying them off from Jesus Christ and the gospel to the ceremonies and law of Moses—teaching and urging upon them things utterly false, and inconsistent with the true method of salvation by Christ alone; and all this to procure for themselves the sordid and defiling treasures of this world, by methods suited to the lusts of the Cretians;—12. For you well remember that Epimenides, their own poet and supposed prophet, describes that nation as constantly addicted to lying, and as crafty and savage in their temper; luxuriously and even ravenously gluttonous, and exceedingly lazy and idle, and so exposed to every temptation. 13, 14. And indeed the perfidious, mischievous, and sensual conduct of the Judaizing Christians and their disciples, still confirm the justness of that description. It is therefore necessary that you deal plainly and sharply with them, that neither seducers nor seduced may dare to persist any longer in their evil principles and practices, but be recovered to and settled in the true and uncorrupted doctrines of faith, and may no more attend to or believe, and be carried away with, the fabulous traditions of the Jews, or the imperious injunctions of men prejudiced against and gone off from the truth of the gospel—relative to ceremonial rites of clean and unclean meats or drinks, which are no longer obligatory under the New Testament dispensation.—15. By real Christians, whose hearts and consciences are, through faith, purged by the blood of Christ, every kind of wholesome food may be lawfully eaten; but by those who are still unregenerated, and under the power of unbelief with respect to gospel truths, and who are cleaving to Mosaic institutions instead of Christ, nothing, however good or lawful in itself, can be used without sin or defilement, as their own understanding and conscience, those leading and directive powers of their soul, are quite misguided and corrupted. 16. They indeed make high professions and boasts of their knowledge of God and his will; but their practices are a plain confutation of all such pretences, and manifest them to be detestable enemies to God and godliness, unbelievers of the gospel revelation, disobedient to its authority, and utterly injudicious and unfit for performing anything good; and so disapproved of God.

Ver. 3. In due times. Literally, 'in its own' or 'his own times'—the times eternally purposed in divine wisdom, and prophetically foretold by his Spirit through the prophets.—On comparing the phrase 'the commandment of God our Saviour' with the narratives of Paul's conversion and designation to the apostleship, Ac. 9. 15; 26. 16, it will be utterly impossible to deny that he believed Jesus Christ to be 'God manifest in the flesh.' C.

Ver. 5. After comparing ver. 3, in which Titus is appointed to 'ordain elders in every city,' with ver. 6, in which every such elder is required to be 'blameless,' and then with ver. 7, in which every such blameless elder is described as a 'bishop,' it will be difficult to deny that in the apostolic church 'elder' and 'bishop' were but two names for the same person—one the title of qualification derived from age, or its equivalents, wisdom and gravity; the other the title of office and duty, the rule and oversight of the church. C.

Ver. 9. Able—to convince, by refuting objections, unravelling sophistries, exposing misquotations, and establishing the truth on divine authority. C.

Ver. 11. Whose mouths must be stopped—not by secular power, for Titus had none, either on his side or at his command; but by quotation of Scripture, such as our Saviour employed against the Sadducees; and the unmasking of hypocrisy, such as he practised against the Pharisees, Mat. 22. 23-46. C.

Ver. 12. Jerome, Socrates, and Nicephorus apply this to Epimenides, who was born at Gnossus in Crete, and to whom several prophecies are ascribed, by Diogenes Laertes, Plato, and Cicero. The work in which the words are said to have been contained is lost. If he prophesied through mere human sagacity, and yet pretended to be an inspired prophet, the apostle merely gives him the title by which the Cretians recognized him; but if he was in any degree really inspired, and yet not a true follower of God, even so was Balaam, and so was Caiaphas: for the one loved the wages of unrighteousness, and the other condemned to death the Lord of life and glory. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Nothing is of higher authority for our direction than such inspired epistles. Nor can anything be more honourable than to be a servant of God and an inspired messenger of Christ. Nothing is more answerable to our need or conducive to our happiness than grace, mercy, and peace: nothing more sure or comfortable than a promise of eternal life from God, who cannot lie. Nor can anything be better framed to convey these blessings to us than the gospel of Christ. As the work of preaching is of infinite importance, and the opposition to it strong and manifold, it requires many great qualifications in ministers, and great care in trying and setting them apart to their office.

—False teachers and unruly professors create ministers much and hard work. But where wickedness abounds, professors are apt to be tainted with it. Men hardened in error need plain refutations; and stubborn sinners need severe rebukes. Such as have not right principles of grace abounding in their heart, and sound principles of truth in their belief, must necessarily err in their conduct. And it is not high professions, but holy lives, that characterize true Christians.

CHAPTER II. Ver. 1. While therefore so many deluding and deluded persons of corrupt minds and practices surround you on every side, take peculiar care to preach and insist upon such truths and duties as are agreeable to and put honour upon the solid, pure, wholesome, and soul-healing doctrines of the gospel of Christ, and which lay all the professors thereof under the strongest obligations to piety and virtue, of whatsoever sex or station they be. 2. Exhort therefore the more aged Christian brethren to be very watchful, circumspect, and sedate, in their temper and carriage;—to behave with a venerable gravity in their words, actions, deportment, and dress;—to be prudent in their conduct and temperate in eating and drinking;—to be sincere believers of the pure doctrines of the gospel, and to live answerably to them; fervent in love to God, to the saints, and to all men; not peevish, but patient, under weakness, tribulations, and offences. 3. Exhort aged women to be exemplary in their dress and deportment, as becomes the professors of religion and holiness;—not false accusers, slanderers, or backbiters of others;—not inclined or addicted to immoderate drinking of liquors;—but careful instructors of children and others in the solid truths of the gospel and laudable practices of virtue. 4. 5. And let them particularly instruct and encourage young women to be wise, cautiously avoiding everything that savours of lightness or lewdness, and, if married, to love their husbands and children in the most affectionate, endearing, and dutiful manner;—to be discreet, prudent, and obliging in their whole

3 The^c aged women likewise, that they be in behaviour as becometh holiness,² not false accusers,³ not given to much wine, teachers of good things;

4 That they may teach the young women to be ^asober, ^ato love their husbands, to love their children,

5 To be discreet, chaste, keepers at home, good, obedient to their own husbands, that the word of God be not blasphemed.

6 Young men likewise exhort to be ^asober-minded:⁵

9 Exhort ^aservants to be obedient unto their own masters, and to please them well in all things; not answering again;⁶

10 Not^j purloining, but showing all good fidelity; that they may ^aadorn the doctrine of ^aGod our Saviour in all things.

11 For ^athe grace of God that bringeth salvation hath ^aappeared to all men,⁷

12 Teaching us, that, ^adenying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world;

13 Looking^a for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ;⁸

behaviour; quite modest, virtuous, and chaste;—careful and industrious in their attention to their families; of a meek and humble temper;—kindly submissive and obedient to their husbands in everything lawful;—that so God and his gospel may not be reproached as encouraging disorderly practices. 6. In like manner, advise and excite young men professing Christianity to be considerate, chaste, meek, and sober, and to guard against the impetuous, rash, proud, wilful, and frolicsome temper common to youth. 7, 8. And if you would have these things believed and practised by others, be yourself an exact pattern of everything good and beneficial:—and in all your preaching, deliver nothing but the pure and unmixed doctrine of Christ, with a disinterested and single aim at the glory of God and good of souls; with becoming seriousness and gravity, with all simplicity and godly sincerity, and in plain, significant, scriptural, and determinate language,—that none may misunderstand it or be misled by it; that so your most critical, carping, and cavilling enemies may be put to shame, when they can find nothing to object either to your doctrine or practice.—9. And whereas some judaizing teachers attempt to persuade converted slaves that they are not bound to remain in subjection to their heathen masters, be you careful to inculcate on believing servants to continue, as much as ever, and from better principles, obedient to their masters in everything lawful; and to behave towards them in the most courteous, obliging, and diligent manner, cheerfully executing their commands without murmuring or disputing, and never returning any insolent or saucy answer when reproved or ordered to work. 10. Charge them to be strictly honest, never daring to waste, embezzle, or apply to their own use any part of their master's goods, money, victuals, or time, beyond their allowance;—but always faithfully obeying their orders, and doing all they can for their honour and advantage,—that thus they may be a credit to the gospel, and their profession of it, and may even strike conviction into the consciences of their heathen masters, of the excellency, purity, and power of it, to render men virtuous in every station of life.—11. For the gospel of the grace of God, particularly in the New Testament dispensation of it, which so clearly displays the full favour of God, and so powerfully works grace in men's hearts, as it brings glad tidings of deliverance from sin and misery of every form, and of eternal happiness, and shows the way of obtaining salvation by faith in Christ, has now shone forth upon all nations, and upon all sorts and ranks of men.—12. Instructing, and gloriously persuading and leading us who believe, that, renouncing, abhorring, and utterly forsaking all infidelity, idolatry, and impiety of every kind, contrary to the first table of the moral law, and all irregular inclinations and desires, which worldly men indulge and gratify, contrary to the second—we should carefully live in all purity and holiness, in a due government of our passions and appetites, and in a just, honest, and benevolent behaviour towards men, and in all acts of public and private devotion towards God, in the exercise of every grace, and celebration of all his ordinances, and observation of all his commandments, as long as we continue in this insinuating world.

13. Always encouraging and animating ourselves, by believing, expecting, and patiently waiting and longing for the perfect, all-comprehending, and everlasting felicity which is the great object of our hopes, and for the glorious appearing of the great and mighty God, even our Lord Jesus Christ, who at the last day will manifest himself on his throne of judgment, in all the majesty, beauty, grandeur, and brightness of his divine and mediatorial glory, and in all the glory of his Father, and of all his holy and surrounding angels, and to be glorified in his saints. 14. And what may we not look for and hope from him who so loved us to give himself, soul and body, to the most painful ignominious death of the cross, that he might graciously redeem us from all the guilt, pollution, power, punishment, and in-being of our sins; and sanctify, cleanse, and separate us to himself, as his own loving, precious, and peculiar people, made his by his Father's love, his own sacrifice, and our free and full consent in the day of his grace—that we might, with the most fervent zeal, glorify him in the performance of every duty appointed in his Word, from the best principles and motives, and in the best manner, to the best ends. 15. These are things of such vast importance, and so vehemently opposed or corrupted by the enemies of Christ and his gospel, that you ought, in his name and authority, earnestly to explain and inculcate them, and sharply to confute and reprove the contrary errors and vices. And let your whole conduct be regulated with such prudence, faithfulness, and gravity as may raise you and your office above the contempt of your most inveterate and scornful enemies.

Ver. 4. To love their children. Not such a love as indulges the waywardness of their tempers and all the demands of their appetites, and thereby pampers them into future rebels against parental authority; but such a love as indeed sacrifices the ease of the parent to the comfort of the child, yet will not sacrifice the temporal interests of the love by the neglect of education; nor the interests of its immortal soul by the neglect of 'the nurture and admonition of the Lord.' C.

Ver. 8. Sound speech. Every man is bound carefully to watch over his words—inasmuch as 'for every idle word he shall give (a personal) account in the day of judgment;' but men holding public office in the church are doubly bound, inasmuch as an unguarded word, an unsound speech, is not merely a fault in themselves, but may either mislead their friends, who pay deference to their opinions, or give enemies, 'who watch for their halting,' an occasion to blaspheme. C.

Ver. 10. That they may adorn, &c. The Christian servant who is not himself 'adorned' with dress as his richer superior, may yet, by his cheerful obedience, command of tongue, and unshaken fidelity, 'adorn the gospel' which he professes, and commend it to his master, his children, his guests, and friends—so that, like the captive maid in the house of Naaman, who directed her master to the prophet of Israel and the cure of his leprosy, he may be the means of directing to a greater Prophet, and the removal of a more grievous malady. C.

REFLECTIONS.—With gravity, sincerity, faithfulness, authority, and Scripture evidence, ought ministers to preach the gospel, and apply it for exhortation, comfort, or reproof, as there is occasion. Nor can they expect that others will believe, or adversaries be silenced, unless their practice be answerable to their doctrine.—To adorn his profession, and honour the Lord Christ, every professor, according to his age or station in the world, must act up to God's commands himself, and promote holiness in others. The aged should be patterns and teachers of every Christian virtue and work; and the younger heartily disposed to receive their instructions and follow their advice. Sound principles, sober gravity, temperance, chastity, holiness, humility, diligence, honesty, and faithfulness, should deeply mark every Christian character. The grace of God, the tenor and scope of the gospel, the certain appearance of Christ to judgment, his death to redeem us from all iniquity, and the heavenly glory which he has prepared for us, in the strongest manner require and enforce our mortification of every lust, and earnest performance of every holy duty. A gospel of God's redeeming grace, manifested to all ranks and sorts of men, requires universal holiness from all. We cannot manifest grace to be in our heart unless we renounce every known sin. We can have no right hopes of heaven unless we are given to the study of holiness as the preparation for it. We have no marks of being Christ's redeemed while sin is our pleasure and work; and we can have no evidence of being his peculiar people, if, in our temper and conduct, we are conformed to the world that lieth in wickedness.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 1. And as the same judaizing teachers dissuade Christians from owning the authority of heathen magistrates, see that you earnestly admonish and charge your people to be peaceably submissive to their supreme or subordinate civil governors, as the deputies and ministers of God; and to pay a conscientious obedience to all their just laws; and to perform every duty becoming their stations, whether it relate to God or to men. 2. Caution them against reviling any, of whatever rank, nation, or religion, or charging things falsely upon them, or even exposing their real faults, but in so far as some valuable end is to be gained thereby. Warn them against a litigious quarrelsome temper and behaviour; and teach them, on the contrary, to be of an equitable, candid, yielding spirit; and to manifest a humble, mild, and good temper in all their words and actions towards all sorts of men, the very worst not excepted. 3. For indeed none can be worse than we once were, and should still have been, if left to ourselves; for in our unregenerate state we were destitute of all spiritual wisdom and knowledge relating to duty or happiness: were disobedient to God and his holy, just, and good laws; were wanderers from him and the way of life and peace—seduced by Satan, the world, and our own treacherous hearts; were perfect slaves to many diversified sinful inclinations and sensual pleasures; were foolishly spending our time in maliciously wishing and doing all the hurt we could to such as did not please us; and envying the honour or happiness of such as were above or around us; and, on the whole, were most hateful and detestable in ourselves to God and to all good men, and full of bitter and implacable enmity one against another, according to our different passions, interests, or nations. 4. But, while we were in these awful circumstances, the transcendent kindness and infinite mercy of God (the original Fountain of our salvation through Jesus Christ) towards men shone forth with reviving and almighty grace, in the preaching and power of the gospel, to make a holy and happy change on us. 5. And it neither was nor could be any good work which we, who were so detestable and wicked, had performed, but really of his own full, self-moving, undeserved, nay, abused and provoked mercy, and its compassionate propensities, that he brought us out of that deplorable condition into a state of salvation, through repentance, faith, and regenerating grace, represented in baptism, and effected by a living faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, 6. Whom, in his gifts and graces, God the Father graciously and abundantly bestowed upon us, according to his promise, through the mediation, merit, exaltation, and intercession of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ; 7. That being, by the love of God, discharged from guilt and condemnation, and accepted as righteous unto eternal life on account of the righteousness of Jesus Christ imparted to us, we might be adopted into his family as his children, and made heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ, according to the ground of hope laid down in the promises of the gospel given to us, and according to that grace of hope wrought in our souls by which we expect eternal life through our Redeemer.—8. The important things which I have mentioned are true and faithful, and to be firmly believed, and frequently insisted upon in your ministrations, that they who have believed in God through Christ, according to the gospel revelation, may be induced and excited, with all carefulness and diligence, to abound, excel, and lead the way to others, in all such works as are honourable to God, to Christ, and to their Christian character. And these doctrines, and the good works to which they manifestly tend, are every way excellent in their own nature; and though God cannot be profited by them, they are exceedingly useful and beneficial to mankind. 9. But avoid and discountenance all senseless and idle debates, of which Judaizing teachers are so fond,—as about descent from this or that particular tribe or family of Israel, or about the sense and obligation of the ceremonial law, which they desire to introduce into the gospel dispensation.—10. If any professed Christian entertain and boldly assert such errors as overthrow the fundamental principles of the gospel, especially if he appear to do it from prejudice against the truths themselves, as directly contrary to his own lusts, or out of a proud inclination to make himself the head of a party, let him be, once and again, solemnly, and in the most convincing manner, admonished of his sin and danger; and if after all this he obstinately persist in his destructive errors, let him be excommunicated from the visible church, and all familiarity with him not required by the laws of nature be carefully avoided by her members; 11. For it is sufficiently manifest that such a man hath utterly turned away from Christ the foundation, and from all true goodness, and that he sins against his own soul, and against the divine authority, light, and truth of the gospel revelation, if not against the convictions of his own conscience. And his persisting to avow such error is sufficient proof against him; yea, thereby he practically condemns himself as not fit to have any fellowship with the true church of Christ.

Ver. 5. (1) Does 'the washing of regeneration' signify baptism; and does the apostle mean that 'the renewing of the Holy Ghost' necessarily accompanies or flows from it? or (2) Does 'the washing of regeneration' signify baptism as merely a ritual sign to all, and seal to believers of 'the renewing of the Holy Ghost'? or (3) Is 'the renewing of the Holy Ghost' merely expository of 'the washing of regeneration'? The first of these views is supported by Hooker, Beveridge, G. Ridley, &c.; the second, by Bishop's Bible, Hall, Wells, Brown, T. Scott, A. Clarke, &c. The first of these views we unhesitatingly reject; and to the second, though supported by such eminent names, we prefer the third, translating the passage 'by the washing of regeneration, even the renewing of the Holy Ghost.' See note on Jn. 3. 5. C.

Ver. 9. Foolish questions—on matters of mere idle curiosity; on points that can never be absolutely ascertained; or of no practical use if discovered. C.

Ver. 10. The heretical man was one who, either by the adoption and propagation of fundamental errors, or errors of a minor character, caused divisions in the church. P.

REFLECTIONS.—Nothing is more absurd than for princes to hate and persecute true Christianity, which so truly renders men good subjects. For nothing can more actually influence men to every good word and work than the believing consideration of their marvellously gracious redemption by God, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. Dreadful is the wickedness in heart and life of every man by nature; and transcendent the grace, precious the blood, and almighty the influence that can save such sinners—that can without, nay, contrary to, their own deserts, renew their hearts after the image of God, justify their persons before him, and through faith give them eternal life. Base is our conduct if, after all, we willingly employ either heart or tongue, hand or foot, in iniquity. The doctrines of the gospel, believed with the heart, are the most real and effectual means of making us careful to maintain good works. Honourable would it be if every professed Christian were thereby distinguished from others. And happy would be the church if all useless controversies were shunned and stifled; every erroneous and schismatical person, after due pains taken for his conviction, were solemnly excommunicated; and faithful ministers were all of one mind, heart, and way in the truth as it is in Christ.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE EPISTLE TO TITUS.

How much Christianity is intended to cultivate the domestic, the political, and the social virtues, appears from the admirable precepts of ch. ii. iii.; and how much the success of their cultivation depends upon ministerial faithfulness is obvious from the personal charges addressed to Titus, ch. 2. 7, 15; 3. 8. This epistle has also a special value in the authority which it furnishes for the exercise of a careful and efficient discipline, not merely over church-members guilty of gross immorality, as in 1 Co. 5. 4, 5; but also over such as adopt, assert, or propagate erroneous doctrines contrary to the Word of God. These the apostle instructs Titus to admonish; but, if obstinate, he commands him to reject them from the fellowship of the church. C.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO PHILEMON.

This epistle is distinguished as an act of intercession, and furnishes a beautiful specimen of that deep interest which Christians in the higher ranks of life should take in the welfare of those whom Providence has placed in less favourable circumstances. C.

This epistle was written during Paul's first captivity at Rome, and probably just before the Epistle to the Colossians. Philemon seems to have been a member of that church (cf. ver. 10 with Col. 4. 9), and to have been converted by the preaching of Paul. 'The bearer of the epistle was a slave who had run away from, and, as it would seem, robbed Philemon (ver. 18), but who now, after having had the blessing of meeting with St. Paul at Rome, and by being converted to Christianity by him, was returning to the master he had wronged, changed and repentant.' The object of the epistle is evident:—it was to effect a complete reconciliation between master and slave. P.

4 He rejoiceth to hear of the faith and love of Philemon, 9 whom he desireth to forgive his servant Onesimus, and lovingly to receive him again.

PAUL,^a a prisoner of Jesus Christ, and Timothy our brother, unto Philemon¹ our dearly beloved, and fellow-labourer,

2 And to our beloved Apphia, and ^bArchippus our fellow-soldier, and to 'the church in thy house:

3 Grace^d to you, and peace, from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

4 I^e thank my God, making mention of thee always in my prayers,

5 Hearing^g of thy love and faith,² which thou hast toward the Lord Jesus, and toward all saints;

6 That ^hthe communication of thy faith may become effectual by the acknowledging of every good thing which is in you in Christ Jesus.

7 Forⁱ we have great joy and consolation in thy love, because the bowels of the saints are refreshed by thee, brother.

8 Wherefore, though I might be much ^jbold in Christ to enjoin thee that which is convenient, 9 Yet for love's sake I rather beseech thee, being such ^kan one as Paul the aged, and now also a 'prisoner of Jesus Christ.

10 I beseech thee for my son ^lOnesimus,³ whom I have begotten in my bonds:

11 Which^o in time past was to thee unprofitable,⁴ but now profitable to thee and to me:

12 Whom I have sent again: thou therefore receive^p him that is mine own bowels;

13 Whom I would have retained with me,

¶ Written from Rome to Philemon, by Onesimus a servant.

Ver. 4-7. In reflecting on your well-known faith in Christ and love to all the saints, I heartily thank God for his kindness bestowed upon you; and pray that your faith and love may be still more and more effectual to render you still more generous and benevolent; that they who hear of, and especially they who receive your favours, may be excited to make the most grateful acknowledgments of those kind and holy dispositions which, by virtue derived from Christ, and to his honour, work for the relief and support of his servants and poor members for his sake.—It is a great comfort to me in my imprisonment, and to Timothy, my brother here, to understand that the hungry appetites of poor private Christians and holy ministers are abundantly relieved and satisfied by your charitable donations.

REFLECTIONS.—Faithful ministers affectionately care for and rejoice in one another's gracious comforts and success. And it is an honour for the wealthy to bestow abundantly on the cause, servants, and poor members of Christ. God can marvellously bring good out of great evil—can make robbery and the running away from lawful service an occasion of bringing a person to the gospel, attended by the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven; and sinful falls the means of bringing about saving conversion. What an inexpressible alteration for the better converting grace makes on a person! And readily we ought to forgive such as have offended and injured us if they return to their duty, and especially if God's grace has made them our brethren in Christ. A high esteem and affectionate regard should Christians show to the instruments of their conversion. And with earnestness and prudence ministers or others should interpose their influence in favour of those who penitently return to their duty. Thrice happy is that church where ministers and people are knit together in cordial affection, and labour for one another's welfare, temporal, spiritual, and eternal, by much fervent prayer; and where peculiar care is taken to refresh, comfort, and provide for the aged, poor, and persecuted.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE EPISTLE TO PHILEMON.

This epistle possesses a special value, as it exhibits the true and only principle of human equality—union in Christ Jesus. Onesimus, the slave, is now a son to Paul, and a brother to Philemon; yet this epistle equally sustains the distinction of rights and ranks, and even Paul beseeches as a friend, but does not command as a superior, ver. 10, 13, 14. It also possesses a special value as teaching the doctrine of restitution, unless the injured party choose freely to forgive. Nor is it less remarkable as it depicts Paul not merely in the public character of an apostle, but in the private character of a domestic friend, and discovers him as truly amiable and childlike in the one, as he is great and manly in the other. C.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE HEBREWS.

Ancient copies and translations, the testimonies of the highest ancient and modern authorities, the style of the writer's quotations from the Old Testament, his method of reasoning from them, his imprisonment in Italy, his intimate connection with Timothy, ch. 13. 23, as well as the manner of his closing benedictions—all concur in testifying that Paul was the writer of this epistle. The omission of his name and office, as well as of the residence and characteristics of the parties to whom he wrote, contrary to his uniform custom in his other epistles, is an objection of no weight against all this array of testimony. That the parties to whom it was sent were well and personally known to the writer, appears from ch. 10. 34; 13. 18, 19, 23; and that they were Jews converted to Christianity, is evident from the nature of the subjects handled, the scriptural evidence adduced, the hopes expressed, and the exhortations to constancy so earnestly enforced. That it was written from Italy appears from these words, 'they of Italy salute you;' and that it was near the end of his first imprisonment seems to be intimated by the confident manner in which he says, 'I beseech you the rather to do this, that I may be restored to you the sooner,' ch. 13. 19. The omission of the apostle's name and office, as well as of the parties to whom he wrote, has been accounted for on the supposition, that as the unconverted Jews were strongly prejudiced against Paul, and, by consequence, against his friends, nothing was put forward that might alarm their prejudices, and cause them to throw down the book unread. This supposition is highly probable; for the apostle, whom the light of Christianity had set free from all prejudices, felt great tenderness for the prejudices of others, and was always ready to sacrifice self, and, so far as a good conscience would permit, to become all things to all men, that he might gain some.

The substance of the epistle may be stated as follows:—1. The superiority of Christ's person, not merely above Moses, but above the angels, by whose ministry the Jewish institutions were promulgated—with the most careful enunciation, that while he was 'Jehovah who laid the foundations of the earth,' he was also 'partaker of flesh and blood.' These are the main objects of the first two chapters. 2. The superior dignity and perfect efficacy of Christ's priesthood, and the insufficiency of the priesthood of Aaron; together with the special advantages of Christ being a suffering Redeemer, instead of a temporal monarch, as the Jews had expected, occupy from the third to the end of the eighth chapter. 3. The emblematic nature and utter insufficiency of the Levitical ceremonies, farther than as shadows of the substance, copies of the original, with the perfect sufficiency of the sacrifice of Christ for the redemption of all that believe, is the purpose of the ninth and tenth chapters. 4. To obviate the Jewish objection, that to embrace Christianity was to apostatize from the religion of Moses, the old religion, he proceeds to show, in the eleventh chapter, that, since the beginning of the world, the servants of God have all acted upon one simple and identical principle—faith in the truth, promises, and personal attributes of God; and, consequently, that to embrace Christianity, so far from being apostasy, was merely a farther and more noble extension of the original and unchangeable principle of all true religion. 5. In the last two chapters he follows up all his reasoning with directions and exhortations to patience under persecution for the truth's sake, and closes with the benediction 'Grace be with you all.' C.

The Epistle to the Hebrews is in some respects unique. It is different from all the other epistles in the New Testament canon. In Paul's other epistles the name of the author is the first word. The same is the case in the Epistles of James, Peter, and Jude. The Epistles of John, though in one sense anonymous, are yet, by incidental evidence, as clearly shown to be his writings as if his name were attached. This epistle, however, is not merely anonymous, but there is not a particle of direct evidence pointing to its author. All the other epistles assume the epistolary form at the outset. In Hebrews no individual and no church is mentioned. The opening sentences resemble the introduction to a set oration, or a philosophical essay, more than a simple pastoral. The style is different from, and it surpasses in beauty and power, anything in the New Testament. The words and clauses are arranged with strictest grammatical accuracy, and with great rhetorical skill. It is only towards the close we find a few incidental allusions, and forms of speech, which suggest the idea that it is a letter.

In matter the epistle does not yield in importance to any book in the Bible. The fundamental doctrines of Christianity are asserted, defined, and defended with a clearness and ability nowhere surpassed. The Deity of Christ, his humanity, his atonement and intercession, and his supreme headship, are most convincingly demonstrated. They are demonstrated in a way peculiar to this book,—by testimonies adduced from the Old Testament. The epistle shows the perfect harmony which subsists between the law and the gospel; it proves that the Jewish and Christian dispensations are essentially one—that the latter is the full development of the former. CHAPTER I. Ver. 1 To convince you of the superior excellency of the gospel dispensation above that of the law, I would have you seriously observe that God—who anciently, at different times and in several degrees, and in different forms of dreams, visions, and immediate impulses, gradually communicated his mind relative to the redemption of sinful men to our forefathers by his servants the prophets, 2. Has now, when the Jewish constitution is drawing to an end, and under the last dispensation of his grace, given us a far more complete manifestation of his will in the gospel, by a messenger infinitely more glorious—even his eternal, only begotten, and incarnate Son; who, being by nature the most high and only true God, has an original right to inherit all things; and who, as Mediator, is God's first-born, Head over all things to his church; and by whom, in the strictest connection and co-operation, he made the heavens and the earth, and all that is in them, and forms all the different ages and dispensations of time and eternity; 3. Who being, in his divine person, the illustrious brightness of the glory, and the most exact character and image of the person, of the Father, having the very same nature and essential properties, and supporting and governing all ranks, orders, and individuals of creatures by the almighty operation of his own will, when, as our great High-priest, he had, by his own obedience and suffering, made pardon possible for all people, did, in virtue of his finished atonement, and in correspondence to the dignity of his person, ascend to heaven in our nature, to take possession of a glorious state, the most fixed, durable, and inexpressibly exalted; 4. Being in his person, and in his office of Mediator, inconceivably superior to the highest angels—having by nature and by his Father's appointment, a name, title, and character far too high to be applied to any of them. 5. For (to consider this matter with respect to his divine nature) whom, even of the loftiest angels, did God ever represent as his essential, his eternal, his only begotten Son? 6. Nay, when he brought him into our lower world to obey and suffer in our stead, he required all his holy angels to pay all divine honours to him, as his Son and their Creator. 7. Again, when he speaks of angels, those noblest of creatures, he represents them as created to be his servants, for executing his will with great strength, speed, and activity. 8. But, in a manner inexpressibly more exalted, he represents his Son Christ as a divine person, the true God, whose dominion is everlasting and unchangeable, and as ruling his extensive empire over all things with infinite equity, truth, and righteousness; 9. And as one who has a natural and necessary regard to holiness and equity, and hatred of all iniquity, and who has brought in an everlasting righteousness, and is furnished with gifts, graces, and glory infinitely above the measure of angels or believers. 10-12. Yea, as the Creator of heaven and earth, who himself existed from eternity, and as unchangeable in himself, while he blesses all creatures for their good: 13. But which of the loftiest angels did ever God call to sit enthroned in majesty, power, and glory, at his right hand, till sin, Satan, death, and all his and his people's enemies should be subdued under his feet as vanquished rebels? 14. Nay, are not all these spiritual beings placed in an infinitely lower station, being no more than messengers and servants of Christ, whom he employs in revealing his mind to, and in protecting, serving, and assisting in life or death, all the faithful; who, under him, are, by faith and through grace, called to be highly honoured, and eternally to enjoy his complete salvation?

Ver. x. More literally—'In many parts and in many ways God, in ancient times, having spoken to the fathers through the prophets.' The four first verses form the general introduction to the book. In them Paul propounds his subject with great beauty of language, and with still greater rhetorical skill. His first object is to contrast the two dispensations—the New and the Old; and thereby to prove to the Jew the transcendent superiority of the former. The first point of comparison is as to the mode or manner of revelation. The Old was given 'in various parts and in various ways.' It was not revealed to one person, or at one time, or according to one uniform plan. This is indicated in the first verse. One thing is specially worthy of note in the present verse. The apostle begins this sublime epistle by an acknowledgment of the divine authority of the whole of the Old Testament. God spake it all. He spake not merely by but in the prophets, as the Greek signifies. By His Spirit he took possession of them. Their words were thus made His words. This is, in fact, the foundation of Paul's whole argument. P.

Ver. 2. The worlds cannot mean the arrangement of dispensations, but the creation of the material and visible universe, agreeably to Jn. 1. 3, and likewise of its invisible powers, agreeably to Col. 1. 16, 17. C.

Ver. 4. Paul's object now is to institute a comparison between Christ, the Revealer of the New dispensation, and the angels through whose ministrations, in some way which we cannot now fully discover, the Old dispensation was revealed. Ac. 7: 33. The angels were the "messengers" of the Old Testament. Their mission consisted in the same as that of the angels sent forth in this verse consists in. In the name he obtained, he obtained it by inheritance. The name is SON, in its higher and peculiar sense, implying perfect equality with the Father. He obtained it by inheritance. Though Son from eternity in his divine nature, he was not a profound nature, God-man, this name was not strictly his until it was given him by God. He obtained it, therefore, but he obtained it by a right inherent in his divinity. Paul.

Ver. 6. And again, &c. Rather, 'But when he hath brought again the first-born into the world'—a manifest description of the resurrection of Christ, whereby he was demonstrated to be the Son of God with power, Ro. 1. 4. C.

Ver. 7. 'Who maketh his angels winds;' i.e. servants of his will, as the winds are—swift, powerful, unseen, in the execution of his purposes. 'And his ministers a flame of fire;' i.e. he makes them act by and through the lightning, carrying out the mysterious chemistry of nature, and often executing swift and terrible judgment. P.

Ver. 8. Thy throne, &c. With the view of evading the evidence afforded by these words to the Deity of Christ, they have been translated, 'God is thy throne for ever and ever.' But, in addition to the fact that the nominative is often in Greek used for the vocative, especially by the Attics, the Hebrew cannot be translated in any other way than as it is given in the authorized version. C.

Ver. 9. Thy fellows. Prophets, priests, and kings—all par-laid the foundation of the earth: and the heavens are the works of thine hands:

11 They^u shall perish, but thou remainest:
and they all shall wax old as doth a garment;

12 And as a vesture shalt thou fold them up, and they shall be changed:³ but ^vthou art the same, and thy years shall not fail.

13 But to which of the angels said he at any time, "Sit on my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool?"

14 Are they not all ^vministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be ^theirs of salvation?

CHAPTER II.

1 We ought to be obedient to Christ Jesus, 5 and that because he vouchsafed to take our nature upon him, 14 as it was necessary.

THEREFORE we^a ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should ¹let them ²slip.

2 For if the word spoken ^bby angels was stedfast, and every transgression and disobedience ^creceived a just recompense of reward:

3 How^d shall we escape, if we neglect 'so takers of some office with Christ. Some prophets and priests, some priests and kings, &c., but none of them uniting, as he did, the three offices in one person. C.

Ver. 14. The Greek is more expressive than the English. It does not simply mean that angels have, in isolated and extraordinary cases, been sent on missions of mercy to man; but that they are ever thus being sent forth. It is their normal work. We have many cheering instances in Scripture. Angels took Lot out of Sodom; protected Elisha from the Syrians at Dothan; delivered the three Hebrews from the fiery furnace; delivered Peter from prison, and Paul from the hands of the Jews; and the angels of the Lord campeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them; and Christ says of little children, that angels watch over them. P.

REFLECTIONS.—Blessed be God that he hath spoken so much in mercy and grace to men, and that we have so full evidence of the divine authority of both Old and New Testaments. Wisely hath he suited the manner of his revelations to the state of his church and the necessities of mankind. And now we enjoy the fullest, the clearest, and last discovery of his will that is to be expected on earth. Unbounded is the glory of our Redeemer, as the Son of God and our Mediator. Being essentially one God with, but personally distinct from and equal to his eternal Father, he is the creator, proprietor, and preserver of all things. His blood, infinitely precious and powerful, atoned for and purges away our sins; and in virtue thereof he is enthroned at the right hand of God: there he for ever reigns the self-existent JEHOVAH, the eternal and immutable God, the object of adoration to angels and men! How honoured then are his saints, who are members of his flesh, his blood, and his bones! Safe are they under his care, and guarded and ministered to by millions of his angels. And rich is their provided, their prepared, their faithfully secured inheritance of eternal salvation. How dead then ought they to be to this perishing world and all its concerns!

CHAPTER II. Ver. 1. Since Christ is thus infinitely superior to the ancient prophets, and even to the loftiest angels, it highly concerns us, who live under the more eminently glorious dispensation of the gospel, both in respect of duty and interest, to attend the more diligently, affectionately, and steadfastly unto—and with humble faith and love to esteem, embrace, meditate upon, and seriously improve—the everlasting doctrines thereof, which have been delivered unto us in the ministry of the Word ; and to retain them carefully in our hearts and memories, and persevere in our holy profession of them—lest at any time, through the corruption, heedlessness, treachery, and prejudices of our hearts, or the temptations of Satan and the snares of this evil world, we should be carried away from the truth, and suffer it to slip out of our minds, and so should lose the benefit of it, and perish under its gracious administrations. 2. For if the law of Moses, which was given at Mount Sinai by the ministration of angels, acting as Christ's messengers, was established great salvation; which at the first ¹began to be spoken by the Lord, and was ²confirmed unto us by them that heard him;

4 God³ also bearing them witness,³ both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts⁴ of the Holy Ghost, according to his own will?

5 For unto the angels hath he not put in subjection the ⁵world to come, whereof we speak.

6 But one in a certain place testified, saying, ⁶What is man, that thou art mindful of him? or the son of man, that thou visitest him?

7 Thou⁷ madest him a little lower than⁵ the angels; thou crownedst him with glory and honour, and didst set him over the works of thy hands:

8 Thou⁸ hast put all things in subjection under his feet. For in that he put all in subjection under him, he left nothing that is not put under him. But now we see not yet all things put under him.

9 But we see Jesus, who ⁹was made a little lower than the angels, for⁶ the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honour; that ⁹he by the grace of God should taste death for every man.⁷

10 For ¹⁰it became him, ¹⁰for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing ¹⁰many sons unto glory, to make ¹⁰the Captain of their salvation ¹⁰perfect⁸ through sufferings.

11 For both ¹¹he that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one: for which cause he is not ashamed to call them ¹¹brethren;

12 Saying, I will declare thy name unto my brethren; in the midst of the church will I sing praise unto thee.

13 And again, ¹³I will put my trust in him. And again, ¹³Behold I and the children which God hath given me.

14 Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, ¹⁴he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death ¹⁴he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil;

15 And¹⁵ deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage.

16 For verily he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him ¹⁶the seed of Abraham.⁹

17 Wherefore in all things it behoved him to be made ¹⁷like unto his brethren, that he might by divine authority and enforced with an awful sanction; and every contemptuous violation of any of its precepts, or act of wilful disobedience to the authority of God in it, was severely punished with death; 3. How can we expect to escape the judgments of God, in time or eternity, if, through carelessness or unbelief, we despise and reject the glorious gospel—which alone reveals, exhibits, and offers to us that spiritual, heavenly, and eternal salvation which was secured by the infinitely precious blood of Christ, and comprehends in it deliverance from so great sinfulness and misery, and an advancement to so great holiness, happiness, and glory as answers all our wants, and infinitely transcends all our conceptions: the first clear publication of which, without the veil of typical shadows, was begun in the personal ministrations of our Lord Jesus Christ himself on earth, and was further explained and confirmed to us Jews by his inspired apostles, evangelists, and others, who themselves heard him preach these glad tidings of salvation! 4. Yea, to assure us of the infallible certainty of their testimony, God himself attested their integrity and the truth of their doctrine by manifold miraculous operations and effects on the bodies of men, and by an abundant bestowal of spiritual gifts—such as prophecy, wisdom, knowledge, and utterance, speaking with or interpreting languages they never learned—which were dispensed by the Holy Ghost, in their different kinds and degrees, according to the insight of his infinite love. 5. But to proceed in our comparison of Christ with the holy angels, it is manifest that, in his mediatorial office, as well as in his divine Person, he is infinitely superior to them; for though God employed them as his heralds in publishing the law at Sinai, and employs them as ministering spirits to the heirs of salvation, yet he has not given them any headship or ruling power over the New Testament church, nor are its doctrines, ordinances, privileges, or blessings derived from or even published by them. 6-8. But the inspired psalmist David, when contemplating the magnificent works of God, breaks out into a rapture of admiration that God should so favour, support, and assist man; and, after a short debasement, constitute him the universal Lord and head of all his creatures, not one excepted—that he might conquer, subdue, and triumph over his enemies, overcoming all opposition and casting it beneath his feet. Now it is fully evident, from observation and experience, that never since the fall, neither mankind in general nor any particular one of them, has ever had an absolute and universal dominion over all things. 9. But though Jesus Christ has not yet put an end to all the opposition of his and his people's enemies, we certainly know, from the testimony of inspired writers, and from the marvellous effusion of the Holy Ghost in his miraculous gifts and graces, and the wonderful effects of the gospel in convincing and converting multitudes, that he, in consequence of his debasement, obedience, sufferings, and death, in the place of all the world, Jews and Gentiles, is exalted to the highest glory, power, and authority—that he might be in full capacity to accomplish the great end of his death in its complete salvation. 10. For however offensive the doctrine of his debasement may be to carnal Jews, who only look for a temporal deliverer, it infinitely well became, and tended to the singular glory of, the justice, holiness, wisdom, goodness, and other perfections of God the Creator, Preserver, and last End of all things, and of his holy law and government, in bringing all true, humble, and regenerated men to their complete happiness in heaven, to prepare and consecrate his only begotten Son, as their Prince, Leader, and Author of eternal salvation, to his heavenly work of intercession and government, by his suffering on their behalf and in their stead. 11. For both Jesus the Redeemer, who, by his blood, purges away the guilt and filth of all sin, and we, his redeemed, who have accepted Christ, are, by the constitution of the promise of grace, one in the view of the law; and are partakers of the same human nature, in the same condition of weakness, trouble, and mortality; on which account Christ, however great and glorious, does, and in the last day will, more openly avow us, however mean and despicable, to be his brethren; 12. Engaging in the great work by his personal ministrations, and by his servants, will make known the glory and celebrate the praises of his perfections and counsels among all people, faithfully gathering through their communion with us in human affections, sufferings, and graces, he represents himself as trusting in God for support, assistance, success in, and reward of his work, and as ready to do whatever is necessary for our future or eternal salvation, who, as his spiritual children, were to be saved by faith. 14. Since therefore these children whom God has by faith called to be saved by him are equally partakers of immortal souls and mortal bodies as the rest of mankind, he also, having existed the Son of God from all eternity, did, in the fulness of time, assume a true human nature, with all its essential properties and sinless infirmities, into personal union with himself, that he, as their Kinsman-redeemer, in the same nature which sinned, might make a proper fulfillment to the law and justice of God; and that thus, by means of his meritorious death, which he suffered in their room and stead, to take away their sins and the curse of the law, and to secure their happy resurrection and eternal life—he might entirely conquer, overthrow, and make void the power of that great destroying adversary the devil, who, by means of Adam's first transgression, had brought sin and death upon men, and has a limited empire over death, to inflict it upon obstinate and incorrigible sinners, and to be their everlasting portion in eternal death; 15. And that through his suffering of death he might destroy death in its destructive influence; and deliver all people from the sting, dominion, and terrors of it, and in due time give them a complete victory and triumph over it—even though their inward sense of guilt, the terrors of the Jewish dispensation, or heathen ignorance of a happy immortality, had long rendered the thoughts of their death enslaving and terrible. 16. For, to accomplish these important ends, he did not lay hold upon the nature of angels, by taking it into personal union with his divine, as if he intended to recover any of them who fell from their original holiness and happiness; but, passing by them, he laid hold on, and personally united to himself, the far inferior nature of man, as derived from the patriarch Abraham, to whom God promised that in his seed all the nations of the earth should be blessed. 17. From which it is plainly evident that, in order to Christ's duly answering the great design of his office as their Redeemer and Saviour, it was thought fit and necessary that he should partake of their nature in all its essentials; and be made in suffering, and everything but sin, like unto the people whom he was to bring to glory—that so, by his own experience of sufferings in their stead, he might be the better qualified, and the more feelingly engaged, to act the part of a compassionate, tender-hearted High-priest for them towards God, in making answerable to his Father's justice for their sins, and in securing and procuring peace and reconciliation for them. 18. And having thus experimentally endured the temptations of Satan and troubles of this world, as well as the weight of all heinous sins, and triumphed over them, he is the more fit and inclined to sympathize with, support, comfort, and relieve his brethren, when exercised with any like temptations, afflictions, or trials.

Ver. 3. So great salvation. This salvation was 'great,' (1) In the love from which it sprang. (2) In the means by which it was accomplished—the incarnation, death, and resurrection of the Son of God. (3) In the means by which it is applied—the Spirit of the living God. (4) In the disease of sin and ruin of death from which it delivers. (5) In the rest and glory to which it conducts. C.

highly honoured of God, to whom he was a faithful agent. The Jews gloried in their law on this account. Paul shows that these were only types of the gospel realities. Christ is as much superior to Moses as the son and heir is to the slave; as the founder of a community is to the community itself; as the builder of a house is to the house; as the Creator to the creature.

cation, in the day of temptation in the wilderness;

9 When^a your fathers tempted me, proved me, and saw my works forty years.

10 Wherefore^a I was grieved with that generation, and said, They do alway err in ^btheir heart; and they have not known my ways.

11 So I ^cswore in my wrath, They shall not enter³ into my rest.)

12 Take^a heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God.

13 But ^bexhort one another daily, while it is called To-day; ^clest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin.

14 For we are made ^dpartakers of Christ, ^eif we hold the beginning of our confidence stedfast unto the end;⁴

15 While it is said, ^cTo-day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts, as in the provocation.

16 For^a some, when they had heard, did provoke: howbeit ^bnot all that came out of Egypt by Moses.

17 But with whom was he grieved forty years? ^cwas it not with ^dthem that had sinned, whose carcases fell in the wilderness?

18 And to whom swore he that they should not enter into his rest, ^ebut to them that believed not?

19 So we see that ^athey could not enter in because of unbelief.

during which the prophecies concerning Jews and Gentiles will be all fulfilled. C.

Ver. 11. He that sanctifieth, does not here signify 'he that maketh holy,' but he that by his own death separates his people from the world and dedicates them to God. See Jn. 17. 19: He. 10. 10, 14.—Are all of one flesh and blood, which his brethren had from Adam, which he received by the Holy Ghost, and by which, being himself without sin, he yet 'bore their sins in his own body on the tree.' See ver. 14. C.

Ver. 16. The word 'nature' is supplied by the translators, but the marginal reading is greatly preferable. Literally, it stands thus: 'For of angels he taketh not hold, but of the seed of Abraham he taketh hold.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—In the superior excellency of its principal preacher, in its manifold and marvellous attestation, and in the full and extensive salvation which it exhibits, the gospel far transcends the law of Moses. With great care and reverence, then, ought we to hear, receive, and retain it, and all the spiritual and eternal blessings which it conveys. To neglect so great a salvation is one of the most grievous sins, and exposes men to the most terrible wrath of God.—How astonishing is it that God should leave angels to perish in their sins, and fix his love upon men, and unite his Son to them! But never can we sufficiently adore the excesses of that love through which we behold him in our nature, for a time debased, suffering, and dead; and then gloriously exalted to his Father's right hand, as head over all things to his gospel church, and expecting till all his enemies be made his footstool. Infinite is the mercy that God should thus bring many sinful men, as his loved, blessed, and regenerated children, to eternal life through faith in Jesus Christ his Son. Yea, herein all his perfections are highly glorified, and his Son qualified to be an exalted intercessor and Captain of salvation. Delightful is Jesus' connection with us, as our elder Brother, and the source of all our sanctification, comfort, and victory over sin, Satan, fears, troubles, and death. And amazing is his Priesthood, and kind his manner of executing it. But great indeed are the effects of this love, that by the death of my divine Saviour I am made alive and free; and sin, devils, and death are conquered—that, by his temptations and trials, I am succoured under and delivered from mine! Since he, then, is merciful, let me always flee into his bosom; and since he is faithful, let me always adore and trust him.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 1. Since the great Author of the gospel is so much more excellent and useful than all the former prophets, and even angels, let me beseech you, my dear brethren by descent from Abraham, and, in the judgment of charity, brethren not only to me and all the saints, but even to Christ himself—separated to him by profession, devoted to his service, sanctified by his blood and Spirit, and tenderly called by the gospel to a state of union and fellowship with him, and to a full right to and anticipating possession of all the privileges of the new kingdom—more attentively to consider and seriously reflect upon the supereminent dignity of our Lord Jesus Christ, who, as the messenger of God, reveals to us the whole of the gospel truth which we profess, and as our great High-priest is the subject-matter thereof, who confirms and ratifies it by his death; and so is the author, life, and glory of our heavenly calling, and of our holy profession of his name, and of all our love to and hopes towards God through him; 2. Who being chosen, called, ordained, and sent by God to declare his whole will relative to the faith, worship, obedience, and salvation of the church, performed his work with a fidelity infinitely superior to Moses, his noted type, whom God himself attested as singularly faithful in publishing the whole system of laws and revelations given him, and in his whole government of his chosen people in the wilderness. 3. But, notwithstanding this honourable testimony, Christ is infinitely more honourable in himself, being not a mere man like Moses, but truly God-man in one person, and is worthy of infinitely greater honour, as he is the Former, Proprietor, Lord, and Head of the church, whereas Moses was but a member of it. 4. Nay, being the great Provider of all the materials, and Manager of all the affairs, of the Jewish or gospel church, for his own love, he can be nothing less than God himself. 5. And Moses indeed, not as a lord or proprietor, but as a servant, acted most faithfully in delivering the laws and ordinances of God about everything relative to the Jewish church, that he and they might be the distinguished figures of the far more excellent things which were to be more clearly revealed under the New Testament. 6. But though Christ graciously condescended to take upon him the form of a servant in his human nature and office capacity, yet, in what he has done relative to the church, he acted not merely as a servant, but as his Father's equal and only begotten Son, Heir of all things, and Lord of it, as his house or family, which he secured with his blood, gathered and formed, furnished, ordered, and governs, by his Word and Spirit; and of which all of us are members who, being truly united to him by faith, may, notwithstanding all the tribulations which befall us, steadfastly persevere in the faith, profession, hopes, comforts, and holiness of the gospel.—7. To warn such of you as are but nominal professors against utter apostasy, and quicken real believers to hold on and hold out to the end in their holy profession of Christ and his gospel, let me remind you of the charge given by the Holy Ghost to our fathers in the days of David. Now immediately, and without delay, while the present season of God's mercy and patience lasts, and his messengers are sent to you, if ye would attend to, regard, and embrace what he says by them, for your spiritual and eternal advantage, 8, 9. Take heed that ye do not wilfully shut your eyes against his light, nor stop your ears against his voice, and resist his Spirit, and so harden your hearts against his fear, and against all his methods of wisdom and love, for your present and future happiness, as your forefathers did, by their provoking unbelief, strifes, and murmurings in the wilderness of Arabia. I tried them by diversified dispensations of providence; and they for forty years, beholding my marvellous work of mercy and judgment, often put my faithfulness, power, kindness, patience, and just wrath to the trial; as if they had doubted my ability and willingness to fulfil my promises or threatenings. 10. Therefore, being all that time sorely displeased, and at length wearied out, with their re-

CHAPTER IV.

¹ The rest of Christians is attained by faith. ¹² The power of God's word. ¹⁴ By our high-priest Jesus the Son of God, subject to infirmities, but not to sin, ¹⁶ we must and may go boldly to the throne of grace.

LET us^a therefore fear, lest, a promise being left us of entering into his^b rest, any of you should seem^c to come short of it.

2 For^d unto us was the gospel preached, as peated and aggravated unbelief and insolent behaviour. I solemnly declared them incorrigible in the error and perverseness of their hearts, and obstinately ignorant of and inattentive to my doctrines, laws, and ordinances, or any upright, holy, and peaceable conversation. 11. And, to render my threatening absolutely irreversible, I swear by myself, that, on account of their high and numberless provocations obstinately persisted in, not one of them, from twenty years old and upward, except Caleb and Joshua, who were men of another spirit, should ever enter into Canaan, which I had promised to Abraham and his seed, as a land of quietness, peace, and safety, in which I myself, in the ark of the covenant, would dwell among them; but should every one of them disgracefully die in the wilderness. 12. Being therefore warned by these awful examples, left for our admonition, and excited by a consideration of the dignity of Christ's person and office, and of our near concern with him, and of the rich advantages we may hope for from him, take heed, my dear Christian brethren, examine and watch over yourselves to the utmost, lest at any time, through the influence of Satan, the world, and your own corrupt hearts, unbelief—which, proceeding from an habitually sinful temper of soul, by distrusting God, and giving him the lie, reflects the highest dishonour upon his authority, sincerity, uprightness, faithfulness, power, and grace, and is the most noted and effectual spring and root of obstinate and final apostasy from God, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, who has all life in himself, and is the Author of all spiritual and eternal life to believers—should prevail in you. 13. And, as a mean of preventing this dreadful evil, not only guard against the first workings of unbelief and apostasy in yourselves; but, while your life and the day of gospel grace is continued with you, stir up and encourage one another, without delay, and upon every opportunity, to steadfastness in the faith, and to a holy and circumspect watchfulness against carnality of mind and negligence, and against the temptations of Satan, the allurements and terrors of the world, and everything which tends to carry you away from Christ and the gospel—lest any of you should be lulled asleep and stupefied, and so led aside from him through the guileful and treacherous influence of indwelling corruption, magnifying the terror of sufferings for his sake, and the advantage of worldly ease, pleasure, affluence, or safety, and with fair pretences varnishing over the destructive ways of sin. 14. And it is of the utmost consequence for preserving us from this deceitfulness of sin and hardness of heart, to take heed that we be indeed real Christians; for it is manifest that we have a happy partnership with Christ in his righteousness, Spirit, grace, and benefits, as persons vitally united to him, and interested in all that he is and hath, when we hold fast our spiritual subsistence in him, and steadfastly maintain, and to the end of our lives persevere in our holy profession of him against all opposition and danger. 15. Take heed therefore now to yourselves, and do all that in you lies to fortify one another against apostasy; and if, while life and opportunity are continued, ye would believe and obey what God inculcates upon you for your good, beware of contracting an insensibility and hardness of heart, as your fathers did when they provoked the anger of the Lord against them by their unbelief and rebellion in the wilderness. 16. For most of them, after they had heard the law awfully published by God himself at Sinai, and had received the instructions relative to their ceremonial worship, instead of being suitably affected by it, indulged themselves in the highest provocation against God; nevertheless, Caleb and Joshua were men of a better spirit and conduct, and entered into the promised land. 17. But with whom of these Israelites was God so highly offended forty years as to exclude them from the promised land of Canaan? Was it not with those only who had repeatedly and notoriously rebelled against him through unbelief, and whose dead bodies, on account of their wickedness, lay slain, like miserable and detestable objects, in the Arabian desert through which they travelled to Canaan? 18. And against whom did God, in his just and awful indignation, swear that they should never be admitted to enjoy the privileges, peace, and blessings of that rest in Canaan? Was it not against those only who, notwithstanding all their professions and obligations, warnings and excitements, rejected God and his gifts by their unbelief? 19. It is therefore plain, from the whole, that unbelief was the root and spring of all their other provocations, by which they forfeited all right and claim to the promise of admission into the typical rest of Canaan.

Ver. 1. Holy. Separated from the world and dedicated to God. Such Christians are by profession, and, if that profession be sincere, such they are in reality. C.

Ver. 6. Over his own house. According as the Greek word is or is not aspirated, the translation will be 'over his house;' that is, over God's (ver. 4) or 'his own house;' that is, over Christ's. — Whose house. House, in this place, evidently signifies 'family;' in which sense it is consequently to be understood, ver. 2-5, from which this is a conclusion. C.

Ver. 7. These words, quoted from Ps. 95: 7, were uttered and written, instrumentally, by David; they are, however, attributed directly to the Holy Ghost, because 'holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.' C.

Ver. 10. I was grieved. When 'grief,' 'wrath,' or other similar emotions are attributed to God, they are not to be represented as mere figures and accommodations and concessions of God to the language of men; but are to be understood as exemplified in Jesus, 'God manifest in the flesh.' C.

Ver. 13. This 'deceitfulness' appears in many forms, especially the following: (1) The temptation promises a blessing, as Satan promised god-like immortality to our first parents. (2) Pleads that it is so little, it cannot be rigorously dealt with. (3) That it is infrequent and easily repented of. (4) That God is merciful, and will not rigidly enforce his laws. (5) Sin is disguised under fair names: pride is called spirit; covetousness, care; ungodliness is called thoughtlessness. C.

REFLECTIONS.—In dignity how far, how inconceivably far, Jesus, the God, the Maker, the Lord, the Proprietor and Governor of the church, transcends Moses, a mere man formed by himself, a member, a servant in it! Faithful was he to his Father, who constituted him mediator. And worthy is he to be contemplated, adored, trusted, and rejoiced in, and openly professed. But unworthy are those to be held members of his church who are not living by faith, sanctified by his Spirit, and resting daily in his grace. Alarming and earnest are God's calls and invitations to men; indispensably necessary is a present attention to his voice, and acceptance of his favours; and fearful is our guilt, and dreadful our danger, if we harden our hearts, and contemn his offers of grace. In nothing does the deceitfulness of sin more appear than in men's obstinate unbelief. If it reign in our heart, there is no apostasy but may be expected in our life, and no plague or remorse will be too dreadful for our reward. Alas! what multitudes of gospel hearers perish in this sin! And who knows what numbers are, by a holy God, consigned over to the power of it, and to irreversible condemnation for it, even in this life.

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 1. Since therefore God, as a warning to us, dealt so severely with our fathers for their disobedience and unbelief, it ought to be our deep concern to maintain an awful reverence of his greatness, holiness, and justice, and a religious dread of provoking him—not to dismay and dishearten, but to excite us to the most diligent use of all appointed means, in a humble dependence on his grace, for our own and others' preservation from apostasy and its terrible consequences—lest, when God, who is the contriver and author of, and who delights in, this rest, as recorded, exhibited, and given to us in the gospel, a gracious promise of admission to a state of peace and lively fellowship with him through Christ, in truly evangelical worship and obedience in this world, and of a glorious peace in the world to come, ye should, through sloth and unbelief, reject and forsake that promise or rest, or seem to faint in your Christian course towards it: 2. For the gospel of salvation has been now preached to us, as it was more obscurely to them; but the precious truth of God did not in the least turn to the real advan-well as unto them: 'but the word preached¹ did not profit them, ²not being mixed with faith in them that heard it.

3 For^a we which have believed do enter into rest; as he said, ^bAs I have sworn in my wrath, if they shall enter into my rest: although the works were^c finished from the foundation of the world.

tage of many of them, when they heard it by Moses, or other inspired messengers of God; because they did not closely apply and appropriate the same to their hearts, and feed thereon by faith as the nourishment of their souls, and no more will that which we hear be eventually profitable to us unless we receive and digest it by faith. 3, 4. But as all entrance into God's promised rest is by believing, so those of us who have by a true and lively faith received and rested on Christ alone for salvation, do enter into a state of spiritual and evangelical rest and peace with God through him, according to the light and grace of the New Testament dispensation; and we now, by faith and hope, in gospel worship enter into the heavenly rest, as a pledge and assurance of our personal entrance into the full enjoyment of it in due time; for by comparing the several passages of Scripture which speak of God's rest, it is plain that there remains for us New Testament believers a rest far more excellent than that of Canaan. Even God's oath, excluding the unbelieving Hebrews from Canaan, supposed that all true believers should enter into his rest; so that there was a rest promised 2500 years after the rest of the creation had taken place, on the seventh day of the week and of time. 5. And, moreover, this oath, as it stands in David's psalm, must not be understood as merely relating to the Hebrews' entrance into Canaan, which had taken place more than 400 years before, but also to a rest which then remained to be entered into. 6. Since, then, God's threatening against them who believed not implied that some should actually enter in, and those to whom that typical rest was first preached, through their unbelief, did not enter; 7. Therefore God, by David, fixes another day of entering into his rest, and calls the Jews carefully to improve it, plainly intimating that what is there said related to a rest which was to be enjoyed long after they were in possession of the promised land: 8. For if Joshua, the son of Nun, that noted type of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, had put the Hebrews into the full possession of the rest ultimately intended in that psalm, the Holy Ghost would not, by David, have mentioned another season in which the Hebrews who dwelt in possession of Canaan were to seek a further rest, which could be no other than that which, being typified by the former, was to be introduced by Jesus Christ the Messiah. 9. Since therefore neither the rest of the seventh-day sabbath, nor the rest of the settlement in Canaan, could be intended by that TO-DAY mentioned by David, it is evident there must still remain, under the gospel state, a more complete and glorious rest, typified by the former, which is to be inherited by the true people of God, and which includes a spiritual rest by faith in Christ from Jewish ceremonies—from the law as a covenant—and the holy and joyful rest of the New Testament sabbath, in commemoration of his resurrection; and principally that heavenly rest of perpetual and immediate communion with Christ, of which all the preceding rests are but types, pledges, or foretastes. 10. For our Lord Jesus, having finished his obedience, sufferings, and death, rose again, and took possession of his heavenly glory, and so rested from his labours of securing our eternal redemption; even as God, when he had finished his work of creation, rested on the seventh day, and formed no more new kinds of creatures. And every believer who has entered into the spiritual rest of the gospel state and New Testament sabbath, ceases from loving or wilfully practising his former works of wickedness, and from resting on his once-beloved works of self-righteousness; and when, after finishing his course of obedience, conflicts, and trials, he enters into the complete and heavenly rest, he will perfectly cease from everything selfish, sinful, or troublesome. 11. Since, then, there remains for us a rest inexpressibly more safe, sweet, glorious, and lasting than that of Canaan, let us, in the use of all appointed means, and in dependence on divine grace, with the utmost diligence labour to overcome all difficulties, and break through all oppositions and discour-

4 For he spake in a certain place of the seventh day on this wise, 'And God did rest the seventh day from all his works.

5 And in this place again, 'If they shall enter into my rest.

6 Seeing therefore 'it remaineth that some must enter therein, and they to whom it³ was first preached 'entered not in because of unbelief:

7 (Again, he limiteth a certain day, saying in David, 'To-day, after so long a time; as it is said, To-day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts.

8 For 'if Jesus⁴ had given them rest, then would he not afterward have spoken of another day.

9 There remaineth therefore a 'rest⁵ to the people of God.

10 For 'he that is entered into his rest, he also 'hath ceased from his own works, 'as God 'did from his.)

11 Let⁶ us labour therefore to enter into that rest, lest any man fall after the same example of unbelief.⁶

12 For 'the word of God is 'quick,⁷ and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discernor of the thoughts and intents of the heart.

13 Neither⁸ is there any creature that is not manifest in his sight: but all things are naked and opened unto the eyes of him with whom 'we have to do.

14 Seeing⁹ then that we have a great High-priest, that is passed into the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, let us 'hold fast our profession.⁸

15 For we have not an high-priest 'which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet 'without sin.

16 Let⁶ us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need.

agements, that we may here enjoy all the refreshing and delightful privileges and blessings of the gospel state, and hereafter arrive at the still more refreshing and delightful heavenly glory; and stir up one another to seek after it—lest, through our slothfulness, carnal fear, and unbelief, we should fall short of it, as the Israelites in the wilderness, notwithstanding their distinguished relation to God, fell short of the rest in Canaan through their unbelief and cowardice. 12. And there is the greatest reason to maintain a godly jealousy over ourselves and one another, and there is noble encouragement for the utmost care and caution; for our Lord Jesus Christ, as the Word of life, has life in himself, and is the author of it to others; and the written Word, by the Spirit, has a quickening virtue to raise dead souls: yea, Christ, who is the almighty, omnipresent, omniscient, and heart-searching God, renders it a powerful mean of convincing the conscience, searching and affecting the whole heart, and subduing every thought and affection to the obedience of himself. 13. Nor can any of us escape his critical observation, or the searching influence of his Word, there being no creature, of whatever rank or kind, that lies concealed from his all-comprehensive view; but all persons and things, even the most secret thoughts, desires, hopes, and fears, tempers and dispositions, are most evidently exposed and clearly manifested to the critical and all-seeing eye of him to whom we must give an exact account of our state, qualities, inclinations, and conduct, in the last judgment. 14. Since therefore it is so dangerous to despise, neglect, or apostatize from the truths of the gospel, and since we have in this Jesus Christ, our present Observer and future Judge, so incomparable a High-priest, inconceivably great, divine, and excellent; thoroughly qualified for and exalted in his office—the most difficult and fundamental part of which he has performed on earth, and the remainder of which he is now executing in heavenly intercession for us,—let us be thereby encouraged in the exercise of faith, love, and holy obedience, and with steadfastness, diligence, and constant perseverance, to maintain a free and open confession of him, and professed subjection to him. 15. Nor is this our glorious High-priest less willing than able to sympathize with and relieve us under all our distresses; nor is he, even in heaven, insensible of or unaffected with our wants and weaknesses, miseries and dangers; but having, in his state of humiliation, experimentally known whatever we undergo in our temptations and troubles, though without sin, he is at once infinitely fitted to be our pattern in bearing them, and to sympathize tenderly with us in them, and to take away the iniquity which we unavoidably fall into by means of them. 16. Let us therefore, in view of his superlatively excellent and efficacious Priesthood, and his execution of it, in offering himself a sacrifice to honour God's justice, and make atonement for our sins, and his continual intercession for us at his right hand, boldly draw near to God by faith, in prayer and every other ordinance of gospel worship—since he is now seated, not on a throne of justice, to execute deserved justice upon us, but on a throne of free and condescending mercy and grace, to commune with and bless us—that, with familiar and holy freedom, and humble confidence in him, as our reconciled God and Father, we may ask of and receive from him the most merciful forgiveness of our sins, and compassionate relief under all our straits and miseries; and, finding favour in his sight, may obtain all gracious assistances and supplies, in every season of want, difficulty, trouble, temptation, or danger, especially the most perplexing.

Ver. 2. For unto us, &c. Rather, 'For we also have received good tidings as well as they—the of an earthly and typical rest; we of tribulation on earth, Jn. 16. 33, of peace and rest in heaven. C.

Ver. 3. For we who have believed do enter into rest, being read as a parenthesis, the union between ver. 2 and remainder of ver. 3 will be apparent. The Word preached did not profit the unbelievers, 'as he said, I have sworn, &c.—The dignity of Moses was eminently displayed as the leader of Israel to the rest of Canaan. In this respect Christ is compared with him, and his glory, as antitype, shown to be infinitely greater than the type. Moses was not entirely successful: the rest of Canaan besides, even for those who survived to enter it, was imperfect and temporary. Christ's Leadership, on the other hand, is entirely successful: and the rest into which he conducts his people is perfect and eternal. P.

Ver. 9. There is a sabbatism, a holy rest, yet to come, distinct from the sabbath-rest of creation, which even unbelievers may enjoy, and distinct from the Joshua rest, from which unbelievers were, by the oath of God, excluded. C.

Ver. 10. He that is entered into his rest, is rendered by Brown and other eminent expositors 'every believer;' and 'his own works' are (ver. 10) understood to signify his former works of wickedness, self-righteousness, conflicts and trials. 'But surely if 'every believer were already entered into the rest spoken of, there were no use in exhorting him to 'labour to enter' into it; see ver. 11. Nor can ceasing from 'works of wickedness' or 'self-righteousness' be justly drawn into comparison with God's ceasing from his works of creation! The rest spoken of is, therefore, that rest from labours and troubles into which they 'who die in the Lord' (Re. 14. 13) do immediately enter, 2 Co. 5. 8, and in which they shall be found 'when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with the angels of his power, 2 Th. 1. 7; Mat. 25. 32-46. C.

Ver. 12. The word of God. As Paul never calls Jesus 'the Word of God,' though that title is given to him by John (Jn. 1. 1; 1 Jn. 3. 7; Re. 19. 13), and as the phrase is justly applicable to the revealed Word, written or spoken, of the qualities of such revealed Word Paul appears here to speak. Nor is it reasonable, or agreeable to the manner of the Scripture, to interpret it, with Pyle and others, equally of Jesus, the Word incarnate, and of Scripture, the word written or uttered.—Soul, when contrasted with 'spirit,' signifies the living principle, with its appetites, desires, and feelings.—Spirit, when contrasted with 'soul,' signifies the thinking, immaterial part, which is separable from the body, and lives independently of destructible life, Ec. 12. 7; Lu. 24. 39. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Graciously has God maintained his gospel in the world all along since Adam's fall, though in different degrees of light. And when it is now set before us in its fulness and clearness, we ought carefully to beware of contemning and rejecting it. Alas! what multitudes hear it without ever being profited by it!—No hearing, without cordial believing, will avail to the salvation of our souls. And unless we immediately receive and digest what we hear, God may quickly swear in his wrath that we shall never enter into his rest.—Greatly preferable to that of Canaan, yea, infinitely excellent, is that spiritual, evangelical, and eternal rest into which true believers enter along with Christ!—Powerful and efficacious is God's written Word in the hand of Christ, the living and life-giving Word. With divine efficacy it penetrates into men's souls, for their conviction, reformation, and comfort; or for their condemnation and confusion. And infinitely awful, almighty, and heart-searching is he himself, to whom we must quickly give an account in the last judgment. But blessed be God, that while he is his Son, he is our great atoning and interceding High-priest and Almighty Saviour; and that, having had a sinless experience of our temptations and troubles, he is qualified with the tenderest compassion towards us, and is ascended into the highest heavens, now to appear in the presence of God for us. His character and work powerfully and delightfully encourage to steadfastness and openness in our Christian profession, and to familiar boldness in our dealings with God. Let then all my requests and hopes of pardon, help, comfort, and glory, depend on JEHOUAH'S grace and Jesus' merits.

CHAPTER V. Ver. 1. To encourage us to improve the grace and power of our glorious and ascended, but affectionate and sympathizing High-priest, in such holy reverence and confidence in approaching to God, let us consider that, even under the typical dispensation, every high-priest was sanctified and set apart to his office from among the children of Israel, as one who partook of the same nature with themselves, and was appointed to represent and transact for men with God—that in their name and stead, and for their benefit, he might present to him all their legal offerings and sacrifices, animate or inanimate. 2. And thus the multitude of infirmities, sinful or natural, with which he was compassed about, did require, and, as it were, qualify him to bear with and readily atone for the sins of others, which had been committed through ignorance or mistake: 3. On account of which infirmities he was required to offer up sacrifices for his own sins, as well as for the sins of the people.—4. And it was further necessary that no man should assume to himself the office of priesthood till he had a most plain and manifest call from God to it, as Aaron and his sons had. 5. 6. In like manner Jesus Christ—who in our nature made atonement for our sins by the sacrifice of himself, that our persons and prayers might be accepted of God, as presented by and through him, and who, in his state of humiliation, experienced every sinless infirmity and temptation, that he might manifest the greatest forbearance and compassion to ignorant and wandering sinners; and who, having no sin, had no occasion to offer up any sacrifice for himself, but only for his people—

CHAPTER V.

1 The authority and honour of our Saviour's priesthood. 11 Negligence in the knowledge thereof is reprov'd.

FOR every^a high-priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins:

2 Who^b can have compassion on¹ the ignorant, and on them that are out of the way; for that he himself also is compassed with infirmity.

3 And^c by reason hereof he ought, as for the people, so also for himself, to offer for sins.

4 And^d no man taketh this honour unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron.

5 So also ^eChrist glorified not himself to be made an high-priest; but he that said unto him, Thou art my Son, to-day have I begotten thee.

6 As he saith also in another place, ^fThou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec.

10 Called^p of God an High-priest after the order of Melchisedec.

11 Of^q whom we have many things to say, and hard to be uttered,^r seeing ye are dull of hearing.

12 For^s when for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which ^tbe the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong meat.

13 For every one that useth milk ^uis unskilful⁷ in the ^vword of righteousness; for he is ^wa babe.

14 But strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age,⁸ ^xeven those who by reason of use⁹ have^x their senses exercised to discern both good and evil.

CHAPTER VI.

1 He exhorteth not to fall back from the faith, 11 but to be steadfast, 12 diligent, and patient to wait upon God, 13 because God is most sure in his promise.

THEREFORE,¹ leaving^a the principles of the doctrine² of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the ^bfoundation of ^crepentance from ^ddead works, and of faith toward God, did not, in his incarnate state, by any private act of his own, assume to himself the honour of the gospel high-priesthood; but was from eternity called and appointed to it by his Father, by whom he was from eternity begotten, and by whom, in his resurrection from the dead, he was attested as his only necessary and essential Son; and who, in the most solemn manner, declared him an eternal Priest, without predecessor or successor, after the high order of Melchisedec, and not after the inferior order of Aaron; 7. Which glorious High-priest, while in our world, compassed about with the sinless infirmities of human nature, and overwhelmed with the most fearful pressures of divine work on our account—did, in the most fervent, humble, and pathetic manner, present his addresses and entreaties to God his almighty Father, who, if willing, could have delivered him from the terrors of death; and, on account of his holy reverence, had his prayers accepted; and, in answer to them, obtained proper assistance under, seasonable deliverance from, and the happy issue of, his sufferings in the glory of God, and the redemption of his church.—8. Though he was the eternal Son of God, the same in nature and perfections with the Father, and infinitely dear to him, yet, having condescended to the office of High-priesthood, and assumed our nature, that he might therein execute it, such was his zeal for the glory of God, and love to all men, that he submitted, in the exercise of faith, patience, self-denial, resignation, humility, and readiness of mind, practically to learn what and how good it is to obey his Father's commands, even unto the death of the cross; yea, to learn, by severe experience, what difficulties and distresses, and yet rich advantages, attend obedience; and how to sympathize with us in our sufferings. 9, 10. And having completed his whole obedience and suffering, and being thereupon fully consecrated to the high intercessory work of his Priesthood, he became the procuring and efficient cause of eternal salvation from everything sinful or miserable, and to everything holy and happy, to all such as diligently hearken and yield up themselves to him as the Captain of their salvation—whom God has represented and styled a Priest, not constituted after the order of Aaron, but after the superior order of Melchisedec: 11. Concerning whom, in his kingly, but especially in his priestly office, in which he typified our Redeemer, we gospel preachers have many important things to deliver, which, on account of your remaining sloth, ignorance, and rigid attachment to the ceremonial law, can scarcely be yet rendered plain to your minds. 12. For—when considering the great advantages for instruction which have been afforded you, and the time ye have enjoyed the gospel dispensation, ye ought to have been capable of instructing others in the knowledge of Christ—ye have made so little proficiency, that ye need to be taught over again the plain fundamental principles of the Christian faith, revealed in the infallible dictates of the Old and New Testaments; and some of you have so declined in knowledge, that no instructions can suit your capacity but the most easy and familiar articles of Christianity, being unable to understand the more mysterious points, how all the ancient types are accomplished in the person and offices of Christ. 13. For every one who has no appetite for or ability to understand anything but the first principles of the doctrines of Christ, is very inept at understanding, receiving, and improving the great truths of the gospel—in which the righteousness of God is revealed from faith to faith, and Christ is represented as the end of the law, moral and ceremonial, for righteousness to every one that believes, and in which we are taught to live in the practice of righteousness, as persons united to and justified in Christ. 14. But the more sublime doctrines are most fit for the nourishment of those believers who are far advanced in the knowledge of the truth, and who, by much consideration and experience, and by much reading, hearing, meditation, and prayer, have their spiritual senses qualified to discern and distinguish between what is good or bad, true or false, beneficial or pernicious, and know how to choose and embrace the one and refuse the other.

2 Of^e the doctrine of baptisms, and of lay-

Ver. 4. Honour—that is, 'office,' as the Greek word is often used.—Note. This text can never be tortured into the service of the papal succession; for the question is merely concerning the appointment of a Jewish high-priest, who was superseded by Christ; and Christ, no doubt, has many ambassadors, but can have no successor, because 'he is a priest for ever,' ver. 6; ch. 7. 17, 24. C.

Ver. 8. Had the 'obedience' of Christ in his human nature been without learning and suffering, he had neither been an example nor a sacrifice for men in a state of learning and suffering. C.

Ver. 9. Made perfect. As 'an example,' by passing through all the conditions of human nature, yet without sin; as a 'sacrifice,' both in the spirit and in the body; and as a 'Saviour,' by finishing his appointed course of humiliation, and arising from the dead in power. C.

REFLECTIONS.—No sin can be pardoned without an atonement Saviour. And wonderful are the glories of Jesus Christ our great High-priest and atoning sacrifice! How divinely high, holy, and pure; and yet certainly bone of our bone, and flesh of our flesh, and compassed about with all our sinless infirmities! Solemn was his call to his work, and high his order, yet deep his condescension and self-abasement.—Fervent and successful his prayers, great his sufferings, and perfect his obedience. And by all these he becomes the complete Author of eternal salvation to all them that obey them. No true happiness can be had without holiness as an ingredient of it. Alas! that after all the discoveries of him in the gospel, many should have such indistinct conceptions of him, and be so indolent in improving the means of grace offered them! And transcendent is his mercy in providing food for weak as well as for strong Christians in his Word. But how great must be their presumption, their danger, who intrude themselves into the ministerial office, when Christ entered not on his without his Father's call!

CHAPTER VI. Ver. 1, 2. But since it is unworthy of Christians to be always babes in knowledge, let us, for the present, forbear insisting on the fundamental principles of Christianity—such as an evangelical grief for and turning from sinful courses, which mark men spiritually dead and prepare them for eternal death; and of a cordial belief of God's being and perfections, and humble trust in him for the accomplishment of all his promises (which two points were figured out by the ancient ceremonial washings, and the laying on of hands on the heads of the sacrifices); and of the resurrection of both righteous and wicked at the last day, to receive their everlasting reward; and of the general judgment consequent thereupon, in which men's eternal happiness and misery shall be finally and irreversibly determined by Christ: and let us discourse of, and embrace with holy care and diligence, those great mysteries of the gospel relative to the person and offices, particularly the High-priesthood of our Redeemer. 3. And this, by the direction and assistance of God, I shall quickly proceed to, in order to prevent your apostasy from him. 4-6. For if professed Christians, who have been once remarkably enlightened in the knowledge of gospel truths by his Word and Spirit, in his common and miraculous operations, and have had a remarkable inward experience of the powerful ing on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment.

3 And^a this will we do, if God permit.

4 For ^{it} is impossible for those who were once^b enlightened,³ and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost,

5 And ^{have} tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come,

6 If they shall fall away, ^{to} renew them again unto repentance; seeing they ^{crucify} to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put ^{him} to an open shame.

7 For^c the earth which drinketh in the rain that cometh oft upon it, and bringeth forth herbs meet for them by^d whom it is dressed, receiveth blessing from God:

8 But^e that which beareth thorns and briers ^{is} rejected, and ^{is} nigh unto cursing; whose end ^{is} to be burned.

9 But, beloved, ^{we} are persuaded better things of you, and things that accompany salvation, though we thus speak.

10 For ^{God} ^{is} not unrighteous to forget your work and labour of love, which ye have showed toward his name, in that ye have ministered to the saints, and do minister.

11 And we desire that every one of you do virtue and sweetness of God's word, and of the powerful operations of the Holy Ghost, peculiar to the New Testament church, wilfully apostatize from the profession of the gospel to Judaism or heathenism, they absolutely reject the only remedy which God has appointed for their recovery, and provoke him to abandon them to a desperate voluntary blindness of mind and hardness of heart, leaving no room for an effectual renovation and recovery to any true and saving repentance—because they practically approve the wickedness of those who crucified the eternal Son of God, and persecute him in his members; yea, manifest that they would again crucify him as a noted impostor, if they had opportunity; and after distinguishing trials of the power, excellency, and sweetness of his truths, openly renounce them, and him in them, as if they had found him as infamous and deceiving as ever his enemies pretended. 7, 8. For, to compare professed Christians to fruitful and barren soils, those who, being inwardly renewed by God's grace, bring forth fruits of righteousness, which are, by Jesus Christ, acceptable to God, and for the praise of his glory, shall be further owned and blessed of him with his spiritual favours and influences, that they may still more abundantly increase in faith, love, and holy obedience, and become more and more meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light; but they who partake only of the forementioned illuminations, external means and advantages, without a habit of true grace in their soul, and produce nothing but unbelief, impenitence, hardness of heart, and the entangling, hurtful, and self-ruining fruits of wickedness proceeding therefrom, are on the very point of falling under the immediate execution of God's curse upon them, and of being in time and eternity left to their own doings. 9. But as to most of you, whom I look upon and love as sincere believers, beloved of God, I am confident that ye have experienced better things than the above-mentioned privileges, attainable by reprobates—even the special and saving blessings of repentance, faith, justification, and others, which flow from vital union with Christ, and really secure and issue in eternal salvation; though, for your warning and the awakening of false professors, I have suggested to you what terrible apostasy and ruin men may fall into after distinguished appearances of grace. 10. And my persuasion of your perseverance and eternal happiness is founded on the stability of the promise of grace; for God, who is equity and truth itself, never did, nor will, unfaithfully violate his promises of gracious rewards, to be conferred through the faith of men; nor will he be unmindful of those acts of holiness and righteousness by which ye have manifested your faith in, love to, and regard of his person, honour, and authority; and particularly of that compassion, tenderness, and liberal assistance which ye have and still do manifest to his despised and afflicted saints, in these days of poverty, peril, and reproach. 11. But knowing that the end and means are related in his gracious purposes and promises, I earnestly beg of him, and beseech you to labour in his strength, that every one of you may constantly persevere, and more and more abound in such diligent care and endeavours to bring forth the genuine fruits of faith and love, till, by the blessing of God thereon, ye have a full and fixed assurance of your blessed interest in Christ and the promises of eternal life; 12. That to obtain it, and under the influence of it, ye may be excited to the utmost diligence in using the means of grace, and fulfilling the duties of your station, in imitation of and following after those believers in former ages who, notwithstanding manifold tribulations, have, through a fixed faith in God's promises, and patient waiting for the accomplishment thereof, got beyond all their sins and troubles, and entered into the possession of the heavenly inheritance. 13, 14. And to encourage your hope and perseverance in faith and patience, consider how God has condescended to give us the utmost assurance of his punctual and faithful accomplishment of his promises: for, to instance in one leading promise, upon which all the rest depend, when God promised to Abraham a seed from which the Messiah should descend, in whom all the nations of the earth were to be blessed, he confirmed it by an oath, as the strongest security for the fulfilment of it; and because he could not, like us in our oaths, appeal to a greater, he appealed to his own being and perfections, and, as it were, solemnly pledged them for the truth and performance of his promises—in which he engaged himself abundantly and certainly to bless Abraham with all the blessings of time and eternity, and to give him innumerable multitudes of descendants, temporal and spiritual. 15. And accordingly, after he had long waited with patience and hope, under manifold trials of his faith, God fulfilled his promise in blessing him with greater worldly prosperity, and in multiplying his

12 That^a ye be not slothful, but ^{followers} of them who through faith and patience inherit the promises.

13 For^a when God made promise to Abraham, because he could swear by no greater, he swore by himself, 14 Saying, Surely blessing I will bless thee, and multiplying I will multiply thee.

15 And so, ^{after} he had patiently endured, he obtained the promise.

16 For men verily ^{swear} by the greater: and an oath for confirmation ^{is} to them an end of all strife.

17 Wherein God, willing more abundantly to show unto the ^{heirs} of promise ^{the} immutability of his counsel, confirmed ^{it} by an ^{oath};

18 That by two immutable things,⁶ in^c which ^{it} was impossible for God to lie, we might have ^a strong consolation, ^{who} have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us:

19 Which^a ^{hope} we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that ^{within} the veil;⁷

20 Whither ^{the} forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus, ^{made} an High-priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec.

children during his life, as an earnest of his divine and spiritual seed, and in admitting him at death, through faith in the Messiah, who was to spring from his loins, into the full possession of eternal life. 16. And herein God gave him the fullest assurance possible of his veracity, according to the most valid and approved method which men use for the satisfaction of their fellow-creatures as to the truth of what they affirm or promise; for, on important occasions, it is their custom to ascertain and fix their declarations and promises with an oath, in which they call the infinitely great God to attest their sincerity, and to punish them if they falsify their affirmation or engagement; and such an appeal is reckoned the most strong and decisive evidence that can be given of the truth of what they say, to the satisfying of all doubts, determining of all debates, and silencing of all contradictory testimonies. 17. In this strongest form of assurance, to put an end to all the doubts, fears, and disputes of his people, who are the heirs of the promised blessings, with respect to his promises of grace and salvation, and to give superabundant evidence that his free and eternal mind of love manifested in his promises, are unchangeably the same, and shall never be repealed, defeated, or falsified, if only his people are faithful to Christ; 18. That, by the unchangeable word and oath of the unalterably true and faithful God, we might have the firmest ground possible for the most abundant, prevailing, and solid comfort, to overcome all doubts and fears, and support us under all our afflictions and temptations, who have willingly, under a sense of guilt and danger, fled, with the utmost eagerness and speed, concern and vigour, for deliverance and safety to Christ, the promised seed, and to lay hold on him, and on all the blessings of salvation in him, as proposed to our faith and hope in the declarations and promises of the gospel: 19. Which object of hope, as laid hold on and trusted in by faith, secures our souls from destruction, and holds them fast and steady amidst all the dangers and troubles of this present life, since he hath passed into the highest heaven, and our hope in him penetrates through the visible heavens, and fastens upon him, and his Father through him, as exhibited in his promises; 20. Into which heavenly, blessed, and glorious state, Jesus, our exalted Head and Saviour, is entered, not alone, as the Aaronic high-priest, into the holy of holies, but as our Forerunner, to open for us an abundant entrance, notify our coming,

CHAPTER VII.

1 Christ Jesus is a priest after the order of Melchisedec, 11 and so far more excellent than the priests of Aaron's order.

FOR this Melchisedec, king of Salem, priest of the most high God, who met Abraham returning from the slaughter of the kings, and blessed him;

2 To whom also Abraham gave a tenth part of all; first being by interpretation King of righteousness, and after that also King of Salem,¹ which is, King of peace; and prepare mansions for us; and as our everlasting High-priest, after the order of Melchisedec, to make continual intercession for us, upon the footing of his righteousness, fulfilled in our stead.

Ver. 5. Have tasted the good word. Felt and acknowledged their need of a Saviour, and of pardon through his blood.—The powers of the world to come. The terrors of the Lord in judgment, and the hopes of rest and glory. C.

Ver. 6. If they fall away. Rather, 'and having fallen away,' that is, having apostatized from the profession, and renounced the principles of Christianity.—To themselves. Rather, 'within themselves,' in their hearts, in which they have 'crucified the Lord' in purpose, as the Jews and Romans did in reality. C.

REFLECTIONS.—With great care we ought to learn the fundamental principles of the Christian religion. But not content with this, we should make daily progress in knowledge, for our spiritual edification, and establishment in faith, comfort, and holiness. Men may go great lengths even in a kind of experimental religion, and nevertheless remain destitute of the grace of God. But inexpressibly dangerous is apostasy from the truths of Christ after such high attainments. And hardened and loose professors terribly expose themselves to redoubled ruin in hell, if not also fearful miseries in this life. With great care and prudence should ministers faithfully awaken the secure, so as not to distress the weakest believer. Love to God, appearing in kindness to his poor saints, and in a holy conversation, is a certain mark of true grace in the heart; and diligence in religion is the way to thrive in it. And if we have any good hope of eternal salvation, we ought to labour after a full assurance in it. Faith and patience, exercised in our heart, will produce perseverance in our life. And the example of former saints should quicken us to it, while the promise and oath of God, and the exaltation of our Redeemer, give us the fullest and surest ground of encouragement in it. Rich, numerous, and suitable are the blessings which God has prepared for them that fear him; and marvellous is his condescension in giving such abundant security for the accomplishment of his kind purposes, and gracious promises of eternal life. Happy are they who, deeply convinced of guilt, and pursued by storms, have fled to Jesus Christ for refuge, and who, amidst all their troubles, have anchored their souls by faith and hope on him, as exalted to his Father's right hand to prepare a place for them. Storms of every kind can but drive them home to their High-priest and Saviour.

CHAPTER VII. Ver. 1. For this famous Melchisedec, of whom our Lord Jesus, in his kingly and priestly office, is the great antitype, was a renowned king of the ancient accursed Canaanites at Salem, and divinely called to officiate as a priest among them; and, meeting with Abraham in his return from the slaughter of Chedorlaomer's army, he not only refreshed his fatigued warriors with bread and wine, but, in the execution of his priestly office, authoritatively pronounced a blessing on him, and all those Jews or Gentiles who were represented by him as his seed; 2. To him Abraham, in acknowledgment of his superior character of priesthood, paid the tithes, or tenth part of all the spoil which he had taken in the war; and his name, and that of his abode, represents him as first a king of righteousness, and then king of peace; 3. Yea, his whole genealogy of ancestors or successors, and his birth, death, and the beginning and ending of his priesthood, are entirely concealed by the Holy Ghost in Scripture, that by this means he might be a more eminent type of the eternal Son of God, who is at once our most glorious, generous, and compassionate King and great

1 It has been the opinion of the Jewish commentators from the earliest ages that Salem was the ancient name of Jerusalem, their chief reason being that the name is given to the city in Ps. lxxvi. In this passage the High-priest, in and by whom all his faithful servants and people are blessed with all spiritual blessings, and to whom even the greatest acknowledge their dependence, and to whose superiority they submit; and who, being our righteousness and peace, rules in righteousness, and procures and bestows on all his subjects peace with God, with their consciences, and with one another; and who, being without mother as God, without father as man, has no predecessor or successor in his office, but, as immediately appointed by God, abides a Priest for ever, to make continual intercession for us. 4. Now that ye may have the more clear and exalted views of the excellency and dignity of Christ's priesthood, think seriously how great a man Melchisedec, who but typified him, must have been, when Abraham, the progenitor and covenant-head of the whole Hebrew nation, acknowledged him his sacred superior, by giving him the tithes of his spoil. 5-7. Ye cannot but observe also that the Jewish priests descended from Levi receive tithes only from their brethren and equals, and that by virtue of a law from God, assigning them that portion which belonged to God himself; but here one of a very different stock received tithes from Abraham, their most honoured progenitor, and authoritatively blessed him in the name of God; and common sense dictates that he who authoritatively blesses another must be superior to him in dignity. 8. Besides, the Levitical receivers of tithes are represented to us as mortal men, dying one after another; but this Melchisedec, by the veil cast over his history, is never represented as one dead, but only as living. 9, 10. And, moreover, all those Levites who by the Mosaic law receive tithes from their Hebrew brethren, really, though indirectly, paid tithes to Melchisedec, being all in the loins of Abraham, as their ancestor, covenant-head, and representative, when Melchisedec met him; and so must be greatly inferior to Melchisedec, who, after all, was no more than a type of our infinitely more excellent and dignified Jesus Christ, the great King and High-priest of his church.—11. Now, it is plain that if perfection of atonement for sin or acceptance with God, or in the form and fellowship of the visible church, and especially in holiness and happiness, could have been really and effectually obtained by the Levitical priesthood, in connection with which the Jews received and in part observed the law of Moses, there could have been no need to introduce a high-priesthood after another and higher order. 12. It therefore necessarily follows that the Levitical priesthood, and the ceremonial law connected with it, must be changed and abolished to make way for a better priesthood, and an evangelical dispensation, in the person of Christ; for if the priesthood established by and connected with the ceremonial law of Moses be altered, that law, the administration of which was chiefly confined to the Aaronic priesthood, must also be abolished, to make way for this evangelical constitution, which derives its efficacy from that more excellent and exalted order of priesthood. 13, 14. And as one evidence hereof, it is manifest that Jesus Christ, who was prefigured by Melchisedec, did not spring of the tribe of Levi, to which the legal priesthood was restricted, but of the tribe of Judah, none of which had any warrant from God to officiate as priests, in offering sacrifices, burning incense, or the like. 15-17. And another evidence that the Levitical priesthood, and the ceremonial law which depended on it, must be abolished, is, that there is now, according to ancient predictions, divinely raised up a High-priest after the different and more excellent order of Melchisedec—even a High-priest who is not appointed to his office according to the ceremonial law of carnal ordinances given by Moses, by which the frail and decaying descendants of Levi were appointed to theirs,

3 Without father, without mother, without descent,² having neither beginning of days, nor end of life; but made like unto the Son of God, abideth a priest continually.

4 Now consider how great this man was, unto whom even the patriarch Abraham gave the tenth of the spoils.

5 And verily they that are of the sons of Levi, who receive the office of the priesthood, have a commandment to take tithes of the people according to the law, that is, of their but by a far more excellent and abiding constitution, suited to that unchangeable life which he has in himself as the eternal Son of God, and to that eternal life of glory and honour to which he is now advanced as God-man Mediator; for, as hath been repeatedly hinted, God, by solemn oath, declared him, in his one person, a Priest for ever, after the order of Melchisedec. 18. And in this new and everlasting priesthood of Christ there is really, supposed or implied, an abrogation of the whole ceremonial law of Moses, as insufficient and unavailable to purge men's consciences from guilt, or to justify them to eternal life: 19. For that law was of itself quite incapable of perfecting its worshippers in anything belonging to their conscience and reconciliation with God, and was merely intended to prefigure Jesus Christ and his priestly character and work, and the gospel state of the church founded thereon—by the introduction of which is presented to us a better ground of confidence towards God, and a better, nearer, and more advantageous access to him, than ever the Jews, or even their priests, had by the law. 20, 21. And to assure us hereof, Christ was not chosen and installed in his priestly office in the less solemn manner of the Aaronic priests; but to mark the excellency, unchangeableness, and perpetuity of his priesthood, his Father constituted him a Priest for ever in his own person, with the irrevocable solemnity of an oath. 22. Yea, in proportion to the superior excellence of his priesthood to the Levitical, in its nature and form of installment, Jesus, our once crucified but now exalted Saviour, was divinely constituted the undertaker, promiser, and sponsor for us in the infinitely more excellent kingdom of grace, particularly with respect to its last dispensation under the gospel, when, by his death, it was put in force, and clearly dispensed to men in the form of a testament, in which all his secured blessings are freely given to all who believe. 23, 24. And further to manifest the weakness and unprofitableness of the legal or ceremonial dispensation, the priests, being all mortal, succeeded one another in their different generations, and could never after death resume their office; but Jesus Christ, being God-man, who could never die out of his office, but perpetually and everlastingly abides in the execution of it, without any interruption by his death, has, in his own single person, an unchangeable and everlasting priesthood, which cannot pass away from him to another. 25. From what has been said concerning Christ as our great High-priest, it necessarily follows that he has not only all divine ability originally in himself, but also all official power and authority, as well as willingness to give complete deliverance from all sin and misery, fears and dangers, and to advance to all the glory and blessedness of the heavenly state—to the utmost of their wants, desires, hopes, and capacities, and to the utmost boundaries of infinite duration—all those that, in prayer, or other parts of gospel worship, come unto God through him as their only Mediator,—seeing he ever liveth as God in their nature, and as their great High-priest and Advocate, to make continual intercession for them; pleading that, through the merits of his obedience and suffering, all the spiritual, temporal, and eternal blessings of the new kingdom may be given them in due time: 26. For such an excellent, almighty, and ever-living High-priest was necessary and alone fit for us, who is, in every respect and degree, pure from sinful pollution in heart and life, and who, in holiness, as well as in dignity, authority, and exaltation, far transcends all the holy angels and glorified saints in the heavenly state; 27. Who needed not, in the manner of the Aaronic priests, first to offer up sacrifice for his own sins, and then for the sins of his people, nor needed to repeat his sacrifice for their sins—his once offering of himself, as an atoning sacrifice, being brethren, though they come out of the loins of Abraham:

6 But he, whose descent³ is not counted from them, ⁴received tithes of Abraham, and blessed⁵ him that had the promises.

7 And without all contradiction ⁶the less is blessed of the better.

8 And here men that die receive tithes; but there he receiveth them,⁷ of whom it is witnessed that he liveth.

9 And, as I may so say, Levi also, who receiveth tithes, ⁸paid tithes in Abraham.

10 For he was yet in the loins of his father when Melchisedec met him.

11 If⁹ therefore perfection were by the Levitical priesthood, (for under it the people received the law,) what further need was there that another priest should rise ¹⁰after the order of Melchisedec, and not be called after the order of Aaron?

12 For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law.¹¹

13 For he of whom these things are spoken pertaineth to another tribe, of which no man gave attendance at the altar.

14 For it is evident that our Lord sprang out¹² of Juda; of which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning priesthood.

15 And it is yet far more evident: ¹³for that after the similitude of Melchisedec there ariseth another priest, 16 Who is made, not after ¹⁴the law of a carnal commandment, but ¹⁵after the power of an endless life.

17 For he testifieth, ¹⁶"Thou art a priest for ever, after the order of Melchisedec.

18 For¹⁷ there is verily a disannulling of the commandment going before, for the weakness and unprofitableness thereof.

19 For¹⁸ the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in¹⁹ of ²⁰a better hope did; by the which we ²¹draw nigh unto God.²²

20 And inasmuch as not without an oath he was made Priest:

21 (For those priests were made without an oath;⁷ but this with an oath by him that said unto him, ⁸"The Lord sware and will not repent, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec:)

22 By so much was Jesus made ⁹a surety of ¹⁰a better testament.

23 And ¹¹they truly were many priests, because they were not suffered to continue by reason of death:

24 But this man, ¹²because he continueth ever, hath an unchangeable priesthood.¹³

25 Wherefore ¹⁴he is able also to save them to the uttermost¹⁵ that come unto God by him, ¹⁶seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them.

26 For¹⁷ such an High-priest became us, who is holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, ¹⁸and made ¹⁹higher than the heavens;²⁰

27 Who needeth not daily, as ²¹those high-priests, to offer up sacrifice, first for his own sins, and then for the people's: for this he did once,²² when he offered up himself.

28 For the law maketh men high-priests ²³which have infirmity; but the word of the oath, which was since the law,²⁴ maketh ²⁵the Son, who is consecrated²⁶ for evermore.

CHAPTER VIII.

1 By the eternal priesthood of Christ the Levitical priesthood of Aaron is abolished. 7 And the temporal covenant with the fathers, by the eternal covenant of the gospel.

NOW of the things which we have spoken ²this is the sum: ³"We have such an High-priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens;

2 ⁴A minister of the sanctuary,⁵ and of ⁶the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man.

3 For⁷ every high-priest is ordained to offer gifts and sacrifices: wherefore it is of necessity that this man have somewhat also to offer.

4 For ⁸if he were on earth, he should not be a priest, seeing that there are priests that offer gifts according to the law:

5 Who serve ⁹unto the example and shadow of such infinite worth as to finish transgression, and make an end of sin, obtain eternal redemption, and perfect for ever them that believe. 28. For the ceremonial law appointed men priests who were sinful, weak, and mortal; but the oath of God, which was afterwards intimated, invested the eternal Son of God, who is absolutely unblemished and perfect, with a priesthood which is of perpetual duration and efficacy for the salvation of men.

Ver. 3. Without father, &c., is generally understood to signify 'without a father' who was a priest.—Without a mother who was daughter of a priest.—Without descent, without scriptural genealogy, ver. 6.—Beginning of days, any fixed period for commencing.—Nor end of life, any fixed period for demitting the priestly office, such as the descendants of Levi enjoyed. But, truly, since 'he abideth a priest continually,' and 'liveth for ever,' it seems difficult to arrive at any other conclusion than that he was a manifestation rather than a mere type of Christ, and such as Abraham subsequently enjoyed. See Ge. 15. 1-18; 17. 1-22. C.

Ver. 11. Perfection is predicated, through the remaining parts of this epistle, chiefly of the following subjects: (1) Of the priesthood of Christ, which is pronounced perfect, because he was sinless, ver. 26, 27; because his office was unchangeable, ch. 10. 10-12; because in him sacrificial offering terminated, ch. 10. 10-12; because remission of the sins of believers was, by his sacrifice, completed, ch. 10. 16; because, by his ascent, access to God was opened, ver. 19; ch. 10. 19-22; and by his intercession the salvation of believers is made sure, ch. 7.35. (2) Of the perfect promise exhibited and confirmed in Christ, ch. 8. 6-13; 9. 9-14. (3) Of the perfect inheritance secured to the children of God, ch. 9. 15. (4) Of the perfect condition of his church, whether as triumphant or militant, ch. 12. 40. (5) Of the perfect work of the Spirit to be wrought in believers on earth; and, (6) Of the perfect state of the saints in the glory of heaven, ch. 12. 22-24. C.

Ver. 27. Daily. Inasmuch as the high-priest did not offer 'daily,' but annually, on the day of expiation, it has been proposed to render the phrase, 'from time to time.' This, however, is a straining of the original, and is by no means necessary, inasmuch as the high-priest might justly be said to offer daily what he offered, not by himself, but by any of the other priests. See 1 Ki. 8. 62-64; 9. 25. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Superlative is the excellency and royal dignity of our great High-priest Jesus Christ. In his supernatural and divine call; his transcendent ability to fulfil all righteousness and bless his people; in the dignity and moral qualifications of his person; in the solemn manner of his instalment; and in the spiritual nature, marvellous efficacy, unchangeable and uncommunicable nature and perpetual duration of his priesthood, he far transcends all Levitical priests of the Old Testament. Consider, O my soul, how great this God-man is! Never, by attempts towards self-righteousness, strive to put him from or deprive him of the honour of his priesthood. And while he lives as a Saviour, a righteous Advocate, with the Father, let nothing, not even sin itself, while felt and lamented over, hinder my boldest approaches to his throne of grace.

CHAPTER VIII. Ver. 1. Now all that I have said, in comparing Christ to Melchisedec and the Aaronic priests, may be summed up in this—that in him we have a transcendently more glorious High-priest, who, after offering himself as a sacrifice of infinite value and efficacy, is, in virtue thereof, advanced to the most glorious state of rest, dignity, power, and authority in heaven; 2. That there, in the heavenly sanctuary, and in the tabernacle of his own manhood, both of which were framed, not by human influence, but by the immediate operation of God himself, he may for ever carry on the intercessory work of his priesthood for the gracious promoting and securing of our eternal salvation. 3. For the special business of every high-priest, for which he is appointed and autho-the priests went ^{always} into the first tabernacle, accomplishing the service of God.

7 But into the second ^{went} the high-priest alone ^{once every year}, not without blood, which he offered for himself, and for the errors of the people:

8 The Holy Ghost thus signifying, "that the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest, while as the first tabernacle was yet standing:

9 Which ^{was} a figure for the time then present, in which were offered both gifts and sacrifices, that could not make him that did the service perfect, as pertaining to the conscience; which represented him as the abundant, suitable, and never-failing provision of his people, and them as in him presented before God in their respective generations. 3, 4. Passing through this eastern apartment, called the sanctuary, you entered into the western, called the ORACLE, or HOLY OF HOLIES, where was the golden censer, in which the high-priest carried the burning coals from the altar of burnt-offering, to burn the incense before the ark on the day of expiation, as a representation of Jesus' intercession, founded on and deriving its virtue from his atoning sacrifice; and the ark, which contained the law of the covenant made with Israel, and represented Christ as the reconciler and rest of JEHOVAH, and end of the law for righteousness to believers; and the golden pot of manna, which represented him as the true and ever-living bread which came down from heaven; and the budding rod, with which Aaron and Moses had wrought many miracles, and which represented Jesus Christ as growing out of dry ground, but manifested to be our ever-glorious and flourishing High-priest; and, in fine, the two tables on which God at Sinai wrote the ten commandments of the moral law, lodged in the midst of the ark, intimating their fulfilment in Christ, as a covenant, for the justification of his people, and their continuing an unchangeable and perpetual rule of holy obedience in his hand. 5. And above the ark were two glorious cherubims of gold, which represented holy angels and gospel ministers as looking into, admiring, and ready to promote our redemption to God through the righteousness of his Son. —But these things not being so directly to my purpose, I shall not insist upon them. —6. Now this sacred tent or temple, being thoroughly prepared, according to the divine model given to Moses or David, the ordinary priests, in their turns, entered into it every day, to offer sacrifice, burn incense, and dress the lamps. 7. But the high-priest alone, and only upon the day of the great annual expiation, entered into the holy of holies, and that not without blood of expiatory sacrifices, one for himself, and another for the Israelites' sins of infirmity and ignorance: 8. By this restricted access to the holy of holies, the Spirit of God plainly signifying that the access of believers to the throne of grace, or heavenly state, was not, as now, clearly revealed, while the ceremonial tabernacle, temple, and services thereof, continued to be established and observed by divine institution. 9. For these structures, and all the services pertaining to them, were, by the appointment of God, no more than temporary, imperfect, and figurative representations of those good things which have been manifested and fulfilled under the gospel. None of their oblations, bloody or unbloody, having the smallest influence to remove the moral guilt of sin from their conscience, but only to remove the ceremonial defilement and prevent temporal punishment: 10. Consisting in meat-offerings and drink-offerings, manifold washings and sprinklings, and numberless other ceremonies, which only removed external ceremonial pollutions, and consecrated to external service; and which, because of their insufficiency to purify the conscience, and perfect the state of the church, were appointed to continue no longer than till the Messiah, being come, should establish in the church a complete state of spirituality and holiness, light and grace. 11. But he, having at last actually appeared in our nature as a High-priest, hath accomplished what had been long prefigured by ceremonial ordinances, and secured and procured for his people the expected blessings of grace and glory, by officiating in his transcendently excellent manhood, and in the heavenly state, both of which were formed by the immediate operation of God himself. 12. Nor did the sacrifice, by virtue of which he entered into the heavenly state, in dignity and excellency less transcend the Levitical sacrifices; for it was not, as in the case of the Jewish sacrifices, by the blood of mean, though useful, animals, but by his own precious blood, that he, through the vail of his own flesh, entered into the heavenly oracle—to present himself God-man, with the merit of his perfect and ever-available sacrifice for us, before the immediate presence of God: having thereby purchased and secured for us, not a figurative pardon or annual relieve, but a complete and everlasting forgiveness, and deliverance from sin, Satan, and the broken law, the incensed wrath of God, a present evil world, and death; and a full and unchangeable right and title to an eternal inheritance of all blessedness and glory. 13. For if the blood of bulls and goats, and other mean and insignificant animals, or the ashes of a heifer mingled with running water, were, by God's appointment, effectual to purify men from the external ceremonial impurities of their bodies, and give them a re-admission to public worship in the tabernacle or temple, and into the congregation of the Lord, from which they had been excluded on account of their defilement. 14. How much more effectually and gloriously shall Jesus' finished righteousness, his unblemished and infinitely valuable sacrifice of himself—which he, through the infinite dignity and supporting influence of his divine nature sanctifying his gift, and through the unmeasurable unction and inconceivable influence of the Holy Ghost, did, with the utmost readiness and submission to his Father's will, with entire trust and confidence in him, with fervent zeal for his glory, and with the most amazing love and compassion to his people, fulfil and offer up to God, as an offended Judge—purge your consciences from all the guilt and defilement of your unprofitable, abominable, and destructive works of wickedness, and free you from all dreadful apprehensions of condemnation and wrath on their account; and animate and enable you, with confidence and cheerfulness here, and in perfection hereafter, to believe in, worship, and obey the only living and true God. 15. And for bringing about this great end, he undertook and executes the office of Mediator of the new and better covenant, and particularly of the New Testament dispensation of it—that by means, not of legal sacrifices, but of his own death, as an atonement for the sins of those under the Old as well as New Testament, who, in whatever period, have been or are tenderly called into a state of union to and fellowship with him, they might, in a free and honourable manner, be made partakers of the blessings of grace here and glory hereafter. 16, 17. And the new covenant, as dispensed to us, being of a testamentary nature, in which Jesus Christ, who secured all possible blessings, and as Trustee of the covenant, has them all lodged in his hand, actually bequeathes them to sinful men: his death was also necessary to render this testamentary disposition firm and irrevocable, and of full force to all them who by faith claim their title under him. 18–20. And it was chiefly in order to prefigure this that the Sinai covenant, and establishment of the legal dispensation, was ratified and confirmed by the blood of typical sacrifices; and that Moses, the typical mediator, having recited to the Israelites the principal laws of the covenant respecting them as a church and nation, did, in a solemn manner, sprinkle the book in which those laws were written,

10 Which stood ^{only} in meats and drinks, and divers washings, and carnal ordinances, imposed on them until ^{the} time of reformation.

11 But Christ ^{being} come an High-priest of good things to come, by ^a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building;

12 Neither ^{by} the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood, he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us.

13 For ^{if} the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh;

of the reason and truth, that Christ obredemption. It has been brought out briefly, but very clearly, by a recent German writer as follows:—

The blood of Christ purifies inwardly fit-of God (ver. 13, 14). His death is the inauguration of a new cove-

and all the representatives of the people, with the blood of the sacrifices offered on that occasion—solemnly intimating that that sprinkling of blood was a divinely instituted confirmation of the covenant between God and them, whereby his faithfulness for fulfilling his promises, and their obedience in performing the duties of it, were mutually engaged.—21. Moreover, when the tabernacle was first erected, and afterwards once every year on the great day of expiation, it, and all the vessels of service therein, were ceremonially purged from defilement, and consecrated to their sacred use, by a sprinkling of sacrificed blood. 22. Nay, so important was the blood of sacrifices under that dispensation, that almost all purification from ceremonial defilement was effected by the offering and sprinkling of it; and without the bloodshedding of typical sacrifices, no typical forgiveness of sin, or removal of temporal judgments, could be obtained. 23. Now, if it was necessary that the book and the people, the tabernacle and its furniture, which were but figurative representations of spiritual and heavenly things, should be purified and consecrated to their sacred use by typical sacrifices and sprinklings, it was certainly proper that Jesus Christ and his people, and all the spiritual and heavenly things, places, and furniture, should be consecrated by the infinitely more excellent sacrifice and blood of God's only begotten Son: 24. For Jesus Christ, the anointed High-priest of his church, has not, like the Jewish high-priest, entered into holy places formed by the art and labour of men, which were but mere figures of the heavenly sanctuary; but has, in his human nature, ascended into heaven itself, that there, in the immediate presence of God, he might continually present himself as our Representative, and the merits of his blood as securing our eternal salvation. 25, 26. Nor was it necessary that Christ, like the Jewish high-priests, should repeat his atoning sacrifice, that he might again and again enter into the heavenly sanctuary; for had that been the case, it had been necessary very often since the fall of man to have suffered unto death, that he might make atonement for one generation after another: but such is the infinite dignity, perfection, and virtue of his sacrifice, and such its extensive influence to former, present, and future generations, that his single manifestation of himself, in the end of the ceremonial dispensation and beginning of the gospel period, to offer his soul and body as personally united to his divine nature, was absolutely sufficient and able to pardon the guilt and abolish the power and fruits of all the sins of the world. 27. And as, by the righteous appointment of God, all sinful men must, in the ordinary course of nature, once die, and after that appear before the judgment-seat of Christ, that a final and decisive sentence, relative to their eternal happiness or misery, may pass upon them, according to their qualities, thoughts, words, and actions: 28. So Christ, to fulfil the law of God as a broken covenant, and to abolish the curse and secure eternal happiness, was once, and but once, offered in sacrifice, to bear the awful iniquities and suffer because of the sins of the unnumbered millions of sinful people; and unto them who, by faith, hope, desire, and love, expect and patiently wait for his coming again to judge the world, he will at the last day appear, not, as formerly, charged with sin or bearing the punishment of it, but in the most transcendent glory and majesty, to give them the complete enjoyment of that heavenly and eternal happiness which he secured for them by his death.

22 And^v almost all things are by the law

REFLECTIONS.—The great things concerning Jesus Christ and salvation through him were gradually, but for a long time obscurely, and by dark shadows, revealed to the church. But infinitely glorious and useful must he be, our great High-priest—to prefigure whom, in his person and service, so many ancient types were necessary. Unbounded is the value and efficacy of his atoning sacrifice, and extensive its virtue through time and through eternity. Full of blessings to sinful men, and infinitely full, firm, and glorious are the promises of the new covenant ratified by his death. And necessary for his honour and for our salvation is his CHAPTER X. Ver. 1. From the hints which I have suggested, it is plain that the Mosaic law, with its ceremonial institutions, being, as it were, mere representations of the shadows of Christ's person, office, work, sufferings, and blessings, the most noted sacrifices thereof, offered every year on the great day of general atonement, could never free the worshippers from the guilt of sin, or bring them into a state of friendship, acceptance, and perfect conformity to God. 2. For if these important ends had been perfectly obtained by those yearly sacrifices of national atonement, they would never have been repeated; as the worshippers concerned in them, being once completely cleansed from their guilt, and accepted of God to eternal life, could never more have had any perplexing or condemning fears on account of sin in their own conscience. 3. But so far was this from being the case, that in the very offering of those sacrifices there was every year, on the day of general expiation, a repeated, solemn, and public confession of the Israelites' iniquities, even of those which preceded the former annual expiation, as well as of those which were committed after it, in order that they might afflict their souls for them. 4. For indeed such is the infinite disproportion between the demerit of sin, or the satisfaction demanded for it by the law and justice of God, and the worthless sacrifices of bulls and goats, that no rules of wisdom or justice could admit them as sufficient to make a true, proper, and effectual atonement for sin. 5-9. And it is plain that the insufficiency of legal sacrifices to atone for sin, or render men acceptable to God, is represented in Ps. xl. as the occasion of God's preparing a perfect human nature for his own Son to obey and suffer in; and of Christ's cheerful and solemn engagement to fulfil the law, and satisfy justice, in the room and stead of his people, according to his will and purpose in the covenant of grace: 10. By which will of God, as perfectly fulfilled in Jesus' sinless offering, not of bulls and goats, but of himself, we are really and effectually purged and delivered from the guilt, power, and defilement of our sins, and are dedicated to the service of God. 11-14. Every Aaromic priest, in token of humble reverence, and of readiness for further service, stands before God, frequently offering the same kind of sacrifices, daily, weekly, monthly, or annually, which can never make atonement for nor remove the guilt or pollution of sin; but so incomparably superior is the dignity of our gospel High-priest in his person and sacrifice, that, after finishing his one atonement for all the sins of the world, he rose from the dead to immortal honour, and with majesty, glory, and acceptance entered on a state of the highest dignity, rest, and authority—thenceforward never repeating his sacrifice; but joyfully expecting the fulfilment of his Father's promise, and exercising all power in heaven and earth, till sin, Satan, the world, and death be actually, universally, and completely subdued, trampled on, and triumphed over, by him.—For by that one offering of himself upon the cross he has obtained a perfect, unchangeable, and eternal deliverance from guilt, and a fitness for the enjoyment and service of God in the nearest relation and access to him, and in the most perfect state of the church, for all those who are dedicated to God, and purged from their sins, through faith in him 15-17. And this the Holy Ghost in Scripture plainly testifies, in his representation of the new covenant which Christ hath fulfilled and established, and all the blessings of which he hath completely secured—in which, after a gracious promise effectually to inscribe the doctrines of his revelation in his people's hearts and minds, he adds an absolute, infinitely free, and authoritative promise of such perfect pardon of all their swerings from and transgressions of his law, as that they never more shall be held guilty of or upbraided for them. 18. Now, where there is such complete and everlasting forgiveness of all trespasses established in the new covenant, and attested by the Holy Ghost, it is manifestly impossible that there can be any need of any further atoning sacrifice for sins, or of Christ's repeating the sacrifice of himself. 19. Since therefore, my dear brethren by nation, and in the Lord, we who cordially believe in him have such solid grounds of free liberty,

2 For then would they not have^a ceased to be offered? because that the worshippers^b once purged should have had no more conscience of sins.

3 But^c in those sacrifices there is a remembrance again made of sins every year.

4 For^d it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins.

5 Wherefore, when he cometh into the world, he saith, 'Sacrifice and offering thou wouldest not, but a body^e hast thou prepared me.'

6 In burnt-offerings and sacrifices for sin thou hast had no pleasure.

7 Then said I, 'Lo, I come' (in the volume of the book it is written of me) to do thy will, O God.

8 Above, when he said, Sacrifice and offer-

* The Hebrew words in Ps. 40. 6 differ from the apostle's quotation, which is taken from the LXX; but the apostle gives the exact meaning of the passage. To 'bore the ear' was to make a voluntary bond-servant for ever. But in Greek, a bond-servant was called δούλος, 'a body,' because he was as suband rich encouragements for holy freedom and confidence, in our approaches to God as our reconciled Father, and of entering by faith, or even by actual admission, into heaven itself, through the inestimably precious blood of Jesus Christ, our ascended High-priest, Forerunner, and Advocate; 20. Even by the newly opened, perpetually excellent, living, and life-giving way of the covenant of grace, which he has prepared, dedicated, and established for us, through his righteousness, and the death of his human nature in our stead; 21. And since we now have a great and glorious High-priest, of incomparable, nay, infinite dignity in his person, office, and exaltation, and of unbounded authority, as the Head of his church militant on earth and triumphant in heaven—where he, and his Father, and the blessed Spirit, reside in a far more exalted manner than in the Jewish tabernacle—22. Let us, encouraged by these considerations, and by the assistance of his Spirit, humbly approach to God, as our reconciled Father in him, in prayer, and every other act of religious worship, or exercise of grace, with integrity and uprightness, a heart established in the truth of the gospel, and with a lively and fully assured exercise of faith on the all-sufficiency and excellency of Christ, in his person, office, and fulness, and the infallible accomplishment of his promises to us—having our whole souls purged from the stupidity and treachery of an unfaithful conscience, and from the disquietude and defilement of a guilty, terrifying, and condemning conscience by an application of Jesus' blood; and our whole man and whole conversation renewed and purified by the sanctifying influences of the Holy Ghost. 23. And answerably hereto, let us, notwithstanding whatever we may suffer on that account, steadfastly and invariably persist in maintaining our solemn profession and open confession of Christ and his truths, and of our faith in them, and in the belief of every gospel doctrine, and the practice of every holy duty, without any distrust, hesitation, or perturbation of mind; for he who has promised to pardon our sins, write his laws in our hearts, and be our God, being unchangeable in his truth and faithfulness, may be fully depended on for all necessary and reasonable supplies of grace for that effect, and for the fulfilment of all his promises, unto our complete salvation. 24. And to promote one another's steadfastness in the faith and profession of the gospel, let us, with joint concern, seriously consider our own and their respective wants, infirmities, temptations, and dangers, on the one hand, and the grounds of hope and encouragement that are in Christ and his promises on the other—that by example, exhortations, and cautions, we may stir up one another to the most fervent and faithful love to God, to Christ, and his truths, and to an affectionate union and communion one with another; and, in fine, to every evangelical and moral duty becoming our Christian character. 25. And as ever we would be steadfast in the profession of our faith, and in love and good works, let us earnestly beware of indulging the smallest remissness or indifference with respect to attendance on the stated and occasional meetings of the church for the celebration of God's ordinances, in the manner of some who have begun to backslide, or who have at last openly and shamefully deserted them, and renounced their profession; but let us, with earnest care and diligence, cheerfulness, and constancy, frequent our religious meetings, and admonish, excite, and encourage others to do so, as the time of the utter destruction of Jerusalem, and the dispersion of your nation, and of death and judgment, is drawing nigh; which will be inexpressibly dreadful to apostates. 26. For if any of us professed Christians, through unbelief, prejudice, pride, or worldly-mindedness, deliberately, resolutely, and wilfully reject the doctrines and laws of the gospel dispensation, and turn back to Judaism, heathenism, or profaneness, after we have been enlightened and convinced of the truth and excellency of them, we have perfidiously rejected the last and only sacrifice of Christ for remission of sins—can have no interest in it, nor any hope of pardon or acceptance with God; 27. But all that remains for us, as our dreadful portion, is a terrible foreboding in our own consciences of the most righteous, but tremendous and everlasting wrath of God, to torment and consume us in this world, and especially in that which is to come. 28, 29. And nothing can be more just; for if one who presumptuously violated even the ceremonial laws of Moses was appointed to death, if the fact could be clearly proved, how much more inexpressibly dreadful and lasting punishment must your reason and conscience allow to be due to, and shall be inflicted upon, such resolute and wilful apostates from Christ and his truth, who, contrary to clear convictions of the truth, light, and grace of the gospel, have, with the vilest insolence and contempt, trampled upon the person, authority, mediation, oracles, and ordinances of the eternal Son of God, as if he had been an impostor; and who, instead of trusting for justification and salvation to his precious blood, by which the condition of the covenant of grace was fulfilled, its blessings secured, and its promises and the New Testament dispensation ratified; and by which he was consecrated to and prepared for his exalted work of mediation; and themselves apparently justified, sanctified, and set apart to the service of God,—have profanely slighted and injuriously treated it, as if less holy than the blood of bulls and goats, or as if the blood of a malefactor; and who have spitefully, maliciously, and contemptuously opposed, affronted, and vilified the person, operation and graces of the graciously-conferred and grace-bestowing Spirit of God! 30. Now we know that the sovereign Lord of heaven and earth, whose equity and truth are uncontrollable, and power irresistible, hath solemnly claimed it, as his high and distinguished prerogative, to vindicate his own honour, and to resent the injuries done him, particularly by perfidious revolvers from his government. 31. How inexpressibly tremendous then must be the punishment of those wilful apostates, when they fall as victims into the hands of his justice, without any mixture of mercy, to be punished by the immediate and almighty arm of that great and terrible God whose existence, power, and activity continue invariably and for ever to execute wrath to the uttermost on the despisers of his Son, Spirit, and grace, as well as to complete the happiness of those who persevere in grace! 32. But to encourage your watchfulness against the very smallest beginnings of apostasy, let me beseech you seriously to reflect upon that solid satisfaction and hope which ye formerly experienced in the time of your conversion to Christ—in which, as soon as ye were enlightened in the knowledge of Christ, and the way of salvation through him, assisted of God, ye patiently sustained, with Christian fortitude, a multitude of severe persecutions from your own countrymen; 33. Partly while ye were maliciously accused, contemptuously disgraced, virulently derided, and cruelly oppressed, for righteousness' sake; and partly while ye tenderly sympathized and mourned with, courageously owned and assisted, your fellow-Christians, and the apostles and servants of Christ, when they were abused and persecuted. 34. For when I myself was imprisoned for the sake of Christ, ye boldly acknowledged and stood by me, kindly sympathized with me, prayed for me, and, to the utmost of your power, supplied my wants; yea, for the sake of Christ and his cause, ye cheerfully endured the loss of the conveniences and necessities of life, which were violently wrested from you by furious persecutors—being fully satisfied, from the promise of God, and your own happy experience, that there is laid up for you, in the new covenant and in heaven, the more substantial, durable, and enriching treasure of everlasting life, secured for you by Christ, and graciously given to you as your reward in adhering to his cause. 35. Animated therefore by a lively faith in the promises of the gospel, and by the remembrance of your holy fortitude in suffering for him hitherto, take heed lest, through the continuance or increase of your persecutions, and the workings of your own fear and unbelief under them, ye should relinquish your holy boldness, freedom, and courage in professing and following of Christ, and your joyful hopes of eternal life through him, which, for the present, afford you noble support and satisfaction under your trials, and shall quickly issue in your enjoyment of eternal happiness above, which will infinitely more than compensate all the troubles you can endure for the sake of Christ on earth: 36. For, according to the wise and holy appointment of God, the declaration of his Word, and the disposals of his providence, such is your present state of afflictions and persecutions, that ye absolutely need, and must have, grace to enable you to live in the constant exercise of a calm, quiet, humble, and resigned submission to the sovereign will of God in them—that after cheerfully yielding up yourselves, through the whole course of your lives, to the commanding and disposing will of God in the most difficult instances of it, ye may receive the promised blessing of eternal life at the end of your spiritual race and warfare. 37. For, according to an ancient prediction applicable to the Messiah in all his remarkable appearances, it is but a very short time, and he will certainly come to destroy your Jewish adversaries, and deliver you from their oppression;

15 Whereof^a the Holy Ghost also is a witness to us: for after that he had said before,

16 This^a is the covenant that I will make with them after those days, saith the Lord; I will put my laws into their hearts, and in their minds will I write them;

17 And their sins and iniquities will I remember no more.

18 Now^a where remission of these is, there is no more offering for sin.

19 Having^a therefore, brethren, boldness^a to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, 20 By^a a new and living^a way, which he hath consecrated^a for us, through the veil, that is to say, his flesh;

21 And^a having an High-priest over the house of God;

22 Let^a us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled^a from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water.

23 Let^a us hold fast the profession of our^a faith^a without wavering; (for he is faithful that promised;)

24 And^a let us consider one another, to provoke unto love and to good works:

25 Not^a forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another: and so much the more as ye see the day approaching.

26 For if we sin wilfully^a after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins,

27 But^a a certain fearful looking for of judgment, and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries.

28 He^a that despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses:

29 Of^a how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified,^a an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace?

30 For we know him that hath said, Vengeance^a belongeth unto me, I will recompense, saith the Lord. And again, The Lord shall judge his people.

ter Paul breaks into one of those digressions so characteristic of his style.
He was led to it by the mention of faith
in the close of ch. 10.
After a clear and logical definition of it,
he describes its effects in language of almost unparalleled pathos and eloquence.
After recording a few of the brightest examples of faith, he powerfully bursts forth into a grand comprehensive summary, as if the fulness of his enthusiasm would no longer permit him to dwell
on individual in-

31 It^a is a fearful thing to fall^a into the hands of the living God.

32 But^a call to remembrance the former days, in which, after ye were illuminated, ye endured a great fight of afflictions;

33 Partly, whilst ye were made^a a gazing-stock, both by reproaches and afflictions; and partly, whilst ye became companions of them that were so used.

34 For^a ye had compassion of me in my bonds, and took joyfully the spoiling of your goods, knowing in yourselves that ye have in heaven a better and an enduring substance.

35 Cast^a not away therefore your confidence, which hath great recompense of reward.

36 For^a ye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise.

37 For yet^a a little while, and he that shall come^a will come, and will not tarry.

38 Now^a the just shall live by faith: but if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him.

39 But we are not of them who draw back unto perdition, but of them that believe to the saving of the soul.

CHAPTER XI.

1 What faith is. 6 Without faith we cannot please God. 7 The worthy fruits thereof in the fathers of old time.

NOW faith^a is the substance^a of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen.²

2 For^a by it the elders obtained a good report.

3 Through faith we understand that the worlds^a were framed by the word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear.

4 By faith^a Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts: and by it he, being dead, yet speaketh.⁴

5 By faith^a Enoch was translated that he should not see death; and was not found, because God had translated him: for before his translation he had this testimony, that he pleased God.

6 But^a without faith it is impossible to please may, when he will come to the last judgment, for the utter destruction of all unbelieving and impenitent sinners, and to put you into the full possession of eternal life; nor will he tarry one moment beyond the time fixed on as best for his work and your advantage in his loving purpose. 38. And for your further incitement, remember that, according to a subsequent prediction, whoever are justified through, and purified in heart by faith, may, by means of that grace, persevere in a life of fellowship with God, obedience to his law, and patient submission to his providence on earth, and be admitted to a life of blessedness and glory with Christ for ever; but if any man, after making a profession of faith in Christ, through pride and unbelief, apostatize from him, and renounce the profession of his name, God will certainly loathe, abhor, and miserably destroy him. 39. But we who are sincere in our profession of Christ, and are truly before God what we appear before men, are not of the number of those hypocritical and treacherous professors who revolt from him to their own everlasting destruction; but of those who, having truly believed with our heart, shall steadfastly persevere in holiness, kept by the power of God, through a faith which receives, and may certainly issue in the eternal salvation of our soul.

Ver. 14. By one offering, &c. Where is, then, use or room for the figment of the Romish mass as an unbloody but expiatory sacrifice for sin? The doctrine of expiation by a bloodless sacrifice contradicts ch. 9. 22; 10. 18. The doctrine of any second or continued sacrifice contradicts the everlasting perfection of the one offering.—C.

Ver. 38. Any man is not in the original; but any professing Christian is evidently implied, as the apostle immediately proceeds, in the very next verse, to distinguish between those that draw back to perdition, because they merely professed, and those who persevered to salvation, because they believed, C.

REFLECTIONS.—In their number, their repetitions, and their frequently spreading the ceremonial defilement, was deeply marked the insufficiency of legal sacrifices and washings to remove our sin, or recommend us to the favour of God. But infinitely meritorious and blessed is the sacrifice of Christ, who, in consequence of God's loving purposes, covenant engagements, and ancient promises, appeared in our nature, and fulfilled all righteousness in his obedience unto death. The blessed ratification of all his promises, full forgiveness, gracious sanctification, delightful access to God; yea, eternal redemption—are hereby made possible for all. Diligently should we, then, improve these blessings in the most familiar devotion; in mutual excitement to love and good works; by constancy in church-fellowship and public worship, and in watchfulness against the first and smallest beginnings

15 Whereof^a the Holy Ghost also is a witness to us: for after that he had said before,

16 This^a is the covenant that I will make with them after those days, saith the Lord; I will put my laws into their hearts, and in their minds will I write them;

17 And their sins and iniquities will I remember no more.

18 Now where remission of these is, there is no more offering for sin.

19 Having^a therefore,⁷ brethren, boldness⁸ to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, 20 By^a a new and living⁹ way, which he hath consecrated¹ for us, through the veil, that is to say, his flesh;

21 And^a having an High-priest over the house of God;

22 Let^a us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled² from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water.

23 Let^a us hold fast the profession of our^a faith⁴ without wavering; (for he is faithful that promised:)

24 And^a let us consider one another, to provoke unto love and to good works:

25 Not^a forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another: and so much the more as ye see the day approaching.

26 For if we sin wilfully⁵ after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins,

27 But^a a certain fearful looking for of judgment, and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries.

28 He^a that despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses:

29 Of^a how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified,⁶ an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace?

30 For we know him that hath said, Vengeance belongeth unto me, I will recompense, saith the Lord. And again, The Lord shall judge his people.

may, when he will come to the last judgment, for the utter destruction of all unbelieving and impenitent sinners, and to put you into the full possession of eternal life; nor will he tarry one moment beyond the time fixed on as best for his work and your advantage in his loving purpose. 38. And for your further incitement, remember that, according to a subsequent prediction, whoever are justified through, and purified in heart by faith, may, by means of that grace, persevere in a life of fellowship with God, obedience to his law, and patient submission to his providence on earth, and be admitted to a life of blessedness and glory with Christ for ever; but if any man, after making a profession of faith in Christ, through pride and unbelief, apostatize from him, and renounce the profession of his name, God will certainly loathe, abhor, and miserably destroy him. 39. But we who are sincere in our profession of Christ, and are truly before God what we appear before men, are not of the number of those hypocritical and treacherous professors who revolt from him to their own everlasting destruction; but of those who, having truly believed with our heart, shall steadfastly persevere in holiness, kept by the power of God, through a faith which receives, and may certainly issue in the eternal salvation of our soul.

Ver. 14. By one offering, &c. Where is, then, use or room for the figment of the Romish mass as an unbloody but expiatory sacrifice for sin? The doctrine of expiation by a bloodless sacrifice contradicts ch. 9. 22; 10. 18. The doctrine of any second or continued sacrifice contradicts the everlasting perfection of 'the one offering.' C.

Ver. 38. Any man is not in the original; but any professing Christian is evidently implied, as the apostle immediately proceeds, in the very next verse, to distinguish between those that draw back to perdition, because they merely professed, and those who persevered to salvation, because they believed. 2 In this 11th chapter Paul breaks off into one of those discussions so characteristic of his style.
He was led to it by the mention of faith
in the close of ch. 8.
After a clear and logical definition of it,
he describes its effects in language of almost unparallel-led pathos and eloquence. After exploring a few of the brightest examples of faith's power, he bursts forth into a grand comprehensive summary, as if the
fulness of his enthusiasm would no longer permit him to dwell
on individual instances. The meaning of this first verse is well brought out in the translation given by Alford:—'Now faith is the confidence of things hoped for, demonstration of matters not seen.'—P.

31 It^a is a fearful thing to fall⁷ into the hands of the living God.

32 But^a call to remembrance the former days, in which, after ye were illuminated, ye endured a great fight of afflictions;

33 Partly, whilst ye were made a gazing-stock, both by reproaches and afflictions; and partly, whilst ye became companions of them that were so used.

34 For^a ye had compassion of me in my bonds, and took joyfully the spoiling of your goods, knowing in yourselves that ye have in heaven a better and an enduring substance.

35 Cast^a not away therefore your confidence, which hath great recompense of reward.

36 For^a ye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise.

37 For yet a little while, and he that shall come⁸ will come, and will not tarry.

38 Now the just shall live by faith: but if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him.

39 But we are not of them who draw back unto perdition, but of them that believe to the saving of the soul.

CHAPTER XI.

1 What faith is. 6 Without faith we cannot please God. 7 The worthy fruits thereof in the fathers of old time.

NOW faith^a is the substance¹ of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen.²

2 For^a by it the elders obtained a good report.

3 Through faith we understand that the worlds³ were framed by the word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear.

4 By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts: and by it he, being dead yet speaketh.⁴

5 By faith Enoch was translated that he should not see death; and was not found, because God had translated him: for before his translation he had this testimony, that he pleased God.

6 But^a without faith it is impossible to please

REFLECTIONS.—In their number, their repetition: and their frequently spreading the ceremonial defilement, was deeply marked the insufficiency of leg- sacrifices and washings to remove our sin, or recon- mend us to the favour of God. But infinitely mer- torious and blessed is the sacrifice of Christ, who, consequence of God's loving purposes, covenant c- gagements, and ancient promises, appeared in o- nature, and fulfilled all righteousness in his obedi- unto death. The blessed ratification of all his p- mises, full forgiveness, gracious sanctification, deligh- ful access to God; yea, eternal redemption—are here! made possible for all. Diligently should we, the- improve these blessings in the most familiar devotion in mutual excitement to love and good works; 1 constancy in church-fellowship and public worship, as in watchfulness against the first and smallest beginnin-him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him.

7 By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, ⁵ moved with fear, ⁶ prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by the which he condemned the world, ⁷ and ⁸ became heir of the righteousness which is by faith.

8 By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out, not knowing whither he went.

9 By faith he ¹ sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, ⁸ the heirs with him of the same promise:

10 For he looked for ¹ a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God.

11 Through faith also ¹ Sara herself received strength to conceive seed, and was delivered of a child when she was past age, because she judged him faithful who had promised.

12 Therefore ^o sprang there even of one, and of apostasy, or contempt of him and his grace. Patiently and in hope should we persevere under our manifold sufferings for his sake; tenderly sympathize with his suffering servants; and steadfastly cleave to him, and live upon him by faith. His comforting promises, refreshing presence, and eternal rewards, will more than balance all our adversities on earth.—But, alas! inexpressible is the guilt and danger of those who willfully reject or apostatize from him! O my soul, exceedingly fear and quake! Alas! how far and how long I may proceed in the appearances of religion, and, after all, with Judas sink into the depths of hell!

CHAPTER XI. Ver. 1. Now, to give you a summary account of the excellent nature and effects of that faith by which men believe unto salvation, it gives a sort of present subsistence in the mind to, and a confident expectation of, future blessings, which, by the infallible promise of God, are as fully ascertained and realized, to the believer's comfort, as if he actually possessed them. And, merely on the credit of divine revelation, it gives us as clear and convincing a demonstration of invisible things as if they were ever so plainly exhibited to our natural sight: 2. For, by this realizing and evidencing exercise of faith, our godly ancestors, all along from the time of the first promise till now, obtained an honourable testimony from God, part of which is contained in his Word.—3. Though, from reason and observation, we are obliged to conclude the wonderful fabric of this world to have been the workmanship of God, yet it is by faith in his Word, as the evidence of things not seen, that we certainly know that God formed all things by a mere act of his will, and that in such beautiful order, out of the mere chaos once covered with absolute darkness. 4. By faith in God's first promise of Christ's incarnation and sufferings, and in his appointment of sacrifices to prefigure them, Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain—by which he humbly acknowledged his own guilt, and prefigured the death of the Messiah, as the Lamb of God, to make atonement for the sins of the people; and hence, by some visible token from heaven, as well as by inward intimations to his conscience, God testified to him that his person was justified, and his sacrifice accepted, through Christ. And by means of this faith, as his case stands recorded in the book of God, Abel, though dead long ago, still instructs us that the only way of a sinner's justification before God is through faith in the atoning sacrifice of Jesus Christ; and that the murder of innocents, and especially of faithful saints, shall be terribly punished. 5. By faith, which rendered him accepted in the Beloved, and purified his heart from dead works to perfect holiness, in the most close walking with God, Enoch, the seventh from Adam, was miraculously translated to heaven, soul and body, without undergoing the ordinary change of death; and, even before he was rapt up into heaven, God attested to his conscience, and perhaps to his neighbours, that his person and works were accepted in his sight. 6. But without such realizing and evidencing faith in Christ it is impossible to please God; for he that approaches him in prayer, or any other religious worship, must, upon the ground of revelation, believe that God really exists as the only true God, and that he freely gives himself, and all blessings of grace and glory, as an exceeding great and gracious reward, to those that humbly, earnestly, perseveringly, and with their whole heart, seek his face and favour in Christ, in the means of his own appointment, and in reliance on his covenant promises. 7. By faith Noah, who was righteous before God, and walked with him, crediting his threatening to destroy the old world, and his promise to preserve him and his family, built an ark, wherein they, and a remnant of animals, were saved from the general deluge; by which faith in the truth, power, justice, and mercy of God revealed to him, and by his building the ark in obedience to God's command, and by his repeated preaching of righteousness, he doctrinally and practically condemned the inhabitants of the old world; and by his faith in the Messiah, who was typified by his ark as the only mean of salvation, he became heir of the world, renewed after the flood, and of the righteousness of Christ received by faith, and of all the blessings, temporal, spiritual, or eternal, secured by it. 8. It was by faith in the authority of God, and in his promise to give to him and to his seed a land figurative of the heavenly inheritance, that Abraham, the friend of God, and father of the Jews and of all believers, at his call, left his native country of Chaldaea, and set out on a journey to a land which he knew nothing of—no, not so much as its name, or the way to it. 9. It was by faith in the promise and protection of God that he, with Isaac and Jacob, his fellow-heirs of the promised Canaan, contentedly wandered, as a stranger and pilgrim, in that country, among the heathen inhabitants, dwelling only in movable tents. 10. For God having promised to be his exceeding great reward, and his God for ever, and that in his seed all the nations of the earth should be blessed, he by faith looked through the figurative Canaan to the earnestly desired and expected, highly privileged, great, glorious, regular, firmly fixed, and everlasting blessedness of heaven, of which God himself is the contriver, former, and even the very substance. 11. It was also by faith, in the faithfulness and power of God engaged in the promise, that Sara, the beloved wife of Abraham, after her recovery from her unbelief, was enabled, beyond all expectation, and all ordinary influence of second causes, to conceive and bear a son, after she had continued barren till the ninetieth year of her age. 12. And in virtue of their faith, a prodigiously numerous offspring descended from them, after both of them had appeared beyond all possibility of having any. 13. And not only did Abraham, Sara, Isaac, and Jacob, live by faith in God's promises and perfections, under their trials on earth, but died also in the full and comfortable persuasion, that however little they had experienced of the fulfilment of the promises on earth, God would completely accomplish them—in giving themselves an immediate entrance into the blessedness of heaven; and in increasing their posterity, and settling them in Canaan as his peculiar people; and in bringing the Messiah from their loins to be the common Saviour of men: and they avowed that they looked on themselves as no more than aliens and strangers in this world, passing through it in their way to the heavenly country. 14. And this avowal, that their hearts and hopes, interest and happiness, were not placed on any earthly concerns, manifested to all around them that they looked and hoped for, desired and earnestly sought after, the large and delightful abodes of heaven, as their native home, in which they should for ever dwell with God as their Father and Friend. 15. And it is evident that the country which they sought after was not their native home in Chaldaea, where their friends and relations continued; for, if they had been inclined to return thither, they had time, liberty, and power enough to do it with safety. 16. But all their desires and expectations centred on that transcendently more excellent, satisfying, glorious, abiding, incorruptible, and undefiled heavenly inheritance; wherefore God, in his infinite love, condescended to avow himself to be their God in a peculiar and distinguished manner; and, answerably to this high relation, has graciously appointed, laid out, framed, and fitted up the heavenly mansions for their whole persons, soul and body, to dwell with himself. 17-19. It was by faith in the promises of God to him and to his seed, particularly that which concerned the Messiah and his extensive salvation, that Abraham—when required, for the eminent trial of his faith and obedience, to offer up in a burnt-offering his only son Isaac, whom he had obtained by such a miraculous conception and birth, and in whom the promises were to be fulfilled—so readily complied, and proceeded in this work till stopped by God himself; accounting and concluding in his own mind, that though Isaac should be slain and burned to ashes, God easily could and would raise him from the dead, in order to fulfil the promises in him and his seed. And, indeed, as at first he received him from his own and Sara's dead bodies, on that occasion he received him back from that death to which he had been, without any hope to the contrary, heartily devoted. 20-22. It was by faith in the promises of God

⁶ The interpretation of this verse is difficult. It may be translated as follows:—

Reckoning that God is able even to raise from among the dead, from whence he also (Abraham) received him (Isaac) back in a parable, or figuratively. Alford explains the meaning of the last clause, in which the great difficulty lies, thus:—

The true identification of the "parable" is, I am persuaded, to be found in the figure under which Isaac was sacrificed, viz.

the ram, as already hinted by Chrysostom. Abraham virtually sacrificed his son. God designated Isaac for the burnt-offering, but provided a ram in his stead. Under the figure of that ram Isaac was slain, being received back by his father in his proper person, risen from that death which he had undergone in a parable, in under, the figure of the ram.

32 And what shall I more say? for the time would fail me to tell of ^qGideon, and of ^rBarak, and of ^sSamson, and of ^tJephthae; of ^uDavid also, and of ^vSamuel, and of the prophets;

33 Who through faith ^wsubdued kingdoms, that Isaac, by prophetic influence, assigned to Jacob the principal, and to Esau the subordinate, blessings for themselves and their seed; and that Jacob, when very feeble, in like manner foretold the fate of Joseph's two sons, assigning the principal glory to Ephraim the younger; and that Joseph, when dying, assured his brethren that God would certainly preserve them in, and in due time bring them out of Egypt; and in testimony of his faith herein, appointed them to carry his bones with them to Canaan, and bury them there. 23. It was by faith in God's promises of their preservation in and deliverance from Egypt, that Moses' parents, observing something extraordinary in their child, dared, contrary to the commandment of Pharaoh their king, to conceal him three months after his birth. 24-26. By faith in the same promises of God, made to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and in the invisible things of the heavenly state, Moses, when forty years old, and extraordinarily qualified with learning and wisdom, renounced his adoptive relation to Pharaoh, which might have issued in his succession to the crown of Egypt, quitted the court, and associated himself with his Hebrew brethren—choosing rather to undergo the severest oppression, suffering, and trouble, with God's own peculiar people, than to gratify his flesh with the enjoyment of all the uncertain and perishing grandeur, affluence, and sensual pleasures of a pompous, idolatrous, and luxurious court; deliberately reckoning reproach, derision, and persecution, for the sake of Christ, and in communion with him and his people, more valuable and useful, for the honour of God and his own spiritual interests, than all the wealth and honours that the kingdom of Egypt could afford: for he looked off from those perishing riches on the one hand, and beyond those temporal hardships on the other, to the immortal and inexpressible glories reserved for him in heaven, which he knew would more than recompense all the reproaches, wants, and sufferings he could undergo for the sake of a good conscience on earth. 27. By faith in the command and promise of God, about forty years after he returned from Midian; and, fearless of King Pharaoh's threatenings and wrath, demanded his permission for the Hebrews to leave the country; and at last, regardless of his furious pursuit, led them forth to liberty, by faith depending entirely on the invisible God. 28. By faith in the promise of God to deliver his people from Egypt, and in the promised Messiah typified by that divinely appointed ordinance, he, and the children of Israel, directed by him, observed the passover, and sprinkled the blood on their upper lintels and door-posts, that the angel who, that very night, destroyed all the first-born of the Egyptians, might not hurt them. 29. And it was chiefly by his faith in the promise and command of God that the Red Sea was divided, and a passage opened for the Israelites from Egypt to the Arabian wilderness—in which Pharaoh and his army, attempting to follow them, were every one of them drowned. 30. It was by the faith of Joshua, Caleb, and others, in the promise, faithfulness, power, and command of God, that the walls of Jericho miraculously fell down while the Israelites shouted, after they and the ark of God had compassed the city seven days. 31. It was by faith in the God of Israel, and his grant of the land of Canaan to his favourite Jews, that Rahab, a Gentile, who had been a harlot, kindly received the spies whom Joshua sent to view the city, and so, together with her friends, escaped, when the rest of the inhabitants, who disregarded what they had heard or seen of God's miraculous appearances for Israel, perished in a general slaughter. 32. But why should I multiply further instances of the power and triumphs of faith? Both my time, and the intended limits of this epistle, forbid me to give a particular account—how, by faith in the promise and command of God, Gideon reformed his city, and, with a handful of unarmed men, routed the Midianites; Barak and Deborah, with ten thousand undisciplined troops, vanquished the formidable army of Jabin, king of Canaan; Jephthah overthrew the Ammonites; Samson, in his life, and at his death, destroyed the Philistines; David endured manifold trials, conquered giants and nations; Samuel, by miracles, delivered and terrified his people; Elijah, Elisha, and other prophets, patiently endured their troubles, boldly declared their messages, and, when necessary, confirmed them by miracles;—33. How, through faith in God's promise and providence, Moses and Joshua subdued the Canaanites, and David the nations around; and they and others not only kept the commandments of God themselves, but reformed their nation, and governed them with great equity and impartiality; or by remarkable appearances of providence obtained the actual accomplishment of particular promises made to them: Daniel stopped the mouths of lions in the den; Samson slew one, David another, and Benaiah a third: 34. Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego restrained the force of Nebuchadnezzar's fiery furnace; they, and Elijah, Elisha, and others, escaped the murderous plots and attempts of cruel tyrants; others, as Hezekiah, were recovered from desperate distempers; or, as Gideon and David, from weakness and cowardice, became valiant conquerors. 35-38. By means of faith, the Shunammite and widow of Zarephath beheld their deceased sons restored to life; and many, in the persecutions of Ahab, Jehoram, Ahaz, Manasseh, Jehoiakim, or others, courageously endured the most exquisite sufferings and cruel deaths, in hopes of a resurrection to eternal life, refusing to redeem their lives by the smallest apostasy from the truth; while Isaac, Elisha, Joseph, Samson, Micaiah, and Jeremiah, or others, underwent the most cruel derision, scourging, or imprisonment; and Naboth, Zechariah, Uriah, and others, were murdered in different cruel and barbarous forms; and others, of whose converse, admonitions, and prayers, the wicked inhabitants of the world were not worthy—as David, Elijah, and others—were obliged to flee about as vagabonds from place to place, and hide themselves in deserts, dens, and caves of the earth. 39, 40. But though these ancient saints and servants of God, by means of their faith, have obtained an honourable testimony in the infallible records of God's Word, and embraced and relied upon the promise of the Messiah, yet they never lived to see him come in the flesh, fulfil the work of our redemption, and introduce the glories of the gospel state of the church—God having provided for us who now believe these better things, that their ancient state of religious worship and privileges might not be perfected without some exhibition of Christ in the flesh, fulfilment of all righteousness, and exceeding riches of grace, which are manifested in their transcendent light, glory, and efficacy in the gospel dispensation which we now enjoy.

Ver. 1. The apostle had asserted (ch. 10. 36) that believers had always 'need of patience,' because they received not 'their recompense' in present possession, but in future promise. He then proves, by prophetic authority, that 'the just shall live by faith;' and proceeds (ch. 11. 1) to define faith as substantive, 'the firm confidence' (of the reality) 'of things hoped for,' as if they were in actual possession.—Εἰς ἔργον, 'the revelation of things not seen,' as if they were already before the eyes; whereby he proves that as faith always embraces things future and invisible, it can never be separated from that patience which waits for them.

Ver. 2. In proof of the foregoing statement, Paul now adduces the example of 'the elders' (as well those anterior as posterior to Abraham), who obtained 'a good report' both of God and of posterity—not through the ceremonial law, in which the unbelieving Jews trusted for righteousness, but through one common faith, and under the uniform influence of unwearied patience. C.

Ver. 13. These all. Abraham and Sarah, who had come out from their country at the call of God, ver. 15, and Isaac and Jacob, who accompanied him in his unsettled wanderings. C. Ver. 21. The Romanists, following the Vulgate translation, and rejecting the Greek of the apostle, render this passage—'he adored the top of his staff;' whereby they obtain an apparent countenance for image worship. But all the Greek MSS. agree in ἐν ἡμέρᾳ, which can be translated in no other manner than 'upon the top.' The Hebrew word translated 'staff' may, however, be also translated either 'staff' or 'bed's head,' according as it is pointed; and the latter would be accordant with the authorized version, Ge. 47. 31, and is supported by all the ancient versions except the LXX., and by modern expositors of the highest order of learning. Still, as the Greek ἐν ἡμέρᾳ will bear no other meaning than 'staff' or 'sceptre,' its apostolic adoption from the LXX. should surely entitle it to be retained as the true translation of the Hebrew. C.

Ver. 26. The reproach of Christ—for expecting whom as a deliverer the Hebrews were ridiculed and reproached. C.

Ver. 27. He forsook Egypt—not when he fled to Midian, Ge. 2. 14, 15, but when he led out the Israelites, and forsook all his property and prospects of advancement, as 'the son of Pharaoh's daughter.' And this he did, 'not fearing the wrath of the king,' whom he, most probably, expected to pursue him and his undisciplined host with his army. C.

Ver. 31. The harlot Rahab. That is, who had been a harlot (for the word, whether in Hebrew or Greek, will bear no other meaning), but who, having come to a knowledge of the true God, had 'brought forth fruits meet for repentance.' Thus 'Simon the leper' and 'Matthew the publican' retain their names, when the one had been healed and the other had become an apostle. C.

THRESHING SCENE AT HELIOPOLIS—WHERE MOSES WAS EDUCATED AND JOSEPH MARRIED. [ROMANS, xi: 26.]—Reference is made in the 29th verse of the 11th chapter of Romans to Jacob. We give the above illustration of a threshing scene at Heliopolis, because it was in this region that Jacob lived during the time he spent with his son Joseph in Egypt. At Heliopolis was situated the greatest university of ancient times. Here Moses was educated and Joseph married the daughter of Potiphera, the controlling priest in the temple of the sun at Heliopolis. It was in this neighborhood that Jacob and Joseph met when the ancient patriarch came down from Canaan with his household. It was here also that Joseph and Mary came to shun the fury of Herod during their sojourn in Egypt.

DRAWING WATER FROM THE NILE. [ROMANS, ix:17].—It is remarkable how intimately related to the history of the Hebrews is the land of Egypt. No sooner had Abraham come up from Ur of Chaldees into Canaan than he made his way to Egypt. It was to Egypt that the Israelites always looked in time of famine for supplies. And for four hundred and thirty years Egypt was the Holy Land, for this was the length of the period that God's people lived in Egypt. Hence so much reference is made in Scripture to the Pharaohs. Above we have a view of a native drawing water from the Nile to irrigate the land. A yoke of oxen is hitched to a round framework, which in turn is attached by rude cogs to another wheel, which in turn causes the jars to revolve, bringing the water from below.

REFLECTIONS.—What a noble grace is unfeigned faith dwelling in the heart! and how extensively useful! Through the infallible declarations of God it realizes invisible and future things, and gives them a kind of subsistence in our soul. By receiving and resting on the person and righteousness of Christ, it renders us and our services accepted with God.—Crediting his warnings, and obeying his directions, it delivers from danger and death; it weans the heart from this world, and sets it on things above; it enables us to wait for the accomplishment of promises, however unlikely and long delayed; it animates to the most trying obedience; qualifies for a joyful and devout entrance into the eternal state; enables to look into futurities, upon God's authority and credit; and to prefer sufferings with his people, and for his sake, and an exact obedience to his law, to everything earthly: and after exploits unnumbered, it issues in eternal rest and triumph.—Tender is God in giving it, or its various degrees, to all who accept Christ by simple faith, and in exposing his dearest saints to the most singular trials and heaviest troubles on earth to exercise it. But if he be for us, who can be against or hurt us? And it is highly unworthy for us Christian believers, notwithstanding our greatly superior advantages, to be so much inferior to some ancient saints in the vigour and distinctness of our faith.

CHAPTER XII. Ver. 1. Since, from the preceding instances of the excellency and power of faith to support under and triumph over all difficulties and dangers, it appears that we are surrounded on every side with multitudes of glorified believers, who unite in testifying the duty and advantage of an entire reliance upon the infinite wisdom, power, faithfulness, and goodness of God, in the greatest trials, let us, animated by and in imitation of their example, and as under their eye, cast off the works of darkness, inordinate care about this present world, and the load of ceremonial observances, and, by the influence of God's grace, disentangle ourselves from the power of indwelling corruption, and of every sin to which, through our natural depraved constitution, and our peculiar circumstances, company, and situation in life, we are most easily disposed, and especially that great sin of unbelief, which stands in direct opposition to faith, and is the root of all apostasy; and, thus disencumbered from every load of temptation or corruption, let us, with persevering fortitude, quietness, and patient resignation to the holy and sovereign will of God under our manifold sufferings, hold on our way with speed, steadiness, and vigour, till we finish that course of faith, affliction, and unreserved obedience which is appointed for us by God, and marked out in his Word and the examples of his saints, till we arrive at the mark of his high calling, and obtain the crown of life; 2. Always by faith looking off from sin, self, and the allurements and terrors of this world, or whatever else would retard and dishearten us, and looking forward to Jesus Christ—that we may derive grace and strength from him to enable us to follow his most perfect pattern, who is not only an unparalleled example, but the efficient Cause, Leader, and Captain of our faith, to begin, encourage, increase, and perfect it, and crown it with eternal glory—even as he himself, in the joyful prospect and hopes of the honour to God, salvation to men, and reward of mediatorial glory to himself, which would issue therefrom, calmly submitted to, and with astonishing meekness and patience endured, the agonizing and lingering pains of his crucifixion, and overlooked all the ignominy and reproach of that scandalous form of death, and all the contempt and derision attending it; for now, in consequence, and as the just reward of all this, he, in that very nature which suffered, is exalted as a triumphant conqueror over sin, Satan, the world, death, and hell, to a state of the most perfect, glorious, and everlasting rest, honour, and authority. 3. To prevent dejecting discouragement, impatience, or weariness under your manifold tribulations and apprehensions of danger, seriously consider and contemplate the person and office of Jesus Christ, in all their circumstances, and particularly in his invincible patience and undisturbed composure of mind wherewith he for your sakes bore the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us,¹

2 Looking^c unto Jesus² the ³author⁴ and finisher of our faith; who, ^dfor the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God.

3 For consider him that *endured such contradiction of sinners against himself, lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds.

4 Ye^e have not yet resisted unto blood, striving against sin.

5 And ye have forgotten the exhortation ^hwhich speaketh unto you as unto children, My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him:

6 For *whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth.

7 Ifⁱ ye endure chastening, God dealeth with you as with sons; for what son is he whom the father chasteneth not?

8 But^k if ye be without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards, and not sons.

9 Furthermore, we have had fathers of our flesh which *corrected us, and we gave them reverence: *shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits, and live?

10 For they verily for a few days chastened us after their own pleasure; *but he for our up under, passed through, and triumphed over, all the opprobrious opposition and blasphemous insults which the most malicious and wicked men threw out to his face against his divine person, office, doctrine, and miracles, all the days of his public ministry. 4. And it would be the more sinful, shameful, and dangerous for you to draw back from your Christian course; for though ye have already cheerfully suffered the loss of your liberty and property for your adherence to it, God has hitherto restrained the fury of your wicked persecutors, that ye have never been called to suffer unto death in striving to avoid sin. 5. Are ye unmindful of, or dare ye forget, or be unaffected with, the endearing exhortation by which God, as a most tender and compassionate Father, for your direction, caution, and comfort, under tribulation, warns and beseeches you, on the one hand, to beware of overlooking and contemning his kind chastisements of you on account of your sin, and for your spiritual and eternal good, or of behaving in an unaffected, obstinate, and incorrigible manner under them; and, on the other, of impatiently, ignorantly, perversely, and unbelievably, shrinking and being disheartened, to the neglect of duty, despairing of relief, or refusing to be comforted. 6. For the Lord does not afflict his children in wrath, demanding satisfaction for their sins; but either, in lesser or greater severity, to manifest his distinguished kindness to them, in embittering their sins, purging from them, and preparing for heaven. 7. If therefore ye be not only visited with afflictions, but enabled, in faith, patience, and perseverance, to submit to, and courageously bear up under them, God, as a kind but infinitely wise Father, is certainly correcting you as his dear children, to promote his own glory and your unspeakable advantage. 8. But if, notwithstanding your remaining sinfulness, ye are indulged in uninterrupted ease and prosperity in the world, and thus exempted from the corrective and instructive chastenings wherewith God exercises the very best of his children; or if ye are not brought to some cordial submission to this wholesome and necessary discipline of his family, God neglects you, as a spurious issue, who are none of his true children, nor heirs of his heavenly inheritance. 9. 1 The figure taken from the Grecian games, where those who strove for the crown were surrounded by a dense crowd of spectators, who gazed upon them with intense interest, encouraging them by their presence and by their plaudits. So the glorified saints of God, who have already gained their crowns, are represented as surrounding the struggling Christians in the arena of life.—P.

ⁿ Alford has brought out the true meaning of this much converted passage. The repentance refers to Esau himself, and it means that he found no way open to reverse what had been done by repentance;
i.e. he had been committed and the consequence entailed irrevocably. He might change, but the penalty could not, from the very nature of the circumstances, be taken off. So that repentance in its full sense, had no place.

And such is the meaning of the locus penitentiae wherever occurring. We do not mean by it an opportunity to repent in a man's own bosom, to be sorry for what he has done, for this may be under any circumstances, and this might have been with Esau; but we mean, a chance, by repenting, to repair—P.

22 But ye are come unto ^emount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an ^finnumerable company of angels,

23 To^g the general assembly and church of the first-born, which are written^h in heaven, and to ⁱGod the judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect, 24 And to Jesus ^jthe mediator of the new covenant,^k and to ^lthe blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than that of Abel.

the days of our youth, we all submitted to the chastisements of those natural parents from whom we derived our frail, corrupt, and mortal bodies, and who, under God, provided for their subsistence and safety, have we not infinitely stronger reasons to submit to the sovereign authority and disposal of him who is the immediate Creator, Preserver, and Governor of our immortal souls, and renews them by his regenerating grace; and meekly, and even thankfully, to accept of his fatherly chastisements for our iniquities, being ashamed of and turning from the causes thereof, that so we may live in holy fellowship with and devotedness to him here, and in heavenly glory with him hereafter? 10. For truly our natural parents, during the short time of our minority, were apt to correct us in an arbitrary manner, through humour, passion, pride, or weakness, without duly aiming at our good, or at least mistaking the proper season or measure of the rod; and all the benefit we received from it was confined to this life. But God corrects us, in infinite wisdom and compassion, in order that he may graciously promote our spiritual and eternal benefit, by subduing and purging away our sin, and rendering us more and more like to himself in knowledge, righteousness, and true holiness. 11. It is true indeed that even fatherly chastenings are in themselves irksome and distressing while we are under them; yet, being sanctified by God, and, in consequence thereof, dutifully endured by us, they render us more wise, humble, watchful, prayerful, more circumspect in our walk, more weaned from this world, and more spiritual, holy, and heavenly-minded than before; and work for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. 12. Since, therefore, these are the gracious ends and advantages of God's correcting you with such manifold sore afflictions, beware of giving way to dejection and despondency under them, or of disheartening one another, but encourage yourselves and each other, in the Lord your God, to hold on in his ways with alacrity, vigour, joy, and triumph. 13. And that your afflictions be suitably improved, in a close adherence to Christ, and a conversation becoming the gospel, remove all hindrances and stumbling-blocks out of your own and your brethren's way to eternal life, that ye and they may walk uprightly, and run steadily in the paths of truth and holiness—lest through temptation, ignorance, or fear of suffering, or the cunning craftiness of Satan and his agents, any weak Christians among you should be turned aside from Christ and his paths of righteousness and grace; but rather let it be your earnest care that such may be duly informed, directed, encouraged, strengthened, and confirmed in the profession, faith, hope, and holiness of the gospel. 14. Study, by all means, to pursue and maintain peace with all men, Jews or Gentiles, friends or enemies, and to promote universal holiness in heart and life, in conformity to the image and will of God—since, without a conscientious regard to this, no man, be his pretences or profession what they will, can be fit for, or, in the nature of things, or according to the constitution of the gospel, ever be admitted to immediate fellowship with Christ and God in him. 15. Therefore let each of you carefully inspect your own principles, temper, and conduct, and watch over one another, lest any of you, through sloth, carnality, or unbelief, should live destitute of an interest in the special favour of God, and of a real work of heart-changing grace; lest any apostate, or any corrupt principle of apostasy in doctrine or practice, offensive to God and ruinous to men, should spring up among you, to the hurt of the infected, and the grief and trouble of others, and thereby many be defiled with erroneous principles, or divisive or profane practices, marring the beauty, purity, peace, and order of the church: 16. Lest any of you who make a profession of Christ's name should abandon himself to whoredom or other uncleanness, or profanely undervalue the special blessings of the new-covenant and gospel state of the church—as Esau, who, for one morsel of meat to gratify his sensual appetite, sold his birthright, and all the peculiar honours and blessings attending it—the consequences of which were very tremendous and irretrievable. 17. For ye cannot but have learned from Scripture, that when he earnestly wished to have recovered it, in order to obtain his father's principal blessing, his most importunate and mournful entreaties were, through the direction of God, absolutely rejected by his father Isaac; and so will every empty professor of Christianity at the last day hopelessly cry for mercy, and bewail his condition, when God shall make him feel the terrible effects of his irreversible sentence of condemnation. 18. The transcendent excellency of the blessings of the gospel above those of the ceremonial dispensation, renders it also the more sinful and dangerous to come short of, or slight them; for ye are not called to covenant or hold fellowship with God in the manner of your fathers, at the material mountain of Sinai, and when covered with flaming fire, thick clouds of smoke, and storms of thunder—which represented that dispensation as carnal and movable, terrible in its threatenings, dark in its manifestations, and severe in its curses and punishments; 19. And where the thunders and the voice by which the ten commandments were published were so terrible, that your fathers entreated that God would not more speak to them in so immediate and awful a manner, but communicate his mind and will by the ministry of Moses, as a mediator between him and them. 20. Conscious to themselves that they were utterly incapable of perfect obedience to God's commandments, or of being justified by their imperfect obedience, they could not even bear up under those dreadful appearances of God, which were displayed in the manner of publishing them; for, as an awful indication of his inaccessibility to sinners, according to the tenor of this law, and of the vengeance to be executed upon the violators of it, if either man or beast but touched Mount Sinai during that solemnity of the Divine Presence, he or it was to be stoned to death, or pierced through and slain. 21. Nay, so alarmingly dreadful were the tokens of the Divine Majesty, that Moses, notwithstanding his eminent sanctity, his office of mediator between God and the people, and all the familiar converse which he had with him, was overwhelmed with the utmost terror and consternation. 22. But, as a prelude of, and as a step of advance towards the inexpressibly delightful happiness of the heavenly and eternal state of the church, ye are brought, under the gospel dispensation, into delightful fellowship with God, in his most excellent state of ordinances, in which is the perfection of beauty and joy of the whole earth, and in which God, who has all life in himself, and bestows all life on others, calls all the people, Jews and Gentiles, into a comely and orderly society, endowed with glorious privileges, and governed and protected by himself—a society the original, nature, privileges, and tendency of which are heavenly, and in which ye are admitted to a most noble and exalted communion, in love and service, with astonishing multitudes of holy angels, 23. And into a spiritual and holy fellowship with the delightful assembly of all true believers in earth or heaven who are born again by the Spirit of God, and adopted into his family as heirs of himself and joint-heirs with Christ, the Lamb slain from before the foundation of the world, and who in these last days is manifested that he might take away the sins of all who believe; and to God the Judge of all, as your reconciled Father, who has accepted you in his beloved Son, and will quickly vindicate your character and reward your services: and, though not yet personally admitted to heaven, ye have spiritual communion in faith, love, joy, worship, and obedience, with all the separated spirits of all the saints of former ages, which, having departed from their bodies, do now live perfectly free from sin, sorrow, temptation, trouble, or danger, and enjoy perfect holiness and happiness in

For if they escaped not who refused him that spake on earth, much more shall not we escape if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven:

26 Whose voice then shook the earth: but now he hath promised, saying, Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but also heaven.

27 And this word, Yet once more, signifieth the removing of those things that are shaken, as of things that are made, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain.

CHAPTER XIII.

1 Divers admonitions, as to charity, 4 to honest life, 5 to avoid covetousness, 7 to regard God's preachers, 9 to take heed of strange doctrines, 10 to confess Christ, 16 to give alms, 17 to obey governors, 18 to pray for the apostle. 20 The conclusion.

LET brotherly love continue.¹

2 Be not forgetful to entertain strangers:

the vision and enjoyment of and likeness to God—being children of the same Father, united to the same Head, Christ, as living members of his mystical body, animated by the same Spirit, and entitled to the same everlasting inheritance; 24. And ye are brought not to Moses, a typical mediator, but to Jesus, the only true and effectual Saviour and Mediator between God and men, with whom the covenant of grace was made, by whom its conditions are fulfilled, and its blessings administered; and ye have communion with God and his Son, angels and people, not by bloody sacrifices of beasts, but by faith in the virtue of Jesus' precious blood, which was shed for many, and is divinely applied to your consciences for justification, sanctification, spiritual comfort, and eternal salvation, and which speaks better things than Abel's own blood, which cried for just vengeance on Cain his murderer, and still speaks warnings of wrath to all persons of a persecuting spirit; nay, better things than the blood of Abel's sacrifice, which only availed for his own acceptance;—whereas this blood of Jesus pleads for pardon and everlasting life to his betrayers and murderers, and to all sorts of sinners who believe in him.—25. Since therefore the gospel state of the church is so incomparably more excellent than the Jewish, as ye regard the glory of God or your own salvation, take heed lest temptations, worldly-mindedness, unbelief, or excessive attachment to ancient ceremonies, should make you reject, refuse, or turn away from that blessed Mediator of the new covenant, who, in the most gracious and endearing manner, speaks to you in his preached gospel, and by the miraculous influences of his Spirit which attend it; for if your fathers, who rebelled against Moses, and refused to receive the laws of God at his mouth, did not escape distinguished punishments, how much more impossible is it that any of us should escape who, through unbelief, reject, despise, and disobey him who is the Lord from heaven, and who, being ascended to heaven, thence publishes to us the glad tidings of eternal salvation, in all their spirituality, light, and glory, by his Word and Spirit. 26. Whose voice of thunder and awful majesty at the giving of the law made Mount Sinai and the people around it to quake and tremble; but now, in order to introduce the full happiness of the gospel dispensation, he has promised to remove and destroy the whole Jewish constitution, civil and ecclesiastic. 27. And his words, yet once more, plainly intimate that the Jewish constitution, in which so many things were made by the hands of men, should be removed, that the glorious and unalterable privileges, worship, and ordinances of the gospel, which are introduced in their stead, might abide till the end of the world. 28. Since therefore we by faith actually receive the blessed and fixed state of the gospel church, with all its privileges and blessings, under Christ our Royal Prince and Head, let us, according to the nature, provisions, and encouragements of this kingdom, hold fast our profession, and, in a careful and conscientious use of the ordinances of Christ, receive and improve those free favours which God has bestowed upon us, to excite and enable us to serve, worship, and glorify him in an acceptable manner through Jesus Christ, under a deep sense of our meanness and vileness, and of his holiness, power, and majesty; 29. For he, who is our covenant God—by visible dispensations, as we are professed Christians, and by special grace, as we are true believers—is still infinitely jealous for his own glory with respect to his worship; and his righteous indignation burns against those who reject him and the blessings of his kingdom, by unbelief and daring contempt.

Ver. 1. 'The sin that doth most readily entangle us'—an allusion to the inconvenience of long flowing robes in a race. The specific sin intended must be unbelief, seeing faith is the particular grace required. C.

Ver. 4. You have not yet suffered as martyrs, as did the prophets of old, and so many of your fellow-Christians in your own days. C.

Ver. 5. A quotation from Pr. 3, 11, 12, which is of great importance, not merely on account of the practical exhortation it contains, but as showing, upon apostolic authority, that God, and not Solomon, is the speaker—a fact of primary value in the interpretation of the book of Proverbs. C.

Ver. 11. This fruit is not yielded to them that suffer chastisement, but to them that are exercised thereby—exercised in watchfulness, self-examination, prayer, and patience. C.

Ver. 14. Without which (holiness) no man shall see the Lord. This specialty is important—as to attain, or even 'follow peace,' may, at times, be utterly impossible, or even unlawful, Jude 3-18. C.

Ver. 18. For ye are not come, &c.: therefore your privileges being so much greater than those of Israel at Sinai, how much greater must be your judgment should you, like so many of them, disbelieve and apostatize. C.

Ver. 21. This saying of Moses is not found in Scripture, but is probably a reference to the unrecorded speech Ex. 19, 19.—Note. Such an instance affords no countenance to the Romish doctrine of unwritten tradition, for this is recorded upon apostolic authority. C.

Ver. 24. According to R. Baxter, Doddridge, &c., 'which crieth not against us as Abel's blood did for revenge, but saveth us by satisfying vindictive justice.' But how could the blood of Abel shed by Cain be said, in this or any sense, to have spoken good things? for that is implied, if any blood speak 'better things.' By 'the blood of Abel,' therefore, must be understood 'the blood of Abel's sacrifice,' which spoke the language of faith in an atonement to be made, whereas 'the blood of sprinkling' speaks of salvation accomplished. C.

REFLECTIONS.—There is need of much care and activity in imitating ancient saints, and especially in imitating Jesus our Forerunner, in persevering faith, patience, and holiness. And great is our encouragement in his success, and from his furnishing, directing, and strengthening us for our work. What kindness and care the Lord shows in afflicting us only for our great honour and benefit! And yet we rarely either relish or behave aright under afflictions, especially if they are severe. There is need of watchfulness, mutual excitement, and assistance in our Christian course, and that the strong should bear with and help the weak.—And delightful is the appearance, and happy the end, when peace and holiness are properly united in our conduct. But, alas! fearful and desperate is the issue of unconcern under the means of grace, or of apostasy from gospel truth.—Delightful is the state of the gospel church, of the new covenant, and of heaven; and how much superior to that under the law and the ceremonies! Firm is its establishment, and sweetly our exalted Redeemer speaks to us therein. With earnest attention and holy awe ought we then to hear his voice, and perform the duties of his worship. No covenant relation or gospel grace can render him less holy, just, jealous, awful, or majestic. And great fear is due unto him in the meeting of his saints.

CHAPTER XIII. Ver. 1. And, as ye have begun, let it be your earnest care and endeavour to maintain an abiding and growing exercise of brotherly love, and an affectionate temper and behaviour, in all offices of friendship one towards another, and towards all your fellow-Christians, who are members of the same spiritual family, children of the same heavenly Father, partakers of the same grace, and heirs together of the same glory. 2. Extend your brotherly compassion also to strangers, especially those who for righteousness' sake are driven from their homes, or go about voluntarily preaching the gospel: receive them into your hearts and houses, and supply them with everything needful. This conduct will at once honour God, relieve your distressed brethren, and tend to your own satisfaction and advantage; for by this generous temper Abraham, Lot, and others, had the honour and benefit of entertaining angels instead of strangers. 3. And as ye have had compassion on me in my bonds, I earnestly recommend to you to bear on your hearts, sympathize with, pray for, and, as far as in you lies, contribute to the relief and comfort of those faithful ministers or professors who are imprisoned, or otherwise persecuted, for righteousness' sake, considering yourselves as members of the same mystical body, and still liable to the like afflictions in your present mortal state. 4. Marriage, when duly entered into by proper persons, ought to be reckoned an honourable ordinance of God, for producing a lawful offspring, for connecting families, and for the good of society, and as a proper remedy against all uncleanness; but fearful are the punishments which they who indulge themselves in whoredom and adultery may expect from God in this world, and especially in the last judgment and eternal state. 5. And to promote your exact performance of the duties which I have mentioned, see that none of you indulge immoderate desires or pursuits after the things of this world, either in excessive or unjust eagerness to obtain them, or in grudging proper expenses for the reasonable support of yourselves and families, or in unwillingness to communicate to the necessities of others; and study always to be heartily pleased with and thankful for the circumstances, however mean and afflicted, into which God, your infinitely wise and gracious Father, puts you; for he himself, who is almighty, all-sufficient, and unchangeable in faithfulness, has, for your encouragement in troubles and temptations, solemnly promised that he will at no time, and on no account, leave you to yourselves or your enemies; but will be with you to strengthen, help, uphold, guide, and bring you to glory. 6. So that, resting by faith upon this comprehensive promise, as applicable to ourselves, we may, and ought, each for himself, with humble confidence, sweet composure, and holy boldness, to avow that, in all our straits, wants, and troubles, the almighty and all-gracious JEHOVAH is our support, succour, and defence, and on our side, to take our part, revive our soul, and overrule everything for our good; and therefore we will not be afraid of the very worst that our most powerful, subtle, and inveterate enemies on earth can do against us. 7. And to promote your performance of such duties, and assured faith in such promises, see that ye pay a due regard to them who have been your faithful ministers and spiritual guides, under Christ their great Lord and Master; and in imitation of their faith and faithfulness, keep in mind, embrace, and adhere to those doctrines, commands, and promises which they, according to the Word of God, delivered to you, as the only rule of your faith, worship, and obedience—seriously reflecting on the peaceful and joyous manner in which they finished their course of holiness, and obtained a happy dismissal from and victory over every trouble and danger by death, and on the glorious scope and object of their ministration and walk. 8. Even Jesus Christ, our anointed Saviour, who, in his divine person, offices, and saving virtue, is unchangeably the same in all the periods of the church, past, present, and to come. 9. Take heed therefore, lest, by departing from this unchangeable Saviour, as preached and exemplified to you by your former pastors, ye should, like ships in a storm, or clouds in the air, be carried away with notions about Jewish ceremonies different from, foreign to, and inconsistent with the simplicity of the gospel of Christ; for it is incomparably better to have your souls fully persuaded of and steadfastly fixed in a dependence on the free favour of God in Christ, revealed in the gospel, for the remission of sin, peace of conscience, and acceptance with God, unto eternal life, and your heart fortified against wavering about the truth and importance of this doctrine by an experience of its renewing, quickening, and comforting efficacy, than to expect that blessings can be obtained by ceremonial ordinances relative to sacrifices, meats, and drinks, which never, for thereby some have entertained angels unaware.

3 Remember^d them that are in bonds, as bound with them; and them which suffer adversity, as being yourselves also in the body.

4 Marriage^e is honourable in all, and the bed undefiled: ⁹but whoremongers and adulterers God will judge.

5 Let^h your conversation be without covetousness; and be content with such things as ye have:² forⁱ he hath said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee.

6 So that we may boldly say, The Lord is my helper, ^kand I will not fear what man shall do unto me.

7 Remember them which have the rule³ over you, who have spoken unto you the word of God: whose faith follow, considering the end of their conversation:

8 Jesus^l Christ the same yesterday, and today, and for ever.

9 Beⁿot carried about with divers and strange doctrines: ^ofor it is a good thing that the heart be established with grace; not with meats, which have not profited them that have been occupied therein.

even under the Old Testament, were of any spiritual and saving advantage to those that were most occupied therein. 10. We members of the New Testament church have an incomparably better altar and sacrifice in our Lord Jesus Christ, which furnishes an incomparable feast of spiritual and eternal blessings to our faith, which they who still cleave to and rely on ceremonial observances have no authority or claim to partake of, any more than the priests had to eat any part of the more noted sin-offerings. 11. For, according to the appointment of God, the bodies of those sacrificed animals, the blood of which was carried by the high-priest into the holy of holies on the great day of national atonement, were wholly burned without the camp. 12. In evident fulfilment of which type, as well as to prefigure his leaving the Jewish nation to miserable ruin, Jesus Christ, our great High-priest, that he might really make atonement for the sins of the whole world, and consecrate all who accept Christ to God by the shedding of his blood, suffered his painful and ignominious crucifixion on Mount Calvary, without the gates of Jerusalem. 13. Let us therefore who profess his name and look for salvation through him, go forth, by faith and hope, desire and love, to him, leaving the Jewish temple, altars, and all the legal institutions pertaining to them, and all the concerns, allurements, and enjoyments of this present world, behind us, as things which we have no further expectations from or concern with, and cheerfully and boldly own and confess a crucified Redeemer, notwithstanding all the shame, contempt, and scorn we may suffer for his sake. 14. For as the city of Jerusalem, which succeeded the camp in the wilderness as the seat of ceremonial worship and political ordinances, will quickly be destroyed by the Romans, so we believers have no durable state of happiness or settled residence in this lower world; but, as strangers and pilgrims on earth, we realize by faith, earnestly desire, look, and long for, and, by all the ways and means of God's appointment, seek for a state of everlasting rest and peace, honour and safety, harmony and delight, in the future blessedness of heaven. 15. In consideration therefore of Christ's having redeemed and consecrated us to God by his own blood, let us at all times, in all circumstances, and for everything, especially for the blessings of redemption, offer up—through him as our only High-priest, Sacrificer, Advocate, and Altar that sanctifies our gifts—the sacrifices of grateful acknowledgments, praises, and thanksgivings. 16. And while your hearts and lips are full of gratitude and praise to God through Christ, be careful to cultivate a merciful, kind, and generous temper, and to abound in all acts of beneficence towards your fellow-creatures, especially the poor; for this, as well as thankful praise, is, through Christ and his only meritorious oblation, very acceptable to God as your reconciled Father. 17. And as ever ye would improve the appointed means of evangelically discharging the above-mentioned duties, not only regard the faith and holiness of your deceased pastors, but religiously regard the doctrines and precepts of those who are, or may hereafter be, your spiritual guides; and, as far as the Word of God permits, receive and submit to their instructions, exhortations, admonitions, and reproofs; for, if faithful, they, with all diligence, watch over you in the Lord, that they may inspect your principles, tempers, and behaviour, and guard and caution you against all iniquity, error, and spiritual danger, and apply themselves to promote the edification and eternal salvation of your souls, in the affecting view of giving an account to Christ, in the last judgment, of their faithfulness, diligence, and success—which they wish to do with joy, that their labours have issued in your eternal welfare; not with grief, that they have issued in your aggravated condemnation and ruin. 18. Sensible of the awfulness and difficulty of our work, and of our insufficiency for it, we ministers of the gospel earnestly request your continual importunate prayers for us—that whatever our success be, we may be found faithful in the day of Christ; for, notwithstanding our sufferings, and the suggestions of our enemies, our consciences bear us witness that we uprightly intend the honour of Christ and the good of souls, and are heartily desirous, and determined, through his strengthening us, to live soberly, righteously, and godly, suitably to our Christian and ministerial character, in all our behaviour towards God or man. 19. And I particularly beg your united prayers for my own direction, support, and protection under my present trials, and for the blessing of God upon the services in which I am now engaged; and that, if it be for his honour, he may deliver me from my present confinement, and allow me an opportunity of paying you another visit, to our mutual comfort and edification.—20. And for this, and all other useful purposes, may our reconciled God, Father, and Friend, the author and giver of all true peace and prosperity—who, by an act of supreme authority, judicially discharged, and raised from the dead our Lord Jesus Christ, as a public person, who had represented and fully satisfied his law and justice for all the world, and whom, in all his offices, he constituted the great Shepherd of his ransomed people, to gather, guard, lead, feed, and bring them safe to eternal glory, through faith in his sufferings and death, whereby he fulfilled the condition, secured the blessings, and confirmed the promises of the new and everlasting covenant of grace; 21. Rectify every disorder of your souls and of your society, that ye may be thoroughly prepared, disposed, and enabled to perform every good work relative to himself, yourselves, or others, in a holy, spiritual, and evangelical manner, from principles of faith and love, according to the rule of his Word, in obedience to his command, and for his glory; and work in you to will and to do everything as in his sight, conformably to his image, agreeably to his holy nature and will, and acceptably to him, as the effects of his own grace through the merits and mediation of Christ.—22. And now let me beseech you, my dear countrymen and fellow-Christians, that, laying aside all prejudice, ye readily receive, consider, and improve these exhortations, consolations, instructions, and cautions which I have given you in this letter, as briefly as the number and importance of the contents, and my ardent concern for your real advantage, could permit. 23. And know, for your comfort, that Timothy, who was for a time my fellow-prisoner in Christ, is now released, and gone from this place upon important business; and, if he come quickly back, I intend, if the Lord grant me a release, to come along with him to visit you. 24. Meanwhile, let such of you to whom this letter comes present my affectionate and Christian respects to all your church-rulers and fellow-Christians who behave as sanctified by the Spirit of God. 25. And may the free love and favour of God through Jesus Christ, with all the blessed manifestations, fruits, and effects of it, attend all and every one of you, for your growth in grace and in the knowledge of Christ, and for your direction, preservation, and comfort, till ye arrive at his heavenly kingdom.

S T. PAUL'S ROAD. [Hebrews, xiii:25.]—The Epistle to Hebrews was written by St. Paul from Italy. We have here a picture of a road over which St. Paul passed directly after landing in Italy. This is about midway between Naples and Puteoli. We are looking toward the east, and when the artist took the picture, Vesuvius, sending up its volume of eternal smoke, was in plain view. Grim and precipitous rocks rise straight up from the ground on either side of the road, but nature has so mantled and clothed these with her flowers and vines that they are relieved of their rugged, barren look. Nature makes it her duty to illuminate with flowering plants every old ruin and rock in this region, thus relieving what is rugged, and softening what is sharp.

REFLECTIONS.—It is very delightful when professed Christians are remarkable for mutual and fervent charity; for kind hospitality, tender sympathy, seasonable liberality; for untainted chastity; for contentedly living on God as their portion; for imitation of deceased ministers; obedience to and fervent prayer for living ministers of Christ; and for steadfast adherence to truth, and readiness to suffer for and serve their dying Redeemer.—What an all-sufficient Saviour is he to, and what marvellous things hath he done for us, to lead us to love, trust in, and cleave to him!—Awful is the office, work, and account of gospel ministers, and infinite is the mercy that a reconciled God of grace, and a risen Saviour and chief Shepherd, have, by the new covenant, provided proper furniture and assistance, as well as rewards, for both ministers and people who uprightly aim at his honour.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE EPISTLE TO THE HEBREWS.

The epistles to the Romans, Galatians, and Hebrews, furnish three great gospel lights for illuminating the dark pages of the law. That to the Hebrews seems to have been directed to parties exclusively Jews, for all its arguments are drawn from purely scriptural sources; and while they evidence the intimate familiarity of the writer with the most minute ordinances of the law, they imply an equal acquaintance with them in the parties to whom they are addressed. The great object of the epistle seems reducible to three points:—1. Christ was superior to angels in nature; 2. To Moses as a lawgiver; 3. To Aaron as a priest; and, if proved superior to them, the conclusion must be inevitable with a Jew—he must therefore be the only true God. C.

THE GENERAL EPISTLE OF JAMES.

James wrote this epistle to his Hebrew brethren of the twelve tribes, who were dispersed in the several provinces of the Roman empire; many of whom had been converted to the Christian faith. The scope thereof is to stir them up to manifest their faith by their good works;—to bear their trials with cheerfulness and patience;—maintain honourable thoughts of God;—watch over their turbulent passions;—receive the word of God with meekness, and put it into practice, ch. i.:—conduct themselves impartially to the rich and kindly to the poor, ch. ii.: to guard against reviling, censorious, and imperious language, ch. iii.: and a litigious, proud, worldly, and envious spirit, and overlooking of God's providence, ch. iv.: and against luxury, injustice, and profane swearing;—and to patience, mutual confession of faults, fervent prayer, and a diligent study to promote one another's spiritual welfare, ch. v.

[James the son of Alphaeus, the brother of Jude, and the near relation of our Lord—called also James the Less, Mar. 15. 40, either on account of inferiority in stature or age to James the son of Zebedee—is generally esteemed the writer of this epistle. Ecclesiastical history, confirmed by the Acts of the Apostles, ch. 12. 17; 15. 13; 21. 13; and some of the Epistles, 1 Co. 15. 7; Ga. 1. 19; 2. 9, 12, represents him as residing generally at Jerusalem superintending the churches, till the time of his martyrdom, A.D. 62. This epistle is found in the ancient Syriac version, which was completed in the end of the first or beginning of the second century. It is alluded to by Clemens Romanus, Hermas, and Ignatius, and directly cited by Origen, Jerome, and Athanasius, which allusions and citations concur with its internal evidence, to attest its inspired character. It is called general, because not addressed to any particular church, but 'to the twelve tribes scattered abroad.' It contains references to Ge. 15. 6; 20. 17; 22. 9-12; De. 9. 18-20; Jos. 2. 1; 1 Ki. 3. 9, 11, 12; 8. 46; 17. 1; 18. 42-45; Job 1. 21, 22; 42. 10; Ps. 94. 12; Is. 41. 8; Je. 29. 12, 13; Mal. 3. 6. C.]

I am led by a close examination of evidence to the conviction, that James, the son of Alphaeus, and James who is styled in Ga. 1. 19 'the brother of the Lord,' were different persons (see Jn. 7. 3; Mat. 13. 55). The former was an apostle; the latter does not seem even to have been a believer in Christ at all till after the resurrection. Immediately on his joining the little Christian church, however, he took a prominent position, being president of the council at Jerusalem. It is my opinion, from the statements made in Scripture, that James was son of Joseph and Mary; and consequently, as stated by Paul, 'the brother of our Lord.' He was the author of this epistle. James' usual place of residence was Jerusalem, and there are several incidental allusions in the epistle which show that it was written in Palestine, ch. 3. 12; 1. 6; 5. 17, 18. Its date cannot be definitely fixed, but probably it was written at a comparatively early period—not later than A.D. 50. P.]

CHAPTER I.

1 We are to rejoice under the cross, 5 to ask patience of God, 13 and in our trials not to impute our weakness, or sins, unto him, 19 but rather to hearken to the word, to meditate in it, and to do thereafter. 26 Otherwise men may seem, but never be truly religious.

JAMES, ^aa servant of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ, ^bto the twelve tribes which are scattered abroad, greeting.

2 My brethren, ^acount it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations;

3 Knowing^a this, that the trying of your faith worketh patience.

4 But^b let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing.

5 If^c any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him.

6 But^a let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea, driven with the wind and tossed.¹

7 For let not that man think that he shall receive any thing of the Lord.

8 A^j double-minded man is unstable in all his ways.²

9 Let the brother of low degree rejoice³ in^k that he is exalted.⁴

fashion of it perisheth: so also shall the rich man fade away in his ways.

12 Blessed^a is the man that endureth temptation: for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him.

13 Let^b no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God: for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man:

14 But^c every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed.

15 Then^d when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin: and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death.

views of difficult passages of Scripture: and never, no not in disputing for gospel truths, indulge a wrathful and passionate treatment of such as differ from you; for unguarded heat and intemperate passion, proceeding from pride, selfishness, and impatience of contradiction, are so far from serving God's righteous cause, or recommending to others the method of justification through the imputed righteousness of Christ, or the practice of righteousness which God's law requires, that they render men incapable of speaking aright for him, and prejudice the minds of others against what is really true and good. 21. Wherefore cast away with abhorrence all these corrupt affections and overflowings of malice, which are exceedingly sinful, and render your souls unfruitful in anything good; and with all humility, modesty, and submission of your understandings, consciences, hearts, and affections to the authority of God in his Word, cordially embrace it with faith and love—that being, as it were, vitally united with your souls, it may, under the influence of the Holy Ghost, be instrumental in conforming your hearts and lives more and more to its own holy likeness, and in efficaciously nourishing you up in grace, till you arrive at the complete possession of the heavenly blessedness. 22. And that it may have this happy effect upon you, see that it influence you to practise its excellent and holy principles in your lives; and never delude yourselves, or cheat yourselves out of your eternal happiness, by giving it a bare hearing, assent, or place in your notions. 23, 24. For, let your pretences be what they will, if you merely hear the truths of God, and do not by faith and love reduce them to practice in your whole conversation, ye can only have some notions and transient convictions of your guilt, depravity, danger, and need of Christ and his grace, and will quickly lay aside your concern, and go on in your impenitence, unbelief, and wicked practices as before. 25. But if you accurately search into the gospel revelation, in which our spiritual deliverance from the broken law and ancient ceremonies is so clearly manifested and perfectly bestowed, and heedfully persevere in the faith and practice of it, living in the exercise of every grace and discharge of every duty answerable to it, ye shall have great happiness at the end of your Christian course. 26. And remember that, if you make ever so much pretence to, show of, or talk about religion, yet, if you indulge yourselves in profane and abusive language, or in railing against, reviling, censuring, or slandering your neighbours, and flatter yourselves as if zeal for God would justify your proud, passionate, bitter, and injurious words, your religion is all a mere farce, and will never do you any real service. 27. Pure religion, that is unmixed with human inventions, or with carnal principles, motives, and ends, and which is according to the law and influence of God, and is exercised as in his sight, and with a view to his glory, disposes and engages Christians to be tender, kind, and compassionate to the needy and distressed, in doing all they can for the relief and comfort of poor fatherless children and destitute widows, and to behave in a holy and circumspect manner, free from the pollutions of this evil and insinuating world, that they may not bring any shame upon their conscience, and disgrace upon their hopes or character, by the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, or the pride of life.

19 Wherefore,³ my beloved brethren, let every man be swift to hear,⁵ slow to speak, slow to wrath:

20 For⁴ the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God.

21 Wherefore lay apart all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness, and receive with meekness the engrafted word, which is able to save your souls.

CHAPTER II.

1 It is not agreeable to the Christian profession to regard the rich, and to despise the poor brethren; 13 rather we are to be loving, and merciful; 14 and not to boast of faith where no deeds are, 17 which is but a dead faith, 19 the faith of devils, 21 not of Abraham, 25 and Rahab.

MY brethren, have not "the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, ¹the Lord of glory, with respect of persons.

Ver. 2. Temptations—trials and tribulations, ver. 3, 12; Lu. 8. 13; 22. 28; 2 Co. 8. 2. This joy in 'temptations' is perfectly consistent with the petition, 'Lead us not into temptation,' for while it is the believer's privilege to pray for exemption from trial before it comes, it is his duty to submit to it when God actually sends it; and, moreover, to rejoice in it as an additional evidence of God's fatherly love, He. 12. 6, and an instrument employed by the Spirit for his advancement in grace, 2 Co. 4. 15, 16, and increase of glory, 2 Co. 4. 17. C.

Ver. 10. Made low in his own estimation—having been enabled to form a just estimate of the fading nature, and brief and uncertain tenure, of all earthly possessions. C.

Ver. 13. When he is tempted. The word 'tempted' here refers not to those trials by poverty or persecution (ver. 9) that arise from Providence, as means of growth in grace, but to those solicitations to sin that arise from an evil heart, and tend to perdition, ver. 14. Both are indeed temptations, but they arise from different sources, and have different ends. C.

Ver. 17. Variableness. An astronomical term descriptive of the varying positions and aspects of the heavenly bodies at different seasons of the year.—Shadow of turning, either the sun's apparent annual turning at the tropics, or the daily turning of the shadow on the dial.—Note, While time is thus measured by changes, God is the Lord; he changes not. Jesus is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever! C.

Ver. 21. Filthiness. The original is applied to the production of ulcers—emblematic of offensive and infectious conversation or example.—Superfluity of naughtiness—the overflowing of a malicious spirit, in which the unregenerate live 'hateful and hating one another.' C.

Ver. 25. The perfect law of liberty. Rather, 'the perfect law—that of liberty.' A reference most probably to Ps. 19. 7, where the word 'law' signifies, not the Mosaic law, but the whole doctrine of revelation. From comparing this passage with Jn. 8. 32, 36; Ro. 8. 21; 2 Co. 3. 17; Ga. 5. 1, 13, 'the law of liberty' will be found to be a name for the whole gospel revelation, because Christ has therein declared us free from the Mosaic ordinances and the wrath and curse of an offended God.—Note, The term 'law' is employed to signify the gospel revelation by the figure antanagiasis, or allusion. See S. Glassius, p. 229, &c., and Carson on Fig. of Speech, p. 80. C.

REFLECTIONS.—God takes care of his people, be they scattered how or where they will. Their tribulations for his name's sake may be great, but should be joyfully borne, as they shall be overruled for the trial and improvement of their present grace, and for the enhancement of their eternal glory. All the fulness of this world is but a fading portion when compared with the exalted and immortal blessedness of humble Christians. Great is the need of spiritual wisdom to direct our behaviour under our diversified trials; and infinite the mercy that our heavenly Father is so ready to grant it if asked. But, alas! many, by their unbelief and inconstancy, hinder the success of their own prayers. Great is the folly of charging our sins on God, who is infinitely and unchangeably holy. Regenerating grace and everything good comes from God's loving kindness, and ought to redound to his praise and honour; but all evil comes from ourselves. What need, then, have we to mortify our lusts, and to watch against our pride, passion, and hard thoughts of God!—With great humility, reverence, and faith, ought we to hear, receive, and improve his Word. And with deep concern should we guard against deceiving our souls in matters of eternal consequence. We have to do with a God who requires truth in the inward parts. It is not high pretences, but a renewed heart and holy life, that can evidence us to be real Christians. And an unruly tongue, disregard of the poor, or attachment to carnal persons and things, may prove us graceless amidst the most splendid glare of a high profession.

CHAPTER II. Ver. 1-7. Beware of taking up with such an empty profession of the truth, and of faith in Jesus Christ, our infinitely glorious and highly exalted Lord, the fountain and bestower of all glory upon us, as leaves you under the power of a partial, unjust, and carnal regard to men—not according to their religious characters, or the merits of their cause, but according to their higher or lower circumstances in life.—A preferring of one richly dressed in your religious meetings or judicial decisions, and pouring contempt upon another who is meanly dressed, can proceed from nothing but a shameful partiality, and a carnal and biased manner of judgment.—And nothing can be more unreasonable among Christians, who cannot but remark that God has generally chosen mean persons to enrich them with faith and all the other graces of his Spirit, and to render them heirs of his heavenly kingdom; while great and rich men are generally unmindful of him, and thus by their own hearts' lusts, to be persecutors of his people and blasphemers of his name and religion. 8-11. If, from a principle of faith in and love to Jesus Christ, your Lord and King, ye obey his high and supreme law, treating all your neighbours, particularly your fellow-Christians, with as much kindness, equity, and mercy, in their various circumstances, as ye wish in like cases to be exercised towards yourselves, ye act a truly honourable and becoming part; but if ye regard persons merely or chiefly on account of their different worldly circumstances, ye stand convicted and condemned by that excellent law of God which requires the most strict regard to equity; and remember that though ye should keep all the other commandments, yet by a single breach in any particular point, ye break the whole law, as ye trample on that divine authority which connects together, and is the foundation of the whole law, and counteract that love which is the fulfilment of the whole law, particularly of the second table of it. 12, 13. Let your whole conversation towards God and men, in disposition, thought, word, and deed, be such as becomes them who live under the dispensation of the gospel, and who expect to be judged at the last day according to the tenor of it; for they who, contrary to its grace and obligations, neglect to exercise compassion towards their poor brethren, shall have a severe sentence of condemnation and wrath fixed on themselves; and they who, from true faith and love, exercise kindness towards them, shall have occasion to rejoice in their own deliverance from condemnation and wrath, and even in the hopes of it; and God's mercy shall, according to the gospel promises, triumph in their salvation. 14-26. And remember that if you have only a notional and lifeless faith, which does not effectually influence you to grant relief to your poor destitute brethren, and to the universal practice of righteousness and holiness, it is really naught, and no better than the faith of devils before God. For how ever insufficient good works be to justify our persons, or entitle us to eternal life before God as a righteous Judge, yet they are absolutely necessary to prove our faith unfeigned, and to manifest us justified before the world, and even in our own consciences—as is manifest from the case not only of Abraham the father of the faithful, but of Rahab the Canaanitish harlot; both of whom manifested their true faith and divine justification by their good works which proceeded therefrom.

Ver. 2. With a gold ring. Rather, 'having his fingers adorned with gold rings'—which might be evidences of riches, or perhaps badges of office and honour. C.

Ver. 4. In the several members of ver. 3 and is uniformly retained and translated 'and'; wherefore it is not easy to discover why and is altogether omitted in the beginning of ver. 4, or why the members of ver. 3 being affirmative, ver. 4 should be rendered interrogative. Would it not be more literal, and in accordance with the use of the word by James (ch. 1. 6), as well as in other places (e.g. Ro. 14. 23), to translate it thus:—'And have not wavered' (or hesitated) 'within yourselves, and have become judges of' (who have adopted) 'erroneous reasonings.'—Note, Luther, in the German, retains the 'and,' and renders the verse affirmatively. C.

Ver. 8. Royal law. 'Pre-eminent law,' as the word βασιλική frequently signifies.—Note, The law of brotherly love our Lord delivers as 'a new commandment' (Jn. 13. 34; see note)—a commandment not new in principle, but new in measure; for the Mosaic law had said, 'Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself;' but Christ hath said, 'Love one another as I have loved you.' See also Jn. 15. 12. C.

Ver. 13. Against judgment. Rather, 'over judgment.' Not as if mercy were contrary to judgment; for in Christ 'mercy and truth have met together; righteousness and peace have embraced each other;' but the words represent that 'joy in heaven' which the holy angels, together with all 'who have obtained mercy,' feel and express 'over every sinner that repenteth,' who has fled to mercy in Christ, and escaped from the 'judgment to come.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—Decent respect is due to persons on account of their civil stations. But to prefer the rich, graceless, and gay, as such, especially in matters of religion or equity, is highly unchristian, and striking against the whole authority of the lawgiver, and that universal love required in his law, amounts to a breaking of all his commandments, and leaves little hopes of mercy to the guilty in the great day of account. It is chiefly among the poor that true Christians are found, and God's grace enriches and ennobles them. Why, then, should we despise them! Rich persons are too generally blasphemers of God's name and religion, persecutors of his saints, and oppressors of their inferiors. Why, then, should we partially caress them! It is not fine words of pity and compassion, and empty wishes of relief, but needful supplies, according to our ability, that God demands from us to our poor brethren, and in denying these we basely act the part of inhuman hypocrites. The best notions and professions of faith without good works thereby produced, are but dead, devilish, and abominable before God. No good works of ours can indeed justify our persons before

2 For if there come unto your assembly¹ a man with a gold ring, in goodly apparel, and there come in also a poor man in vile raiment;

3 And^a ye have respect to him that weareth the gay clothing, and say unto him, Sit thou here in a good place;² and say to the poor, Stand thou there, or sit here under my footstool:

4 Are^a ye not then partial in yourselves, and are become judges of evil thoughts?

5 Hearken, ^amy beloved brethren, ^bhath not God chosen the poor of this world ^crich in faith, and heirs of the ^dkingdom, which he hath promised to them that love him?

6 But ^eye have despised the poor. Do not rich men oppress you, and draw you before the judgment-seats?

7 Do^a not they blaspheme that worthy name by the which ye are called?

8 If ye fulfil the ^broyal law, according to the scripture, ^c"Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself," ye do well:

9 But^a if ye have respect to persons, ye commit sin, and are convinced^b of the law as transgressors.

10 For^a whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one ^bpoint, he is guilty of all.

11 For ^ahe that said,⁵ Do not commit adultery, said also, Do not kill. Now if thou commit no adultery, yet if thou kill, thou art become a transgressor of the law.

12 So^a speak ye, and so do, as they that shall be judged by ^bthe law of liberty.⁶

13 For^a he shall have judgment without mercy that hath showed no mercy; and mercy ^b"rejoiceth" against judgment.

14 What ^adoth it profit, my brethren, ^b"though a man say he hath faith, and have not works?" can faith save him?

15 If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, 16 And^a one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ^bye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what ^cdoth it profit?

17 Even^a so faith,⁸ if it hath not works, is dead, being alone.⁹

14 But if ye have^a bitter envying and strife in your hearts, glory not; and lie not against the truth.

15 This^b wisdom descendeth not from above, but is earthly, sensual,^c devilish.

16 For^d where envying and strife is, there is confusion^e and every evil work.

17 But^f the wisdom that is from above is first pure,^g then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality,^h and without hypocrisy.

18 Andⁱ the fruit of righteousness^j is sown in peace of them that make peace.

CHAPTER IV.

1 We are to strive against covetousness, 4 intemperance, 5 pride, 11 detraction, and rash judgment of others: 13 and not to be confident in the good success of worldly business, but mindful ever of the uncertainty of this life, to commit ourselves and all our affairs to God's providence.

FROM whence^a come wars and^b fightings among you? come they not hence, even of your lusts^c that^d war in your members?

2 Ye^e lust, and have not: ye kill,^f and desire to have, and cannot obtain: ye fight and war, yet ye have not, because ye^g ask not.

3 Ye^h ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon yourⁱ lusts.

created after the image of God, in knowledge, righteousness, and holiness, and are still formed in some likeness to him in the natural faculties of their soul; and many of them, by his grace, renewed after his image in regeneration.—Nothing can be more contrary to our Christian obligations, profession, and character, or even more unnatural and absurd in itself. 13. If any of you therefore would approve yourselves to God, and show yourselves to the world as truly wise and prudent, and endowed with a true knowledge of yourselves, of Christ, and of God, his laws and ways, let them earnestly practise all manner of good works in the whole course of their conversation, with a meek and humble spirit. 14. But never be fond or boast of envious, quarrelsome, and contentious dispositions and designs, which will torment your souls, and sting and wound others, and are directly contrary to the meek and humble spirit of the gospel. Never dare, either in thought, word, or deed, to varnish over such wickedness, or to pretend to sincerity and prudence in indulging it; 15, 16. For, think as you will, this wisdom springs not from, nay, is detested by God, and arises from an excessively earthly and sensual inclination to worldly enjoyments, and is excited by the devil, bears his image, delights his heart, and promotes his mischievous designs and interests; for whenever an envious, censorious, and litigious spirit is indulged, and breaks forth in words, it tends to disturb and destroy the peace and happiness of a man's own soul, and of all about him, and leads to everything wicked. 17. But that heavenly and divine wisdom which God bestows leads men to a strict regard to purity of doctrine and manners, in heart, speech, and behaviour; it disposes to peacefulness, mildness, and courteousness in our treatment of others; it renders our mind open to conviction, easily persuaded to that which is good, and attentive to all considerations, forward to condescension and forbearance, and inclined to acts of kindness and compassion to the poor and afflicted; it renders us impartial and generous in judging and condemning of others; and sincere, free from any allowed dissimulation. 18. And this righteous, holy, and peaceable temper and conversation, by the grace of God, issues in our own and our neighbour's happiness in this world, and in our everlasting happiness and peace hereafter.

Ver. 2. Perfect, in its absolute sense, is applicable to God alone; in its comparative sense, it is the highest endowment of man, the chiefest grace of the Spirit. See it prophetically described as a special mark of the Messiah, Is. 42. 19.

Ver. 6. The course of nature. The whole circle of human life from boyhood to old age, which, unless delivered from the power of Satan, and kept by the power of God, is continually excited by surmises, misrepresentations, falsehoods, and calumnies, whereby the fires of jealousy, envy, wrath, and malice, are continually fed, and frequently blown into a fierce and devouring flame. C.

REFLECTIONS.—An assuming, arrogant, and censorious temper fearfully presages our future condemnation to hell. And the deeper sense we have of our own sinfulness and weakness, the less rash shall we be in condemning others.—It is very honourable and advantageous for Christians to have grace to govern their tongue. But how hard to rule it! and yet, if ungoverned, it kindles and spreads infinite and eternal mischiefs all around. Scarcely can anything be more inconsistent with the character of a Christian, more dishonourable to God, or more ruinous to men, than an unbridled tongue, and an envious malicious heart.—But great is the excellency of true and spiritual wisdom, in its origin, nature, properties, and fruits.

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 1-3. To dissuade you from a carnal and wrathful temper, seriously think how all the strifes and contentions which prevail among you take their rise from indulged lusts; and how the indulgence of corrupt affections renders your very prayers altogether unsuccessful, and wicked in their principles, motives, and ends. 4. And remember that whosoever of you professed Christians indulge such eager appetites after the pleasures and enjoyments of this world as alienate your hearts from God, are guilty of an adulterous breach of covenant with him, and of admitting his rival into your heart instead of him; for an excessive fondness for the things of this world, and of conformity to worldly men, stands in direct opposition to the holy nature and will of God, and is utterly inconsistent with that supreme love and affection which ye owe to him. 5. Do ye think the Scriptures of the Old Testament unworthy of your regard, which so strongly remonstrate against pride, envy, and covetousness, and represent our inward corruptions as so impetuous in their pursuits after earthly things, as to make us envy every one who hath more than ourselves?—Or do ye think that the Spirit of God, who dwelleth in all of us who are true believers, would excite such a worldly disposition in us! 6. No, he, and God by him, increases our humility, self-denial, love, and goodness, and thus disengages us from the gratification of corrupt affections; and therefore, to encourage our hopes and prayers for all needful assistance, he declares in his Word that he sets himself to oppose and debase them who are ambitious, haughty, self-conceited, and self-sufficient, placing their whole confidence and happiness in the things of this life, or in their own wisdom, strength, or deserts; but freely bestows more and more grace, comfort, and blessings, upon such as have humble thoughts of themselves, and of the emptiness of all earthly enjoyments, and place their whole happiness in himself.

7. In humble dependence therefore on his free favour and gracious influence, yield up yourselves obedientially and unreservedly to his direction, disposal, authority, and will, manifested in his Word and providence, and be content with such things as ye have. And if Satan, by subtle devices or furious temptations, attempts to dishearten you in or draw you off from the ways of duty, give not place to him, but exercise all your graces in opposition to him, and he will flee from you as a conquered enemy. 8. And if ye would maintain your ground, prevail against and get rid of temptations; be much employed in humble and fiducial approaches to God, through Christ, in the way of duty, and he will graciously come near to you, directing, relieving, and comforting you according to his promise. And whereas, through the influence of Satan and your own hearts, some of you have rendered yourselves notorious sinners before God, see that by faith ye apply the Word, blood, and Spirit of Christ for your purification, and beg of him to reform you from violence, murder, extortion, bribery, and other like wickedness of practice; and to purge your hearts from pride, envy, covetousness, and other indwelling lusts, and so thoroughly renew you in heart and life, that your cares and services may no longer be divided between him and the world. 9, 10. Instead of that jollity, mirth, and gaiety with which ye have shamefully gratified your sensual appetites, apply yourselves to deep penitential sorrow and evangelical religious mourning, on account of your provocations, and for fear of God's judgments—deeply humbling yourselves before him, whom ye have so often and so highly offended, and who knows and principally regards the secret workings of your hearts; and he, in his own time and way, will revive your drooping souls with a sense of his pardoning and the influence of his recovering grace, and will raise you above all your fears and troubles, and exalt you to honour and comfort in this world, and to immortal glory in the next. 11. And always carefully avoid rash censuring and reviling of one another, aggravating and needlessly exposing one another's infirmities, or raising and propagating false reports to each other's prejudice; for, if ye slander, rashly judge, and condemn your neighbours or fellow-Christians, ye practically condemn the wisdom, equity, and holiness of God's law, which forbids such conduct, and perhaps allows what you condemn; and if once ye pretend to censure God's law, ye plainly renounce all obedience to it, and exalt yourselves as judges above it. 12. When the almighty God, who has infinite power and authority to reward the obedient

CHAPTER V.

4 Ye^o adulterers and adulteresses,⁵ know ye not that ^athe friendship of the world is enmity with God? whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God.

5 Do ye think that the scripture saith in vain, The^e spirit that dwelleth in us lusteth ⁶to envy?

6 But he giveth more grace. Wherefore he saith, ⁷God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace unto the humble.

7 Submit^t yourselves therefore to God. ⁸Resist the devil, and he will flee from you.

8 Drawⁿ nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you. ⁹Cleanse your hands, ye sinners; and purify your hearts, ye double-minded.

9 Be^r afflicted, and mourn, and weep: let your laughter be turned to mourning, and your joy to heaviness.

10 Humble^a yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you up.

11 Speak^r not evil one of another, brethren. He that speaketh evil of his brother, and judgeth his brother, speaketh evil of the law,³ and judgeth the law: but if thou judge the law, thou art not a doer of the law, but a judge.

12 There^s is one lawgiver,⁹ who is able to save and to destroy: ¹⁰who art thou that judgest another?

13 Go^a to now, ye that say, To-day or tomorrow we will go into such a city, and continue there a year, and buy and sell, and get gain:

14 Whereas, ye know not what shall be on the morrow. ¹¹For what is your life? It is¹ even a vapour, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away.

15 For that ye ought to say, ¹²If the Lord will, we shall live, and do this, or that.

16 But^u now ye rejoice in your boastings: all such rejoicing is evil.

17 Therefore^s to him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin.

and punish the disobedient, is the alone Lawgiver and Lord of men's consciences, who can enact and execute laws as he pleases, how presumptuous is it for you, foolish, weak, fallible, and sinful creatures, to take upon you to judge and condemn any for that in which they are accountable only to God? 13, 14. And why are any of you so self-sufficient, and insensible of your dependence on him, as to promise yourselves long life or prosperity, and much trade on earth, without regard to him, when you, and all that you have, are in the most precarious and uncertain condition, entirely dependent on his sovereign will and providence, and may suddenly and unawares be cut off. 15-17. Nothing ought therefore to be either projected or pursued by you but in express submission to the favour, direction, assistance, and blessing of God; and your sinful and confident boasting, as if your life and transactions were independent of him, is extremely unchristian and shameful; and it is the more aggravated in your case, as the Scripture, as well as your own consciences, certainly testify to you that an humble and submissive manner of forming and declaring your intentions is alone right and good, acceptable to God, and suited to the relations in which he stands to you.

REFLECTIONS.—What dreadful work do the lusts of pride, covetousness, and envy make in the world! They create contention and strife in societies, religious or civil. or even in a man's own mind; excite wicked desires and attempts; lead to the neglect of prayer, or sinful and carnal requests; and produce an adulterous alienation of the heart from God, by an undue attachment to the influences of his Spirit, and inconsistent with our dependence on him, either as men or Christians.—Extensive is the work of a Christian. Humbly should he submit to and hold familiar fellowship with God; resolutely guard against and resist the temptations of Satan; purify his heart and conversation, by a believing improvement of Jesus' Word, Spirit, and blood; humbly bewail and repent of his sinfulness; guard against all reviling or rash censuring of others, from a regard to God's authority; and in all his ways acknowledge and resignedly depend on his sovereign will.

CHAPTER V. Ver. 1. Be alarmed, ye rich, unbelieving Jews. Dreadful calamities shall quickly overtake you except ye repent, and bereave you of whatever you have on earth, yea, of life itself, in the general destruction of your nation; which shall also be followed with inexpressibly more dreadful miseries in hell. 2, 3. Your ill-gotten and ill-employed treasures being cursed of God, instead of profiting you in the day of his wrath, shall, by the loss of them, torment your minds; shall tempt your enemies to ravage your country, pillage your houses, and murder your 1 Wicked rich men are to fear God's wrath. 7 We ought to be patient in afflictions, after the example of the prophets, and Job: 12 to forbear swearing, 13 to pray in adversity, to sing in prosperity: 16 to acknowledge mutually our several faults, to pray one for another, 19 and to reduce a straying brother to the truth.

GO to^a now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you.

2 Your^b riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten.

3 Your^c gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days.

4 Behold,^a the hire of the labourers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth: and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of sabaoth.

5 Ye^e have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton; ye have nourished your hearts, as in ^aa day of slaughter.

6 Ye^b have condemned and killed the just; and he doth not resist you.¹

7 Beⁱ patient² therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive ^{the}early and latter rain.

8 Be^k ye also patient; stablish your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh.

9 Grudge not³ one against another, brethren, lest ye be condemned: ¹behold, the Judge standeth before the door.

10 Take, my brethren, the prophets, who have spoken in the name of the Lord, ⁴for an example of suffering affliction, and of patience.

11 Behold, ⁵we count them happy which endure. ²Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have seen the end of the Lord; that ⁶the Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy.

12 But^r above all things, my brethren, ⁷swear u Profane swearing is the most common and palpable forms of sin in the East. The very language is so pious by it. One seldom hears a sentence uttered, or sees one written in any ordinary book, without some form of oath or imprecation. One never hears a simple affirmative from an Arab; it is always accompanied by an oath—often by a form of imprecation that makes one shudder. It was this wicked practice, no doubt, which called forth the solemn command of James.—P.

persons; and shall occasion you more terrible torments in hell. 4. The Most High, who ruleth over all creatures, has heard the complaints of your poor labourers, whom ye have fraudulently deprived of their wages, and will render that which ye have unjustly withheld from them a plague and mean of terrible destruction to yourselves. 5, 6. Ye have luxuriously and sensually rioted on the bounties of God's providence, as if every day had been a festival; and, under pretence of law, have condemned and murdered the righteous Lord Jesus and many of his faithful servants, who never offered you the least violence or injury. But the time is at hand when God shall fully punish these and your other abominations.—7, 8. As God therefore permits and overrules these unrighteous persecutions for the trial of your faith and patience, do you, my Christian brethren, labour to bear them without murmuring at his holy hand therein; and with patience, meekness, fortitude, and calm composure of mind, steadfast faith, and resolution to bear testimony for him and his ways, wait till the Lord Jesus, by executing his purpose on your nation, deliver you from their cruel persecutions, and, by death and the last judgment, usher in your complete and everlasting happiness. 9. And since he, the great Judge of the world, is so ready to punish your persecutors, let none of you expose yourselves to a share in their condemnation and punishment, by venting any envious, fretful, and revengeful not, neither by heaven, neither by the earth, neither by any other oath: but let your yea be yea, and your nay, nay; lest ye fall into condemnation.

13 Is any among you afflicted? let him pray. Is any merry? let him sing psalms.⁵

14 Is any sick among you? let him call for the^a elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord:

15 And^a the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him.

The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much.

17 Elias was a man^b subject to like passions as we are,⁶ and he prayed earnestly⁷ that it might not rain; and it rained not on the earth by the space of three years and six months.

18 And^a he prayed again, and the heaven gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruit.

19 Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him; complaints or wishes against them for the injuries they do you. 10, 11. And to encourage you to such a becoming conduct, reflect much on the behaviour of the ancient prophets under their sore trials—with what patience and courage they endured the manifold persecutions which they suffered for adherence to the truth. And learn, especially from the singular afflictions of Job, his marvellous patience under them, and the merciful issue thereof in redoubled honours and happiness, what a God of infinite compassion and kindness ye have to uphold you under, carry you through, and give you the blessed fruits of all your trials and afflictions.

20 Let him know, that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way^c shall save a soul from death, and shall^b hide a multitude of sins.⁸

12. As your unbelieving brethren are so dreadfully addicted to that unprofitable, Heaven-daring, and soul-ruinous sin of profane swearing, I beseech you earnestly to guard against every rash, passionate, or unnecessary oath, whether by God himself or by his creatures; and let your whole conversation be so evidently honest and upright that your plain affirmation or denial may gain you sufficient credit. 13. If any of you be in afflicted circumstances, let him exercise himself much in solemn and fervent prayer, for support under, relief from, and a sanctified improvement of them. And if any be surrounded with the blessings of providence and grace, let him express his gratitude to the God of his mercies in cheerful thanksgivings and praises. 14, 15. If any of you appear to have any bodily distemper inflicted on him, as the punishment of some remarkable sin, let him desire the rulers of the church, especially such as are vested with miraculous powers, to meet together and pray over him; and let them, in the name and authority of the Lord Jesus, from regard to his appointment, and in dependence on his influence, anoint him with oil, as a mean of his recovery; and in answer to their prayer of faith Jesus Christ shall render the means effectual for his relief, and shall, through the man's own exercise of faith in his blood, pardon the sinful cause of the trouble, as to its temporal or eternal punishment. 16-18. Always show a readiness to acknowledge whatever offences you have given one to another, or even other sins which lie heavy on your consciences, in order that ye may cheerfully forgive, sympathize with, and affectionately and earnestly pray for each other, as your distresses of body or mind require. And to encourage your fervent prayer for one another, observe, from the miraculous drought or rain procured by Elijah's prayer, what a wonderful power and success the prayer of true and lively saints hath, when, under the influence of the Holy Ghost, it is excited, conducted, and animated by a sacred warmth of heart. 19, 20. And if any of you are successful in your endeavours for the recovery of some apostate or backslider from the truth, and from his erroneous notions or sinful practices, thank God for it, as a high honour, that thereby you are made instrumental in the salvation of an immortal soul, in recovering him from spiritual and eternal destruction, and in leading a neighbour into the way of life, pardon, and peace; and thereby preventing a multitude of sins which he and others, tempted by his example and influence, would have committed.

Ver. 1. Ye rich men. Not those who are rich, and have learned to use their riches, but those who trust in riches, live in luxury, and forget their God. C.

Ver. 2. Riches. Not silver or gold, but 'corn, and wine, and oil,' the emblems of luxury, 'corrupted' through keeping for revelry, instead of being timeously distributed in generous charity, ver. 5. C.

Ver. 5. As in a day of slaughter. When all your vengeful passions being let loose, ye revelled in the death of the defenceless. C.

Ver. 7. Be patient. The simple mention of the word 'patient' shows that the apostle is addressing the sufferers. C.

Ver. 14. This 'anointing' was evidently the symbol of miraculous healing, for the person prayed for was to be certainly 'raised up' as evidence that the sin of which the sickness was the punishment was as certainly forgiven as the disease was healed, 1 Co. 11. 29, 30; Mar. 2. 5, 10, 11. Therefore, to continue the ordinance of anointing without the miraculous power, and for the purpose of healing, is an act of wilful perversion, and not of divine obedience. C.

Ver. 16. Confess, &c. This mutual confession is as general as mutual prayer; and to confine confession to him who is called priest, as the Romanists do, is, by consequence, to confine prayer for the sick to him also: an absurdity this against which nature and revelation equally protest.—Effectual fervent prayer. Rather, 'the earnest supplication.' Some would render it 'the unwrought prayer'—inwrought by the Spirit; but all Christian prayer must be so, Ro. 8. 26, 27; and there appears no sufficient authority for such translation, nor does the context point to it. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Worldly riches are an unavoidable snare to a covetous carnal heart. Often are they abused in luxury and oppression, and hasten their owners into eternal perdition. For the cries of the poor and oppressed infallibly draw down the vengeance of Heaven upon their oppressors. There is great need of patience in this world, where wickedness and distress abound. Nor, as repeated instances manifest, can anything issue more honourably or happily.—It is base and criminal for any, but especially professed Christians, to swear rashly, ignorantly, unrighteously, or in common conversation.—But very honourable is it to accommodate our religion to our lot; to give ourselves to effectual fervent prayers for ourselves and others; to be always ready humbly to acknowledge our own faults, and carefully to prevent or reclaim our neighbours from sin. Lord, if this be practical Christianity, how little of it is to be found on earth!

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE GENERAL EPISTLE OF JAMES.

The abrupt termination of this epistle, so unlike the apostolic formality of its opening, has led many to conclude that it was never finished, but was cut short by the sudden martyrdom of the apostle. The conjecture is a probable one, and, whether accurate or not, may well serve to remind every man to 'work while it is called to-day.'

The mind of the attentive reader can scarcely fail to be struck with the peculiarity of the style, which may be called calenated: that is, the third verse, by the word 'trying,' is linked, as it were, into the second, by the word 'temptations;' the fourth into the third verse by the word 'patience;' the fifth into the fourth by the words 'wanting' and 'lack,' &c.—a peculiarity that continues to be largely exemplified throughout the whole epistle. Nor are peculiarities without their value. (1) Peculiarities of style are well suited to peculiarities of minds; and he that may be little impressed with one mode of diction, may have his attention rivetted by another. In this respect nature and revelation agree. Nature presents an object of study and interest to every peculiarity of taste—a similar variety is presented in the teaching of the Spirit. (2) Peculiarities of style serve to demonstrate that the apostles were not imitators of each other; and, if compared with all pretended revelations—in which the stamp of one mind, or the concerted plan of two or more, is easily and certainly detected—the mere variety of Scripture style will go far to prove that the writers have delivered no 'cunningly devised fable.' That they wrote independently of each other, at different times and places, and with different objects, while yet their agreement is such, and so complete, that it can be rationally accounted for upon no other principle than that they wrote under the guidance of one common Spirit. (3) The apparent discrepancy between Paul and James, on the subject of justification by faith, will also serve, when carefully examined, to illustrate the same fact—the most accurate agreement without the possibility of concert;—for had there been concert, there could never have been such an approach to apparent contradiction; while it will further demonstrate the wisdom of God in the progressive development of the Scriptures, whereby the obscurities of one book are illustrated by the light of another, and the misapprehension or abuse of one doctrine corrected by a practical commentary, so soon as the misapprehension or abuse had budded, and before it could take root in the field of the church. C.

THE FIRST EPISTLE GENERAL OF PETER.

Peter had been originally a fisherman in Galilee, but was among the first called by Jesus Christ to be one of his attendants and missionaries. About A.D. 64 or 66 he wrote this first epistle to the Jewish converts scattered through Lesser Asia, or other parts of the Roman empire, and the second about two years after. The scope of the first is, (1) To establish them in the faith of Christ, and to comfort them under their severe persecutions, ch. i.; 2. 1-8. (2) To direct and animate them to an honourable, conscientious, and edifying behaviour in a faithful discharge of all the duties of their civil or family relations, ch. 2. 9-25; 3. 1-7; and to the exercise of brotherly love, personal holiness, and a faithful discharge of their respective duties in the church, ch. 3. 8-22; iv. v. The scope of the second is to represent how gospel privileges and revelations ought to be improved in a growth in holiness of heart and life, ch. i.; to warn them against the seduction of false teachers, and all apostasy from the truth, ch. ii.; and to represent the proper preparation for Christ's appearance to destroy the Jewish nation, and to judge the world, ch. iii.

[That Simon Peter, or Cephas, the son of Jonas,—originally a fisherman of Galilee, and called to be an apostle of our Lord—was the author of this epistle has always been admitted; and its genuineness and canonical authority are confirmed by its being referred to or quoted by Polybius, Clemens Romanus, the Martyrs of Lyons, Theophilus of Antioch, Papias, Irenæus, Clemens Alexandrinus, and Tertullian. It is addressed to 'the strangers scattered abroad,' more literally to 'the strangers of the dispersion,' which seems peculiarly to point to the Jews (see also ch. 2. 9-12; 4. 3, 4) as the special objects of his ministry, Ga. 2. 7, 8. In matter and object it is nearly akin to the epistle of James; adverting to the persecutions by which the Christians were assailed, and exhorting to patience, perseverance, and holiness. Of the history of Peter, subsequent to his residence at Antioch, A.D. 46, nothing is related in the New Testament. Jerome, however, states that he suffered martyrdom at Rome, in the end of the reign of Nero, A.D. 67 or 68; and that his remains were interred in that city, near the triumphal way;—a statement corroborated by Procopius, Hist. p. 195. On the other hand it has been argued, from the internal evidence of the Acts and Epistles, as well as from the want of sufficient external authority from early history, that Peter never was at Rome. But such historical questions are of little importance to him whose 'religion is the Bible,' and who seeks for the marks and authority of the true church of Christ, not in the 'vain traditions' of uninspired men, but in the imperishable records of inspired evangelists and apostles. See Jn. 20. 30, 31; 1 Ti. 3. 16, 17. In the course of the epistle, the apostle alludes to the following portions of the Old Testament:—Ge. 6. 7; 18. 12; Ex. 19. 5, 6; De. 7. 6; Is. 10. 12; 28. 16; 40. 6, 8; 48. 9, 10; liii. 57. 15; 61. 6; Je. 23. 22; Eze. 9. 6; 34. 4; Da. 2. 44; 8. 13; 9. 26; Ho. 1. 9, 10; Hag. 2. 7; Zec. 13. 9. C.]

CHAPTER I.

1 He blesseth God for his manifold spiritual graces: 10 showing that the salvation in Christ is no news, but a thing prophesied of old: 13 and exhorteth them accordingly to a godly conversation, forasmuch as they are now born anew by the word of God.

PETER, an apostle of Jesus Christ, to the strangers scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia,

2 Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ: Grace unto you, and peace, be multiplied.

3 Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead,

4 To an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you,

5 Who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time.

6 Wherein ye greatly rejoice, though now for a season, if need be, ye are in heaviness through manifold temptations:

7 That the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honour and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ:

8 Whom having not seen, ye love; in whom, though now ye see him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory:

CHAPTER I. Ver. 1, 2. I, Simon Peter, whom Jesus Christ has constituted his inspired messenger, especially to my own countrymen—to you my Jewish fellow-Christians, dispersed by divine providence through the several countries of Lesser Asia, whom God the Father has, through faith in his Son, made partakers of eternal happiness, through the renovation of their hearts and lives by the Holy Ghost, and the application of Jesus' blood to their consciences for the remission of their sins,—wish the most diversified, manifest, abundant, and ever-increasing discoveries of God's free love and favour, and the fullest enjoyment of all prosperity, spiritual and temporal. 3, 4. Eternal and high praises, thanksgivings, and adorations, be to that great JEHOVAH, who is the God and Portion of our Lord Jesus Christ, as Man and Mediator, and his Father, as he is the second person in the Godhead—that, according to the wonderful riches and multitude of his free and tender mercy, he has, through the virtue of the death and resurrection of Christ, by his Spirit, made possible the principles of faith and hope, and every other saving grace, and thereby rendered us capable of and fitted for, as well as by adoption entitled to, an inexpressibly pure, permanent, rich inheritance of heavenly glory, inconceivably preferable to any in the earthly Canaan; and which, by the immutable purpose and promise of God, and the merits and intercession of Christ, is solely laid up in heaven for you who through faith accept Christ; 5. Who, notwithstanding your weakness, and the innumerable temptations and dangers which surround you, are, by God's almighty power, and through the continued exercise of faith on Christ and his Word, tenderly preserved in your gracious state, nature, and course, till you obtain the full and everlasting deliverance from all evil, and enjoyment of everything good, which shall be manifested in all the riches and delights thereof in the last judgment; 6. In the believing views and hopes of which preservation and eternal glory ye do, and may, and will hereafter, exceedingly rejoice and exult, though, in this present imperfect state of weakness, sin, and sorrow, if it be needful for God's glory and your own good, ye are grievously, though comparatively lightly, afflicted by a variety of trials from sin, Satan, the world, and your own weakness; 7. In order that your faith and other graces, after being proved genuine, and greatly excited, improved, and increased, may, at the appearance of Christ to destroy your nation, and especially to judge the world, be evidently and honourably manifested, approved, and graciously rewarded with honour and glory by him: 8. Whom, though ye never saw in the days of his humiliation on earth, yet, through the manifestations of him to you by his Word and Spirit, ye sincerely love, highly esteem, and delight in; and though he is at present quite beyond the reach of your bodily sight, yet, discerning, realizing, and appropriating him to yourselves, and trusting in him by faith, ye, in the most ravishing manner, rejoice, exult, and glory in his person, offices, relations, and fulness, and in the assured hopes of your eternal and immediate enjoyment of him, 9. Of which ye have already received the pledges, earnest, and beginnings, and which ye shall, in a little time, fully receive as a gracious reward, answerable to all the expectations of your faith—even the complete salvation and eternal happiness of your whole person, soul and body. 10. Into the nature, qualities, and circumstances of which complete and glorious salvation, the ancient prophets—who many ages ago foretold what rich and eminent blessings of light and grace, pardon, purity, peace, hope, and joy, should be manifested to and conferred upon you by the gospel—made the most diligent inquiry; 11. Searching out the particular circumstances and manner of those things which the Holy Ghost, proceeding from and imparted by Christ to them, had solemnly and infallibly declared concerning Jesus' incarnation, humiliation, exaltation, and work, and concerning the effusion of himself, the erection and state of the gospel church, and the holiness, comfort, and happiness of Christ's true members, as believing in his atoning sacrifice: 12. Unto whom it was suggested by the Holy Ghost, that, however much their own souls might be refreshed, and their faith supported by their predictions, yet they were not to be fulfilled in their times, or the blessings conferred on themselves, but on us who live under the New Testament dispensation, and to whom they are declared and offered by apostles and others, who publish the gospel of God's grace in all its light, liberty, grace, and glory; which has been divinely attested and confirmed by the plentiful outpouring of the Holy Spirit, in his gifts and graces, by our exalted Redeemer, according to his promise; and which unfolds things so excellent, profound, and engaging, that even the holy angels earnestly pry into the mysteries contained in it. 13. Having therefore such revelations and encouragements relative to future and eternal blessedness, never wax weary or faint in your minds, but, shaking off the cares and encumbrances of this life, moderating your appetites to and making a temperate use of the things of this world, with holy vigilance carefully maintain a sincere, unshaken, growing, and persevering trust and hope in Christ, to the end of your days, temptations, and conflicts; with joyful confidence and assured expectation of all that blessedness and glory of the heavenly state which is now graciously revealed in the gospel, and shall be freely bestowed upon you at his second coming. 14. Behave therefore answerably to your spiritual, high, and noble birth, privileges, and hopes, as children entirely subject to the authority of your heavenly Father; and never fall in with or conform yourselves to the corrupt inclinations, desires, schemes, principles, practices, language, and fashions of the men of this world, particularly in this degenerate age, as ye did formerly, while you remained under the power of your sinful lusts, ignorant of Christ and the gospel: 15, 16. But as God, who has called you by his grace into the faith and fellowship of his Son, is perfectly holy in his nature and conduct, study, according to his command, always, and in every relation and circumstance, to imitate him in the holiness of your hearts and lives.

17. And if, answerably to your religious profession, ye from the heart sincerely worship him as your Father in Christ, who, without regard to any external consideration, will impartially try and pass sentence on every man's work at the last day, see that ye maintain a holy and humble reverence of him, and fear of offending him, and a holy jealousy over your own hearts, while ye are travelling through this world, as pilgrims and strangers, to your better and eternal inheritance in heaven. 18-21. And ye ought to be the more earnest and courageous in this holy imitation and fear of God, since all you believers certainly know that your redemption, from the corrupt and defiling manners and customs handed down to you by your ancestors, was not purchased by the perishing riches of this present world, which can redeem from slavery and bondage among men, but by the infinitely more valuable obedience and sufferings of the pure and unspotted Son of God in our nature, whom he, from all eternity, being our Father, appointed to be our Mediator and Saviour, and has, in the end of the Jewish dispensation, and last age of the world, manifested in the flesh, and made to obey and suffer for your sins; who, through him, as your only Mediator, trust and hope in God as your reconciled God and Father—since, in testimony of his being fully satisfied with what his Son did and suffered for you, he has raised him from the dead, exalted him to his own right hand, and made him Head over all things to the church, that ye might be encouraged, through him, thus to trust in God, as reconciled in him, for all the blessings of grace and glory. 22. And since, through a believing acceptance of gospel truth, under the powerful influence of the Holy Ghost, ye have been enabled to mortify and subdue those corruptions which formerly defiled your souls, and to become holy in heart and life, and have been brought to a sincere and hearty affection to your fellow-Christians, see that ye daily more and more cultivate this brotherly kindness in all its genuine and substantial effects, with all the intense fervour of a regenerated heart purified by faith; 23. And as persons who are not merely the natural descendants of Abraham, but have new, vital, and incorruptible principles of grace and holiness implanted in you, by means of the incorruptible, quickening, and unchangeable word of the living, life-giving, and unchangeable God. 24, 25. For all fleshly descent, with its fairest fruits, all natural and acquired endowments, all external privileges, ornaments, and honours, are very unsubstantial and transient; but Christ, the essential Word, and the word of the Lord preached to you in the gospel, and the new creature produced by means of it, remain always the same in their nature and effects.

Ver. 2. Elect, not merely to 'the privileges of the gospel' (Bloomfield), but to 'salvation' on earth through 'the power of God,' and 'an inheritance incorruptible . . . reserved in heaven,' ver. 4-9. C.

Ver. 3. A living hope—a hope, as De Wette observes, which has life in itself, gives life, and looks for life as its object. This hope has for its foundation, its surety, its earnest, the resurrection of Christ. P.

Ver. 6. Wherewith. In which circumstance of your preservation.—as in a fortress—by the electing love and power of almighty God, 'ye greatly rejoice.'—If need be. Rather, 'since thus it is right' that your faith should be tried and purified. C.

Ver. 7. It seems probable from the reference to 'gold' that one great trial of the Christians' 'faith' was the loss of all their riches; and the nature of some of the subsequent exhortations evidently shows that before their conversion they had lived in much luxury and splendour; see ch. 3. 3; 4. 3, 4. But grace can enable the Christian either to use riches without abuse, or, if need be, for conscience' sake, to resign them without repining. C.

Ver. 11. What time. At what period of time.—What manner of time. Whether of prosperity or adversity in the Jewish or Gentile nations.—Note, This 'inquiry' and 'diligent search' must have been directed to the Scriptures, such as Da. 9. 2-7—thus furnishing both an example and an encouragement to every humble, diligent, and prayerful student of 'the more sure word of prophecy.' C.

Ver. 12. Which things, &c. Rather, 'Upon which things the angels delight to look down.' Supposed to contain an allusion to the attitude of the cherubim at the mercy-seat. C.

Ver. 17. The construction of the Greek seems to me to require the following interpretation:—'And if ye call upon as Father (addressing yourselves to him as children—looking to him as your Father) him who judgeth impartially (i.e. Christ, to whom all judgment has been committed), according to each one's work, in fear comfort yourselves during the time of your sojourning. That is, in filial fear—a fear that will restrain from any offence against Christ or his holy law. P.'

Ver. 18. Redeemed. Ransomed as captives from slavery.—Vain conversation. The vain traditions of the elders, Mat. 15. 3, &c.; Ga. 1. 14. C.

Ver. 21. By him. Rather, 'through him,' as preached to you by his apostles. C.

Ver. 23. By. The Greek preposition translated 'by' expresses agency, not inherent and original power. The Word of God is the agency in regeneration: God himself—God the Spirit—is the power. P.—Which liveth—being quickened into faith by the Spirit, Ro. 10. 17.—It is matter of question whether the apostle describes 'the word of God,' that is, the gospel, or God himself, as 'living and abiding for ever.' In support of the latter view the translation in the LXX. of Da. 6. 26 is adduced; but the structure of the original, and the quotation that follows, seem to ascribe the attributes of life (He. 4. 12) and permanence to the gospel. C.

REFLECTIONS.—No dispersion can separate believers from the love or care of Christ and his faithful ministers. The love of the Father, the redemption of the Son, and the sanctification of the Holy Ghost, delightfully harmonize in helping to faith and holy obedience here, in order to complete salvation hereafter. And according to God's unbounded mercy, and by his infinite love alone, we are blessed with new principles of grace, fitted for and carried through trials unnumbered, to the heavenly inheritance, to his praise and honour. Marvellously he tries, strengthens, and honours the graces of his people by means of their troubles. And, amidst them all, boldly may they triumph in the assured views and hopes of their bright glories and complete salvation through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. Wonderful and excellent is the gospel, which exhibits and offers us this great salvation; and with earnest care and ravishing delight prophets and angels pry into the mysteries of it. What a solid foundation have we for our faith in him whom God from eternity appointed our Saviour, whom the ancient prophets foretold, and whom the gospel clearly reveals and makes over to us! In the most astonishing wisdom and grace he gave his life a ransom for us, rose from the dead, and ascended to glory, that we might be emboldened to believe and trust in God as our reconciled Father in him. Affectionately, then, ought we to love this once suffering and now exalted Redeemer.

20 Who^a verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world, but ^{was} manifest in these last times for you;

21 Who ^{by} him do believe in God, that raised^t him up from the dead, and gave him glory; that your faith and hope might be in God.

22 Seeing ye have ^{purified} your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto ^{unfeigned} love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently:

23 Being² born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever.

24 For⁵ all^u flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass. The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away:

25 But^t the word of the Lord endureth for ever. ^{And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you.}

CHAPTER II.

1 He dehortheth them from the breach of charity: 4 showing that Christ is the foundation whereupon they are built. 11 He beseecheth them also to abstain from fleshly lusts, 13 to be obedient to magistrates, 18 and teacheth servants how to obey their masters, 20 patiently suffering for well-doing, after the example of Christ.

WHEREFORE,^a laying^b aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil-speaking,

2 As^c new-born babes, desire ^{the sincere} milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby:

3 If so be ye have ^{tasted} that the Lord is gracious.

4 To whom coming, as unto ^a living ^{stone}, disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God, and precious,

5 Ye also, ^{as} lively stones, are built² up a spiritual house, ^{an} holy priesthood, to offer up and all his people for his sake, and delightfully to triumph in his exaltation and grace. Earnestly ought we to obey our heavenly Father, and imitate him in holiness. With holy fear and reverence should we look for his impartial judgment. And with great watchfulness, sobriety, and weakness from worldly things and sinful customs, ought we to travel to our heavenly rest, carefully cherishing the indwelling principle of spiritual life, till it be perfected in life eternal.

CHAPTER II. Ver. 1. Since, by the acceptance of new principles of grace, ye have been led to purity and love, see that, with abhorrence, ye put away from you all malicious, spiteful, and revengeful heart-burnings, designs, and practices against your fellow-Christians; all frauds, deceitful flatteries, insincere compliments, or professions of respect towards God or men; all envious grudging and repining at men's prosperity; and all backbitings and defamations, which proceed from a guileful, malicious, or envious disposition of heart. 2, 3. And as persons who have had a real, though small experimental knowledge and savour of the mercy and grace of the Lord Jesus to your own souls, earnestly desire, hunger, and seek after the pure, uncorrupted Word of God, as containing proper nourishment for your immortal souls, that ye may grow in grace, comfort, and holiness, and in all spiritual strength and stature, till ye become perfect in Christ; 4. To whom ye must be daily applying by faith for further edification, support, and establishment, as the only foundation of all your faith, security, hope, and happiness; who has life in himself, and quickens and for ever animates all that are united to him; and who, however contemned by Jewish rulers or other unbelievers, was chosen and appointed of God for this end; and in the sight of God, and all who know him, is infinitely excellent in himself, dear and honourable, and completely able to bear the whole weight of his Father's glory, and the salvation of his church. 5. And being quickened by virtue of your union to and influences from him, ye are more and more fitted to be a spiritual habitation for God, and made holy priests unto him, gratefully to offer up yourselves, your prayers, praises, alms-deeds, and other good works, to him, as acceptable and intercession of Jesus Christ. 6. Accordingly God calls us, with attention and holy admiration, faith and hope, love and joy, to contemplate him as the fitted, prepared, and rightly-placed foundation, which unites and supports the whole church, Jews and Gentiles, and on which the man who rests the whole weight of his eternal salvation, however sinful he may be, shall never meet with any disappointment, confusion, or ruin. 7, 8. To all those therefore who, through the declarations and promises of the gospel, receive and rest on him alone for salvation, he, in his person, offices, relations, and benefits, will be altogether lovely, honourable, and honoured; and notwithstanding all the rage and contempt of Jewish rulers and other unbelievers, he is, by the appointment of God, made the foundation, chief corner-stone, strength, and glory of his spiritual house, the gospel church; in the meantime, according to God's ancient predictions, he becomes to others an occasion of more aggravated guilt and ruin, who, through their obstinate unbelief, in fulfilment of their wicked ways, wilfully plunge themselves into deeper damnation. 9. But ye who by faith are built upon him as your foundation, are a new-born

6 Wherefore also it is contained in the scripture, ^{Behold}, I lay in Sion a chief corner-stone, elect, precious: and he that believeth on him shall not be confounded:

7 Unto^a you therefore which believe he is precious:³ but unto them which be disobedient, ^{the} stone which the builders disallowed, the same is made the head of the corner,

8 And a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence, even to them which stumble at the word, being disobedient: ^{whereunto} also they were appointed.

9 But ^{ye are} a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar⁴ people; ^{that ye should show forth the praises} of him ^{who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light:}

10 Which^t in time past were not a people, but are now the people of God: which had not obtained mercy, but now have obtained mercy.

11 Dearly beloved, I beseech you ^{as} strangers and pilgrims, ^{abstain} from fleshly lusts, which ^{war} against the soul;

12 Having^y your conversation honest among the Gentiles: that, ^{whereas} they speak against you as evil-doers, ^{they may by your good works, which they shall behold, glorify God in the day of visitation.}

13 Submit^b yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake: whether it be to the king, as supreme;

14 Or unto governors, as unto them that are sent by him for the punishment of evil-doers, and for the praise of them that do well.

15 For so is the will of God, ^{that with well-} kindred, which God has, through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, set apart for himself. Being anointed with his blood and Spirit, like princes, ye have power with him, victory over sin, Satan, and the world, and dominion over your own spirit, and are heirs of the kingdom of heaven.—Like priests, ye are separated from the rest of the world, and consecrated to God to offer up spiritual sacrifices of holy gratitude.—Ye are a holy society, collected and united together under Christ your King; sanctified by his Spirit, governed by his laws, and embarked in the same common cause and interest; and through faith ye are his special property—that, answerably to your dignities, privileges, and obligations, ye might, in your nature and life, by thought, word, and deed, show forth the infinite wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness, and truth of God, who has by his grace called and brought you from the darkness of ignorance and error, sin and misery, into his most wonderful light of truth and grace, holiness and comfort; so that ye, as well as the Gentiles among whom ye live, are, after a remarkable disowning of God, brought into the sweet and abiding relation of a people to him; and, after a fearful exclusion from his mercy, have now found mercy with him, to the justification and adoption of your persons, and the renovation of your nature and life, after his image. 11. In consideration of these distinguishing favours which God has bestowed upon you, my dear Christian brethren, I earnestly entreat and exhort you, as persons born from above, strangers in this world, and travellers to the heavenly country, to renounce, avoid, and mortify all your inward workings of sensual inclinations, inordinate affections, and desires after earthly things, which arise from the corrup-doing ye may put to silence⁸ the ignorance of foolish men:

16 As^d free, and not using⁹ your liberty for a cloak of maliciousness, but as the servants of God.

17 'Honour¹ all men. 'Love the brotherhood. Fear^a God. Honour the king.

18 Servants,ⁱ be subject to your masters with all fear; not only to the good and gentle, but also to the froward.

19 For^j this is thankworthy,² if a man for conscience toward God endure grief, suffering wrongfully.

20 For what glory is it, if, when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye shall take it patiently? but if, when ye do well, and suffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is acceptable³ with God.

21 For^k even hereunto were ye called: 'because Christ also suffered for us,⁴ leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps:

CHAPTER III.

¹ He teacheth the duty of wives and husbands to each other, 8. exhorting all men to unity and love, 14 and to suffer persecution. 19 He declareth also the benefits of Christ toward the old world.

LIKEWISE, ye^a wives, be in subjection to your own husbands; that, if any obey not the word, ^bthey also may without the word be won by the conversation of the wives;

tion of your nature, and exert themselves by your body; and being contrary to the liberty, peace, and honour, purity and holiness, of your renewed souls, perpetually do their utmost to defile, disturb, ensnare, and destroy them. 12. And since ye live among profane and idolatrous heathens, study that all your words and actions may be decent, honourable, and commendable, every way worthy of your holy profession—that whereas they take all occasions to reproach you, as a refractory, useless, and mischievous people, they may be effectually confuted by your universally regular, blameless, holy, benevolent, and lovely deportment, and brought to admire God's grace in you, and to imitate your good conversation, when he by his mercy shall visit them with the light and power of the gospel, and make it powerful for their salvation. 13, 14. And though some of your countrymen inveigh against all obedience to heathen magistrates, see that ye, from a regard to the command, example, and honour of Christ, conscientiously submit to, cheerfully obey, and readily pay tribute to the civil rulers, supreme or subordinate, whom God in his providence has, by the agency of men, set over you for the restraint and punishment of the open contemners or injurers of God or men, and for protecting, encouraging, favouring, and rewarding such as are orderly, sober, honest, and religious; 15, 16. For it is the command and delight of God, and tends to his honour, that, by a holy, regular, and commendable behaviour, ye should refute the unreasonable and wicked calumnies which men of weak and prejudiced minds, strangers to God and to your true character, are apt to raise against you and your religion, as if it made you bad subjects; always conducting yourselves as persons delivered from the tyranny of sin and Satan, from the ceremonial law, and from the moral law as a broken covenant of works, and from all human impositions on your conscience in matters of religion; but never abusing this freedom as an encouragement to or cover of sedition, or any other malignant wickedness, but as an excitement to the most faithful and diligent service of God in holiness and righteousness. 17. Under the influence of a truly religious, filial, and reverential fear of God, and answerable to the character of true worshippers of him, always study to pay a suitable respect to all men, be of what rank they will; cultivate the most tender and affectionate love, and be ready to perform every kind office to your fellow-believers, Jews or Gentiles; and, as loyal subjects, pay all civil homage and respect to kings and other magistrates, as the deputies and vicegerents of God. 18—20. Such of you as are household servants, whether slaves or hired, always study an humble submission, becoming reverence, and ready and faithful obedience, in all things lawful, to your masters—not only to such as are generous, kind, meek, and merciful in their temper and behaviour, but also to them who are austere and morose, especially if it be only because ye are become Christians; for this is acceptable to God, and praiseworthy, if, for the sake of your religion, and from a conscientious regard to his command and honour, ye patiently suffer injurious and abusive treatment, without having given any just provocation by your faults. But there is no honour to Christ, your religion, or yourselves, in your tame submission to the severe punishment of your neglects, infidelity, and misdemeanours. The criminal cause makes your sufferings a reproach to all concerned. But if, while ye are diligent and faithful in the duties of your station, ye patiently bear sufferings, inflicted for your conscientious regard to Christ and his Father, this evidences a truly excellent and holy temper, which God freely gives, and is highly pleased with. 21. For when ye became Christians ye were called patiently and publicly to submit to injuries and reproaches, for the sake of Christ and the gospel, because he himself, in his infinite love to us, willingly underwent the severest sufferings and most infamous revilings for us, not only to pardon our sins and secure our eternal happiness, but also to leave us a most perfect pattern of patience in suffering—that we, in love and duty, might imitate him in this and other parts of his holy and blameless behaviour; 22, 23. Who, notwithstanding all the false and malicious accusations of his enemies, never was found guilty of the smallest fault, or the least insincerity, deceit, or falsehood, in his words or doctrine; and who, when he was shamefully reproached as a blasphemer, an impostor, and one possessed by the devil, and most insolently and barbarously abused by his enemies, never returned the smallest reproach, nor threatened to revenge the injuries done him; but calmly referred the cause between him and his persecutors to his heavenly Father; and even prayed that, instead of avenging, he would graciously forgive their murderous wickedness through his atoning blood; 24. Who, being altogether sinless in himself, cheerfully, as our Surety, submitted to all his sufferings, as the punishment of our sins imputed to him, and to be borne by him in his death, in order that, through the merits and virtue of his sufferings, we might have our sins pardoned and subdued, and all our spiritual maladies healed, and might live in all holy obedience, and bring forth fruits of righteousness to God through him. 25. For, in our unconverted state, we were inclined to and actually running astray from God, and from his fold, ordinances, commandments, and ways of truth and peace, into every sinful and dangerous path leading to eternal destruction; but now, through faith and the renewing operations of the Holy Ghost by the gospel, ye are brought back to Christ, as the great Shepherd and kind Overseer of your precious and immortal souls, that he may care for, feed, nourish, guide, govern, heal, and defend you from all evil, and conduct you safe to his eternal glory.

REFLECTIONS.—The pure doctrines of Christ are most nourishing provision to a regenerated soul. But great mortification of lusts, and earnest exercise of faith and love, are necessary in making use of it. And the more knowledge and experience we have of God's transcendent grace, the more ardently shall we desire it. Whatever Christ be to others, he is infinitely precious, honourable, useful, and establishing to his own people; and sweet is the light, the life, the honour, the confirmation, the holiness, the usefulness, the acceptableness, they derive from him. Astonishing is his love, his condescension, in cheerfully bearing our sins, enduring our punishment, and in recovering us, when lost and strayed, to himself! With sincere regard to his Word as our rule—to his example as our pattern—ought we, by a holy, honest, and virtuous conversation, to recommend his religion in the world, and to refute the reproaches cast upon it by the wicked. With earnestness should we subdue and mortify every sinful lust. And with great cheerfulness ought we to perform every relative duty to magistrates, masters, or others, and to undergo whatever injuries we may be called to suffer for his sake. But bad neighbours, rebellious and unruly subjects, and imperious and unfaithful servants, can never be good Christians.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 1, 2. And while Christian subjects and servants are careful to honour their religion by a conscientious performance of the duties of their station, do you, Christian wives, behave with the most obliging and affectionate submission to your husbands in all things lawful—that if any be ignorant, regardless, or contemners of the word and ordinances of God, those ordinary means of conversion, they may, by your meek, humble, sweet, and engaging temper and carriage, and your pure, sober, chaste, modest, and reverential deportment, influenced by a religious reverence of God, and regard to his authority, be allured and gained over to a good esteem of Christ and his ways: 3, 4. And labour to recommend yourselves and your religion to your husbands, not by the external ornaments of dress, but by knowledge, virtue, truth, grace, and holiness of heart, manifested by good works in your life, which are far more beautiful, excellent, advantageous, and lasting—particularly by a modest, humble, gentle, calm, tractable, and peaceable temper of spirit, free from pride and turbulent passion, which, however overlooked by vain minds, is inexpressibly valuable in God's account. 5, 6. For in this endearing and submissive manner the ancient holy women, who trusted in God for his blessings of time and eternity, endeavoured to ingratiate themselves with their husbands—particularly Sara, who in the very name she gave to her husband Abraham marked her high respect for him—whose daughters, not only in a natural, but in a moral and spiritual sense, ye are while ye behave rightly towards your husbands and others, without being deterred from your religion through fear of their displeasure, and without any unbelieving confusion or doubt relative to God's fulfilment of his promises.—7. And do you husbands on all occasions live with your wives in a faithful, friendly, and familiar manner, treating them with that decency, kindness, and cheerfulness which prudence and knowledge of the gospel require—delighting in their persons, consulting their comfort and happiness, supporting their credit and authority in the family, 4 But let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price.

5 For^a after this manner, in the old time, the holy women also, who trusted in God, adorned themselves, being in subjection unto their own husbands:

6 Even^b as Sara obeyed Abraham, calling him lord: 'whose daughters¹ ye are as long as ye do well, and are not afraid with any amazement.²

7 Likewise,^k ye husbands, dwell with them according to knowledge, giving honour unto the wife, as unto the weaker vessel, and as being heirs together of the grace of life; that your prayers be not hindered.

v It is not, therefore, the mere external rite of baptism which is here referred to. The parenthesis is, as Alford well observes, a protest against such an opinion. It is the washing of regeneration, of which the sacrament of baptism is the sign, and when accompanied by faith, also the seal. It is effected by the Spirit of God; and its immediate result is 'the inquiry of a good conscience after God'—seeking after God with the whole soul and heart, so as to love, honour, and obey him. It is important to observe the typical character of the deluge. In like other great historic events recorded in the Pentateuch, was designed to foreshadow one of the fundamental doctrines of the gospel.

providing honourably for them, putting due confidence in them, and sympathizing with and helping them under their manifold infirmities, that, if Christians, they may be honoured and encouraged, as heirs of eternal happiness, equally with yourselves; and if not, may be allured to the Christian religion, and every proper method taken to promote your joint worshiping of God, by yourselves and with the family, in a manner comfortable to you and acceptable to God. 8, 9. In fine, let all of you who profess to believe in Christ labour to cultivate a mutual agreement in the important doctrines of the gospel, and answerable thereto, and a harmonious temper, feelingly sympathizing with one another in all afflictions.—As children of the same heavenly Father, maintain and exercise an affectionate brotherly love, in thought, word, and deed, towards each other. Manifest the most tender sympathy towards such as are under weakness or afflictions, temporal or spiritual. And let your whole carriage be affable, friendly, and engaging to every one. Never return injuries or reproaches to such as have injured or reproached you, but earnestly pray for blessings to them, and watch for opportunities to do them real favours—knowing that ye are called, by the authority and example of Christ, to this amiable conduct, as a mean of his gracious bestowal of temporal, spiritual, and eternal blessings upon you, as his children and heirs of his promises. 10, 11. For nothing can be more plain, from the oracles of God, than that they who wish for peace, comfort, and prosperity in this world, ought to guard against all profane, filthy, opprobrious, false, or deceitful language, and to abhor and carefully avoid everything sinful in itself and prejudicial to others, and practise everything good and beneficial—labouring to the utmost of their power, and as far as they can with a good conscience, to live peaceably with all men, and studying to promote peace among neighbours, friends, or enemies. 12, 13. For the great Lord of all takes special notice of, dearly loves, and kindly watches over and cares for such as, being clothed with Jesus' blessed righteousness, are upright, holy, and righteous in their hearts and lives; and he is graciously attentive to and ready to answer all their prayers which are offered to him in humility, faith, and fervency; but in a terrible manner he manifests his just indignation against such as indulge themselves in wickedness. And if he be your Friend and Protector, what man or devil can do you any real hurt, while, depending on his grace, and devoted to his service, ye imitate him and his saints in goodness and holiness? Nay, what man would be so malicious or cruel as to seek the hurt of an inoffensive and beneficent neighbour? 14-16. But if God should permit any to reproach and persecute you for adherence to Christ and his gospel, his love and favour will render you happy under such treatment; never therefore be terrified, discouraged, or perplexed, as if their threatenings or abuse would issue in your disgrace or ruin, but always preserve high thoughts and a reverential fear of God in your hearts, and entire trust in his infinite wisdom, power, mercy, and faithfulness, for your security, and for ordering every event to your everlasting honour and joy. And in a dependence on his direction and assistance, be always ready, by word or deed, in courts of judicature, and everywhere else, to defend and account for the grounds of your hopes of salvation, according to the gospel, for which ye willingly suffer. And let this be done with a meek and modest air, temper, and language, and with a holy reverence of God and fear of offending him by unfaithfulness, and even with a cautious fear of offending those to whom ye speak by anything disrespectful—in everything conscientiously studying that if your enemies will reproach you as injurious to society or public welfare, your blameless, humble, and benevolent practice, springing from faith in Christ, may effectually confute them, and force them with shame to retract their slanders. 17. For if it please God that you should suffer for your adherence to his truths and ways, this is far more honourable, advantageous, and comfortable, than if you were to suffer for your own crimes and follies. 18. For in patiently and boldly suffering for righteousness' sake, ye are conformed unto your great Lord and Saviour, who, though infinitely holy and righteous in his divine nature, and perfectly pure in his manhood, did, once for all, offer up himself in his sufferings as an atoning sacrifice, in the room of us unrighteous and ungodly sinners, that he might reconcile us to God, and bring us to spiritual fellowship with him here, and immediate enjoyment of him hereafter—he having been crucified in his manhood, but quickly after raised again to an immortal life of blessedness and glory by the influence of his divine nature and of his Holy Spirit. 19, 20. By whom, through the ministry of Noe, in manifold admonitions and strivings, he preached the righteousness of faith, and the necessity of repentance and reformation, to those ungodly sinners who lived on the earth before the flood, but are now shut up in the prison of hell, for the punishment of their obstinate rebellion against God, and contemptuous abuse of his long-continued mercies and patience. 21, 22. And as then Noe and his family were saved out of, and even by means of, water, so baptism, not as a mere washing of our body with water, but as it represents and seals the application of Christ's blood and Spirit to our conscience, purifying it from right hand of God; angels and authorities and powers being made subject unto him.

CHAPTER IV.

1 He exhorteth them to cease from sin by the example of Christ, and the consideration of the general end that now approacheth: 12 and comforteth them against persecution.

FORASMUCH then ^{as} Christ hath suffered for us¹ in the flesh, ^{arm} yourselves likewise with the same mind: for ^{he} that hath suffered in the flesh hath ceased from sin;

2 That^a he no longer should live the rest of his time in the flesh to the lusts of men, ^{but} to the will of God.

3 For^o the time past of our life may suffice us to have wrought the will of the Gentiles, when we walked in lasciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, revellings, banquetings, and abominable idolatries;

5 Who^l shall give account to him that is ready to judge the quick and the dead.

6 For,^j for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, ^{that} they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit.²

7 Butⁱ the end of all things is at hand: ^{be} ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer.

35 This is one of those passages which have given rise to much controversy. Grammatically it may be interpreted in two ways: but by the analogy of faith, or, in other words, the analogy of Scripture, it is capable of only one of these two. The dead means those who are now really dead. The gospel was preached to them, not after they died, but before it. Peter is addressing those who were suffering persecution. He encourages them by the declaration that in former times many had suffered persecution from men, and were put to death, but still lived to God. He says here that the design in preaching the gospel to them might be judged and put to death by earthly persecutors, yet in respect to their souls—their higher nature—they lived to God. This appears to me to be the only true interpretation of this passage.

dead works, and making us to act answerably to our solemn obligation to be the Lord's (therein contracted), is now a noted representation and mean of our salvation, by the death and resurrection of Christ our only Saviour, who, as a pledge, earnest, evidence, and security of it, and as our Forerunner, to open our way and prepare mansions for us, is now ascended into heaven, enthroned at the right hand of God, and invested with all power over angels, magistrates, and every other creature.

Ver. 2. With fear. Not slavish fear, but 'respectful deportment.' C.

Ver. 3. Whose adorning, &c. To be understood in a comparative sense; that is, for 'not' read 'not so much as' (Bloomfield). It is, however, by no means clear that any scriptural example, even Mat. 9. 13, will fully bear out this comparative sense of our. See Robinson's Gr. Lex. v. 8. The prohibition is easily understood by giving the emphasis to 'adorning,' when, compared with 1 Ti. 2. 9, the meaning will appear thus: 'whose adorning'—that is, all beyond what is necessary for comfort and decency, and a due regard to rank and circumstances—'let it not be that outward adorning,' &c. C.

Ver. 6. And are not afraid. Induced by any timidity to deny the truth, as even Sarah did, Ge. 18. 15. Imitate her graces, avoid her faults. See ver. 14. C.

Ver. 7. According to (your) knowledge of what is becoming in believers of the gospel.—That your prayers be not hindered. Through any want of domestic harmony.—Note. If a man do not seek to preserve peace with his own family, how can he imagine that he is seeking 'peace with God?' C.

Ver. 12. The righteous. 'The just (the justified) who live by faith' on Jesus the Son of God and Saviour of sinners. C.

Ver. 15. Sanctify. Venerate, glorify 'the Lord in your hearts,' in the midst of all the troubles he may please to send. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Modesty, meekness, and humility, from a principle of faith in God, are the most engaging ornaments of women, married or unmarried. And an honourable, humane, and tender treatment of a wife is the most substantial evidence of a husband's affection. Never ought a family to exist without much daily fervent prayer, both secret and private. And it is an honour to the Christian religion, and a comfort and happiness to professors, when harmony in sentiment, unanimity in affection, readiness to render good for evil, useful converse, a steadfast cleaving to every good principle and practice, and readiness to account or suffer with meekness for their religion, constantly and everywhere prevail.—A holy, humble, benevolent, and circumspect practice is the best confutation of every calumny. And the more we live in the fear of God the less we shall be influenced by the fears or reproaches of men.—Why should we ever repine at suffering for Christ, that God-man who suffered for us, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God? Deep was his debasement, and high his glory that followed. And rich, full, and extensive is that salvation from sin and wrath which he secured and gives. How important an ordinance is baptism! Alas! unhappy is the thought that many rest on it, as if it were a Saviour, while others use it as a mere ceremony or fancied charm!

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 1, 2. Now, since Jesus Christ has thus patiently and extremely suffered in his manhood for us unjust sinners, to bring us to God, let his noble and endearing example arm you against all impatience and fainting under what ye suffer for his sake; for if, in the virtue of his death in our stead, we have crucified our inward corruptions, and have cheerfully and patiently endured outward sufferings for his sake, and in conformity to him, we shall be disposed to renounce all our former sinful principles and practices, and with grief and hatred to turn from them to God with full purpose of heart, that we may not spend the remaining part of our time in the exercise of carnal and sinful lusts, after the example of evil men, but in holy dispositions and practices, which God commands and delights in, as tending to his glory; 3-5. For we have already spent too much of our time, like heathens, in diversified forms of uncleanness, drunkenness, gluttony, and the most shameful and detestable idolatries.—On account of your unexpected withdrawal from which dissolute lewdness, luxury, and intemperance, ye and your religion are vilified by your wicked neighbours, as if it had made you quite unsocial, stiff, precise, and humourous; but quickly must they answer for all these reproaches to the Lord Jesus himself, upon whom they ultimately fall, and who is authorized to, and will, ere long, judge all that have ever lived on the earth, to the great glory of his saints and terror of his enemies. 6. For to this end was the gospel preached to those who are now dead in Christ, as well as to them who now live on the earth—that through divine influences attending it, their inward corruptions being thoroughly mortified and subdued, and they, being condemned and censured by carnal men, might in their souls, quickened and animated by the Holy Ghost, live after a spiritual and joyful manner, according to the command and pattern of God, and in fellowship with him, and to his glory; and be at last raised to an eternal and full enjoyment of him. 7. But consider, for your encouragement and caution under your present trials, that your Jewish nation must quickly be altogether destroyed, and your death, and even the dissolution of this lower world, take place; be therefore always wise, sober, and temperate, constantly watching against temptations and the workings of indwelling corruption, and for opportunities of and spiritual assistances in prayer, for whatever blessings, deliverances, graces, or comforts you need. 8. And influenced by the transcendent love of God in Christ to you, earnestly cultivate a warm, cordial, and brotherly affection one towards another in these perilous times; for as he, in his infinite kindness and mercy, has freely forgiven you all your innumerable transgressions, so your fervent love to one another, for his sake, after his example, and in obedience to his command, will make you readily forgive and conceal the numerous failings of each other. 9. And be always ready with cheerfulness to entertain and lodge religious strangers, especially such as go about preaching the gospel, and are, by persecutors, deprived of their property, and driven from their homes. 10, 11. Let all such as have gifts and offices in the church carefully, faithfully, and prudently employ those graciously bestowed gifts, and execute those offices, for the edification of others, as stewards accountable to God for their trusts.—If some be called to preach the gospel, let them, in a becoming, serious, solemn, reverent, fervent, faithful, spiritual, and holy manner, declare the mind of God, and nothing else, according to his Word. If others be called to collect, take care of, and distribute the church's stock, for the relief of the poor, the maintenance of ministers, and defraying the necessary expense of divine ordinances, 17 For^e the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God: ^aand if it first begin at us, what shall the end^d be of them that obey not the gospel of God?

18 And^d if the righteous scarcely be saved, whereⁱ shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?

19 Wherefore, let them that ⁱsuffer according to the will of God ^kcommit the keeping of their souls to him in well-doing, as unto a faithful Creator.

CHAPTER V.

1 He exhorteth the elders to feed their flocks, 5 the younger to obey, 8 and all to be sober, watchful, and constant in the faith: 9 to resist the cruel adversary the devil.

THE elders^a which are among you I exhort, who am also an elder, and a ^bwitness of the sufferings of Christ, and also ^aa partaker of the glory that shall be revealed:

let them attend to their work with all fidelity, prudence, tenderness, and diligence, as they have ability and opportunity—that all the spiritual and temporal affairs of the church may be so conducted as to promote the glory, praise, and adoration of God, through the merit and mediation of Christ, our ever-exalted, praised, and adored Redeemer. 12. My dear brethren, fellow-sufferers for Christ's cause, while you reflect on the imperfection of your present state, and the depravity of mankind, which fills them with enmity against everything good, and on the warnings of our blessed Saviour, ye ought never to be discouraged nor surprised at the severest troubles and persecutions wherewith God exercises you—not to destroy, but to refine you, try and purify your graces, and purge away your sinful corruptions, as if they were unexpected, uncommon, and foreign to the methods of his love to his children; 13. But rather think of and stand prepared to meet them with holy joy, as therein ye have Christ's sympathy and comforts promised and secured to you, and are, in suffering for him, conformed to him—that, when he appears in all his glory at the last day, ye also may rejoice and triumph in and together with him. 14. If with patience, courage, and joy, ye endure reproaches and abuse for his and the gospel's sake, this manifests your union to and fellowship with him; and will, through his merit and gracious influence, issue in your unspeakable advantage; for the glorious Spirit of God, who bestows all grace and glory on men, is with you, to support, deliver, and reward you.—By your persecutors, he and our Redeemer are blasphemously reproached; but by your faith and patience, and courageous confession of the truth, they are honoured and glorified. 15. Nevertheless, I beseech you to beware of bringing any trouble on yourselves by any criminal conduct of your own—as murder, dishonesty, sedition, injuring of neighbours, neglect of your own affairs, or intermeddling with those of other men. 16. But if any of you be enabled, with faith, patience, and courage, to suffer indignities, reproaches, and cruelties, merely for your profession of Christ and his gospel, look not on it as a disgrace, but as a real honour conferred upon you, on account of which ye ought to praise and glorify God. 17. For the time is at hand when not only Jerusalem and your Jewish nation shall be fearfully destroyed by the just judgments of God, but even the New Testament church shall be visited with terrible persecutions and troubles. Now, if his severe judgments be first inflicted on his ancient and long peculiar people, and on its real believers, in whom he dwells by his Holy Spirit, what extremity of wrath must fall upon obstinate unbelievers who disregard and reject his gospel? 18. And if, in the general ruin of our nation, or other public calamities, they who are clothed with the righteousness of Christ, and are renewed and sanctified by his Spirit unto all holy obedience, have but a narrow though sure escape by his providence and grace, what dreadful, unavoidable, insupportable, inexpressible, and everlasting misery must come upon those impenitent unbelievers who obstinately persist in their sins! 19. Reflecting upon these awful events, which carry so much encouragement to you and terror to your enemies, do you who, in a Christian manner, by the assistance of God's Spirit, endure persecutions and afflictions, as appointed for you by him, believingly commit your lives, your souls, and all your concerns, in time or eternity, to him—in a course of holy walking with him, and of doing good to all around you, friends or foes; trusting in him, that he, as your almighty Creator and Preserver, will, through Christ, perform his promise, in protecting, supporting, comforting, and delivering you in the worst of times.

Ver. 1. 'Arm yourselves with the same mind [of self-sacrifice, out of love to him]: for he that hath suffered in the flesh [hath reckoned himself dead with Christ, Ro. 6. 6-11] hath ceased from sin.' C.

Ver. 6. To them that are dead for the gospel's sake, ch. 2. 20, 21; 3. 14, 17, 18. The word 'dead' cannot be understood of 'the dead in trespasses and sins,' but must be taken in the same sense in which it appears in the preceding verse. So suddenly to change the meaning from natural to spiritual death, without any evident intimation of change, would overturn every principle of legitimate interpretation.—That they might be judged [as] in deed, &c. Judged as guilty of 'strange' irrational conduct, and subjected to every form of 'evil speaking,' ver. 4.—In the spirit. In their own spirit, having 'the same mind' that was in Christ, ver. 1, by the renewal of the Spirit of God. C.

Ver. 7. This epistle was written about A.D. 67, shortly after the war with the Romans commenced, which ended in the burning of the temple, the destruction of Jerusalem, and the total ruin of the Jewish state. But there is another and universal sense in which 'the end of all things is at hand' to every man—the hour of death—that separates him for ever from all he loves, or hates, or fears, or possesses, or hopes for in time, and brings him into immediate contact with the unchanging realities of eternity. C.

Ver. 18. And if the righteous scarcely be saved, (rather, hardly, with difficulty) be saved. This difficulty arises from many sources, but mainly, (1) From the necessity of 'cutting off the right hand' and 'plucking out the right eye'—'mortifying the deeds of the body, that they may live.' (2) From the constant watchfulness to be maintained, and the tendency to slumber to be resisted. (3) From the hope to be sacrificed, and the fears to be overcome. (4) From the deceitfulness of sin itself, which, like Satan its author, is always transforming itself 'into an angel of light.' (5) From the many persecutions inflicted by an evil world. (6) And specially, and above all, from the contentions of sense with faith. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Nothing so effectually mortifies sin as believing views of Christ's sufferings for it. And the will of God, not our vile affections, must be our guide in all our conduct. An affecting remembrance of former sinfulness powerfully dissuades from a return to it. And not men's thoughts, but Christ's judgment, ought to determine our practice. If we live according to God in the Spirit, no matter what sufferings from carnal men we undergo for his sake.—Our views of approaching calamities, and especially of the last judgment, should produce in us great sobriety, and watching unto prayer, fervent charity, cheerful hospitality, and a ready and proper use of our gifts. Faithfully should believers, under the impression of it, regard the glory of God; endure with patience, boldness, and joy, in suffering for Christ; and be careful to give their enemies no proper ground of offence, seriously committing themselves to God in well-doing. Abundant is the comfort that all sufferings for Christ shall be richly rewarded in an eternal enjoyment of him, and that his blessed Spirit abides on and shares with us in all such afflictions. But if saints thus suffer on earth, how miserable must sinners be in time or eternity! If they who strive to enter in at the strait gate be saved with difficulty, how impossible is it for careless sinners to escape the reward of their doings!

CHAPTER V. Ver. 1-4. And as for you who are the spiritual rulers and pastors of the Christian church, I—who am one myself, and who, after being an eye-

2 Feed^d the flock of God which is among you,¹ taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; ^anot for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind;

3 Neither^o as ²being lords over ³God's heritage, ^bbut being ensamples to the flock.

4 And when the ^cchief Shepherd ^kshall appear, ye shall receive ^aa crown of glory that fadeth not away.

5 Likewise, ^eye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder. Yea, all of you ^ebe subject one to another, and be clothed with humility: for ^gGod resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble.

6 Humble^r yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time:

witness of the sufferings of Christ, have boldly preached them as the ground of men's salvation, at the hazard of my life, in the assured hopes of being, in a little time, a partaker with him in that glory which he secured thereby, and which he has taken possession of, as my Head, Representative, and Forerunner, and will openly manifest and bestow—beseech you diligently and faithfully to teach and govern those souls which he secured by suffering and has committed to your care, personally inspecting their principles, temper, and conduct, and looking after their spiritual concerns with wisdom and meekness—not from external motives of fear, shame, or regard to worldly advantages, as your governing end, but with freedom and delight, purely for the honour of Christ and welfare of souls; and not with ambitious views of honour to yourselves, or in an imperious, haughty, and domineering manner, as if ye had the rule over the faith and consciences of God's peculiar people; but as examples of humility, self-denial, holiness, and righteousness to them—that when Jesus, who secured them by sacrifice, and saves them by his power and grace, and under whom ye act, and to whom ye are accountable, appears to judge the world at the last day, ye may receive from him a great but gracious reward of everlasting glory and honour. 5. And ye who are younger, or in private stations, or at least inferiors in some respect, study to be always attentive and submissive to the admonitions, cautions, and reproofs of your superiors in age, wisdom, experience, or station, particularly your church-rulers, treating their persons, characters, and instructions with due esteem and reverence. And let all of you beware of self-conceit or obstinacy, behaving with due respect one to another, and yielding to each other as far as your rank and circumstances can possibly permit. And let an unfeigned humility appear in your whole conduct, as its great ornament and a cover to its defects. 6. And considering what a great, sovereign, almighty, and just God ye have to do with, and what terrible judgments he is about to execute, in the course of his providence, on your nation and the Christian church, as an emblem of still greater in the world to come, yield up yourselves to his almighty, sovereign, and holy will, under all the sufferings and troubles you meet with for your trial, that when he has gained the wise and gracious ends of his chastenings, he may lift you up above all tribulations, and advance you to all those honours or delights which are for your spiritual or eternal advantage. 7. Yea, whatever be your distressing burdens, anxieties, fears, and cares, with respect to yourselves, families, friends, or the church of Christ, commit them all by faith and prayer to him, relying on his power and goodness for seasonable relief, for he has all your concerns at heart, and will pity, succour, strengthen, and comfort you, and, in his own time and way, give you a happy deliverance from and issue of all your troubles, in your everlasting salvation. 8. But amidst all the difficulties and dangers of your present warfare, labour always to maintain a wakeful, sober, and humble temper of mind, in modest thoughts of yourselves, and in moderating your affections towards earthly enjoyments; and watch unto prayer, and unto the performance of all the duties of your station, and against temptations to sin and apostasy; for your busy and powerful adversary the devil, like a fierce, savage, 7 Casting^r all your care upon him, for he careth for you.

8 Be^r sober, be vigilant; because ^ryour adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour:

9 Whom^r resist, steadfast in the faith, knowing that ^rthe same afflictions are accomplished in your brethren that are in the world.

10 But the ^rGod of all grace, ^rwho hath called us unto his eternal glory by Christ Jesus, ^rafter that ye have suffered a while, make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle you.

and hungry lion, is indefatigably restless in his contrivances and endeavours, by persecutions, frauds, and evil suggestions, to wound, tear, and ruin immortal souls; 9. Whom ye must courageously resist—steadfastly maintaining the pure doctrines of faith, and your holy profession of the same, in a firm dependence on the power and grace of Christ to vanquish him. And to prevent your being disheartened in the combat, remember that ye are only meeting with such a conformity to Christ in sufferings as your Christian brethren everywhere meet with in this evil world. 10. May therefore that God, who is rich in mercy, and who of his own great love is the fountain and giver of all grace, and who, by his Word and Spirit, has tenderly called us to the promised, prepared, and infinitely blessed inheritance of eternal glory, through the merits and mediation of Jesus Christ, after and by means of these your transient afflictions, render you perfect in knowledge and practice; establish you immovably in the faith, hope, profession, and holiness of the gospel; strengthen you with all might unto all patience, obedience, and suffering; and settle your souls with unshaken peace, safety, and comfort, on that foundation laid in Sion. 12. By Silas, whom I can recommend as a faithful brother, and whom I expect you will find such, I have sent you this short letter, to exhort and encourage you to abide by the testimony which I have herein given you for the confirmation of your faith, assuring you that this is the true gospel of the grace of God relating to salvation by Christ alone—in the doctrine, belief, and profession of which ye have lived, and I hope shall continue to stand fast, notwithstanding all the terrors and artifices of your enemies to bring you off from it.

Ver. 1. An elder. Rather, 'a co-presbyter;' a title adopted by Peter—(1) Because elder was a name of office better known among the Jews than almost any other, and completely setting aside the Romish claim of priesthood in the sense of 'sacrificer.' (2) That the Spirit by whom he wrote might, as by a prophetic anticipation, rebuke those proud titles and assumptions of superiority by which, in virtue of an original supremacy asserted for Peter, the popes of Rome, styling themselves his successors, have continued a terrible 'lordship over God's heritage,' ver. 3, except where the Alpine and Pyrenean churches in Europe, the Christians of St. Thomas in Asia, and a few other scattered churches, continued to preserve the truth of the gospel and their ecclesiastical liberties till the blessed Reformation restored the Bible, and light and liberty to the benighted churches and enslaved kingdoms. C.

Ver. 2. Taking the oversight (ἐπισκοπῆς), 'exercising the episcopate'—discharging your duties as bishops. See Ac. 20:17. C.

Ver. 5. The term 'elders' is here, as in ver. 1, official. It signifies the ministry of the church. Consequently the word younger must mean the flock, the people, the laity, as contradistinguished from the ministry. P.

Ver. 10. Make you perfect. Join you completely together as the timbers of a building.—Stablish, by supporting each part by means of its fellow.—Strengthen. Cramp and bind all the parts together.—Settle, by bringing all to rest on an even and firm foundation. The phrases are all architectural, and seem to be a beautiful reference to ch. 2:5. C.

Ver. 12. As I suppose. Rather, 'as I regard him.' C.

Ver. 13. Babylon. In apostolic times Babylon was still inhabited, and contained a large Jewish community. Doubtless it was while labouring among them Peter addressed this epistle to his brethren in other regions. P.

REFLECTIONS.—With an exemplary spirit and conversation, humbleness of mind, disinterestedness, cheerfulness, and diligence, ought ministers to inspect, instruct, warn, exhort, comfort, and govern the souls committed to their care by Christ, who redeemed them by his blood. And glorious, but free, is the reward that awaits them if they be found faithful. With great humility, submission to one another, self-humiliation under God's mighty hand, and casting our cares upon him, ought every one of us professed Christians to adorn our profession, and prepare for the eternal state. And constant should be our sobriety, watchfulness against and vigorous resistance of Satan, and resignation to our share of sufferings for Christ. It is a mercy that the saints' sufferings are so short and light, their assistance under them so great, and their reward after them, from the God of all grace, so inestimable and everlasting. Their standing for a little time in the faith and love, profession and practice, of the gospel, will quickly issue in their eternal triumphs in his praise.

THE SECOND EPISTLE GENERAL OF PETER.

The design of this epistle is merely to follow up the former with some additional illustrations and encouragements. It must be understood, however, as addressed equally to Jewish and Gentile converts, 'to all who had obtained like precious faith.' And though the references seem generally to imply that the parties were perfectly familiar with the Old Testament Scriptures, yet as the Old Testament had already been translated into Greek, there can be little reason for imagining that the Gentile converts would not be as well acquainted with them as the Jews. This brief epistle contains the following numerous references to the other Scriptures: Ge. 1. 6-9; 7. 1-9, 11, 16, 22, 23; 19. 16, 24, 25; Nu. 22. 5, 7, 21, 23, 28; Jos. 23. 14; 2 Sa. 23. 2; Ps. 102. 26; Is. 5. 19; 65. 17-19; Mat. 17. 1-5; Paul's epistles; and probably Re. xxi. C.

CHAPTER I.

1 Confirming them in hope of the increase of God's graces, 5 he exhorteth them, by faith, and good works, to make their calling sure: 12 whereof he is careful to remember them, knowing that his death is at hand; 16 and warneth them to be constant in the faith of Christ, who is the true Son of God, by the eye-witness of the apostles beholding his majesty, and by the testimony of the Father, and the prophets.

SIMON PETER,^a ^aservant and an apostle of Jesus Christ, to them that have obtained like^c precious faith with us ^athrough the righteousness of God and our Saviour¹ Jesus Christ:

though ye know them, and be established in the present truth.

13 Yea, I think it meet, as long as I am in this tabernacle, to stir you up, by putting you in remembrance;

14 Knowing^a that shortly I must put off this my tabernacle, even as our Lord Jesus Christ hath showed me.¹

15 Moreover, I will endeavour that ye may be able after my decease to have these things always in remembrance.

16 For^b we have not followed cunningly-devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye-witnesses of his majesty.

17 For he received from God the Father honour and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.

18 And this voice which came from heaven we heard, when we were with him in the holy mount.

19 We^c have also a more sure word of prophecy;² whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place,

CHAPTER I. Ver. 1, 2. Simon Peter—divinely called to be a ministering servant, and honoured to be an inspired messenger of Jesus Christ, in founding and forming the gospel church—to those Jews scattered in and about Lesser Asia, who, in the lovingly gracious dispensations of God, have been made partakers of a saving faith, of the same excellent nature and kind, as to its causes, acts, objects, fruits, and benefits, which we apostles and other believers have received; not through our goodness, but through faith and through the merit of that everlasting sacrifice which was brought in by the obedience and sufferings of Jesus Christ our divine Saviour—wishes all the blessings of grace and peace may abound, in their richest variety and fulness, to all and each of you, through your believing, experimental, and increasing acquaintance with our common Lord and Redeemer, and with God as our reconciled Father in him; 3. According as, in his almighty power and free favour, he has already bestowed upon us all those blessings which are requisite for maintaining and improving our spiritual life, till it be perfected in eternal life; and for every exercise of grace, in acts of piety towards God, till it be completed in glory; through the efficacious knowledge and faithful acknowledgment of him, and of the Father in him,—who has by the gospel, and through a living faith in Jesus Christ, tenderly called us to an inheritance of eternal glory, and to a courageous profession of our faith and hope of it; 4. By which divine Persons, and the glorious operations of their power through the gospel, are lovingly, freely, and graciously given to us the most inconceivably great, rich, valuable, honourable, and everlasting promises of the new covenant, fully furnished with all the transcendent blessings of grace and glory, that, by the application and fulfilment of these promises in all their variety, riches, and extent, ye might have fellowship with God, and have implanted in you a new nature, derived from him, conformed to him, and tending to and delighting in him,—ye having, as an introduction to and as a part and evidence of it, renounced and with vigour and abhorrence fled from the corrupt principles and practices which spread and prevail among unregenerate men, through the power of their depraved inclinations and inordinate affections to carnal things. 5-7. In consideration therefore of what ye have already received, ye ought, with the utmost care and diligence, to increase more and more in every grace and duty in their due order; particularly in active faith,—Christian courage in your holy profession and practice,—spiritual knowledge, wisdom, and prudence;—the due regulation and government of your passions and appetites, and weanedness of heart from the alluring objects of sense;—patience under tribulations, in a calm resignation to the will of your heavenly Father;—holy reverence of God, and conscientious attention to every ordinance of his worship, from a principle of love to him, in obedience to his command, and for his glory;—an affectionate love, tenderness, sympathy, and compassion, with all proper expressions thereof towards your fellow-Christians as brethren in Christ;—and a universal benevolence to all mankind, as partakers of the same human nature with yourselves, endeavouring to promote their temporal and spiritual welfare, whether they be friends or enemies: 8. For if these excellent graces be found in you, and be lively and enlarged in their exercise, they will render you thriving, active, and useful Christians; vigorous, diligent, and abounding in every good word and work relating to God, yourselves, and others, answerably to your fiducial knowledge and acknowledgment of Christ as our only Lord and Saviour. 9. Whereas those professors, who are destitute of the forementioned graces, or have no sensible experience of the exercise of them, are, amidst all their pretences to knowledge, in spiritual darkness; their eyes being shut against the light, or having only a glimmering, confused, and short sight, which cannot penetrate into the beauty and glory of Christ, his truths and ways;—and they have practically renounced their baptismal blessings and obligations, and remain unconcerned about the pardon and destruction of their natural corruptions and early wickedness. 10. Since the difference between real and nominal Christians is so great, and since so many take up with a profession, without the experience of true grace, do you, my beloved brethren, exert yourselves to the utmost in the use of all the appointed means of grace, to make sure your blessed calling to Christ, and renovation of your nature, that you may have a good hope, through faith in the sacrifice of Christ, of entering into everlasting life; for if it be manifested by the habitual exercises of the above-mentioned graces, whatever trials, failings, and infirmities may attend you, ye shall never finally apostatize from Christ, or fall into everlasting ruin; 11. But instead thereof, shall have an abundant measure of hope and joy in your way to the full enjoyment of God; and at last have, in death, a triumphant entrance into all the sublime dignity, affluence, and delights of that eternal kingdom of glory, which Christ has secured and taken possession of for the world, and which he invites all through faith to enter. 12-15. As these things are of so much importance, and yet so much opposed, I cannot but remind you of them, and urge them upon your consciences,—that, as ye have already known and firmly believed them, ye may be more and more affected with them and practise them: nay, while I continue living in this mortal body, and sojourning in this world, I must, in justice to these truths, and to your souls, repeatedly remind you of them, and earnestly urge you to practise them, lest, through the treachery of your memories or hearts, ye should forget and neglect them.—And I am the more solicitous to do this now, as I know that I must quickly leave this mortal state, and seal my testimony with my blood and death, as our dear Lord and Saviour long ago intimated to me.—And I am deeply concerned to leave behind me this, as well as my former epistle, in order to establish you in these truths, and stir you up to the practice of them, after I shall, by death, have departed from this state of sin, sorrow, and mortality, into a perfectly holy and blessed state of everlasting life with Christ. 16. For in making known to you the divine authority, power, and glory in which our Lord Jesus will come to judge the world at the last day, we have not craftily framed, nor artfully related to you, sophistical and idle stories, like many of the Jewish rabbins, or like the heathen romancers,—but that of which we had an emblem and earnest presented to our eyes and ears on the mount of transfiguration. 17, 18. Where we distinctly heard God the Father, who is infinitely glorious in himself, and dwells in the inaccessible light and glory of heavenly mansions, expressly attest our Redeemer as his dearly beloved and eternal Son; in whose person, offices, undertakings, and performances, he was exceedingly delighted; as he also is with all those who are united to him by faith, and clothed with his righteousness. 19. But beside this emblematical and presumptive proof of Christ's future appearance in divine power and majesty to judge the world, we have many more plain declarations of it in the Scripture, to which ye ought carefully to attend, as to a light to guide and direct you amidst the remaining darkness of Judaism, heathenism, and carnal ignorance of heart,—till at last the glorious appearance of Christ himself dissipate all obscurity or doubt about what was intimated by the vision on the mount, and is thus further confirmed by the predictions of Scripture. 20, 21. Meanwhile, ye may confidently depend on the prophetic attestation of Christ's glorious appearance,—being, first of all, fully satisfied that no prophecy of Scripture is the product of human invention, the ancient prophets themselves often not thoroughly understanding the meaning of their predictions;—for none of these ancient prophecies were either delivered or written according to the contrivance, will, and pleasure of the prophets themselves;—but those holy men, whom God set apart and sanctified for his service, spake and until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts:

20 Knowing this first, that ^{no} prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation.

21 For ^{the} prophecy came not in old time³ by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.

Ver. 8. The knowledge of Christ is well explained by Alford:—"The knowledge of him is the imitation of him: for as it is true that hereafter seeing him as he is will insure our being perfectly like him, so it is true that here the only way in any degree increasingly to see him as he is, is to become increasingly like him. He only can declare Christ who reflects Christ." P.

Ver. 10. Give diligence, &c. As, for example by self-examination on love to Jesus, according to that scripture, Jn. 14. 23. "If a man love me, my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him." C.

Ver. 18. "And this voice which came from heaven we (the three apostles, as witnesses) heard; and we have the prophetic word (concerning our Lord) thereby more (manifestly) confirmed." C.

Ver. 20. "No prophecy of Scripture (thus manifested to be real and confirmed) comes from any man's own discovery or private (unauthorized) exposition." C.

Ver. 21. This verse gives the reason for the statement made in the preceding, that prophecy is not the offspring of human intellect—the prophets themselves not always knowing the full meaning of utterances. They spake by the inspiration and at the will of the Holy Spirit. The verse ought to be translated as follows:—"For prophecy was never sent after (in accordance with) the will of man; but men spake from God (commissioned by him), impelled by the Holy Spirit." P.

REFLECTIONS.—It is a high honour to be instrumental in the conversion and sanctification of God's people. What precious faith, and multiplied grace and peace, come to them through Jesus' righteousness and the powerful operations of his Spirit! Tenderly he calls all people to a most glorious inheritance in heaven, and to a holy profession and practice in the way to it. Rich is that fulness of salvation which is given to them in the gospel promises: and great the deliverance from sin, and transformation into the likeness of God, thereby effected. Spiritual sloth indulged is as inconsistent with the gospel as the belief of man's merit of eternal happiness. Grace must be added unto grace, and we must grow in each. Nothing less will prove our devotion, manifest our title to heaven, or make us meet for it. So apt are professors to mistake or apostatize from the truth, that these things cannot be too often considered and inculcated; and the apprehended approaches of death ought to render both ministers and people the more active in their proper work. The truths of the gospel are too important to be dallied with, too certain to be discredited. And the more experience we have had of divine things ourselves, the more are we qualified to teach and recommend them to others. But it is on no human testimony, but on the infallible oracles of God, that our faith must be founded or practice regulated.

CHAPTER II. Ver. 1. But as there were false prophets among your Jewish ancestors who laboured to seduce them from the Lord into idolatry and other wickedness, so there will be, especially among your Jewish nation, false teachers, who, under various pretences, will covertly and craftily introduce the most pernicious errors, tending to the sudden, unexpected, and eternal destruction of both teachers and receivers, as they will both doctrinally and practically deny the glory and renounce the wisdom, authority, grace, and holiness of their Lord and Master, discovered in the gospel revelation of him—whom they boast of as their ancient deliverer from Egypt, and marvellous preserver for many ages afterward, and who is the acknowledged Saviour and Redeemer of all the world. 2. And through the natural depravity and enmity of their hearts against God and his ways, many nominal professors of Christ's name shall be seduced into their licentious and destructive principles and practices—on account of which the truths of the gospel, and the way of holiness and happiness therein prescribed, will be blasphemously reproached by its enemies; 3. And by flattering speeches shall these seducers, influenced by their covetous inclinations, labour to deceive you, in order to promote their own secular advantages. But, from the examples of others, it is manifest that the terrible judgments of God, long ago determined and threatened, hasten apace towards them, and shall in due season be executed upon them. 4. For if God did not show favour to nor abate the punishment of those angels that are of a far higher rank, who, through pride and envy, transgressed that law which he had given them for the rule and trial of their obedience, but, for their first offence, hurled them down, with righteous indignation, from their holy, happy, and honourable habitation in heaven, and confined them in a state and region of horror and despair, till, at the general judgment, they shall receive their public condemnation, and have their full torment begun; 5. And if he had no pity on the inhabitants of the old world who had despised all his solemn and gracious warnings by Noe, that faithful preacher of righteousness, repentance, and reformation, and of the righteous judgments of God against the impenitent, who, with seven only of his family, was saved, when God, by a universal flood of waters, drowned the rest of the inhabitants of the world for their obstinate wickedness; 6. And if, by fire and brimstone from heaven, he utterly destroyed Sodom, Gomorrah, Admah, and Zeboiim, on account of their horrid profligacy and unnatural lewdness, and set them up as a type or pattern of that final conflagration and eternal fire which shall consume all the wicked of the earth, that obstinate sinners of succeeding ages might see what they had to expect from his hand; 7. 8. While in distinguished kindness he plucked his righteous servant Lot as a brand out of the burning, who had been sorely grieved, fatigued, and oppressed in his own soul at the sight and report of the vile, dissolute, lascivious, obscene, and unnatural behaviour of that perverse and wicked people among whom he dwelt:—9. These undoubted facts invincibly prove that the almighty and infinitely wise Sovereign of the world perfectly knows at what time, and in what manner, and by what means, to extricate his faithful servants and worshippers out of all snares, troubles, and dangers, in the very worst of periods; and how to confine the wicked, though most powerful and crafty, under his supreme dominion, till the consequences of their sins come upon them in the judgment, when all reap the reward of their hearts and lives.—10. And according to his infinite wisdom and power, he will peculiarly reserve and punish those impious seducers who, answerably to their corrupt principles, live according to the carnal dictates and desires of their sensual minds, unrestrainedly gratifying their impure and lascivious inclinations, and insolently pouring contempt upon all regular government and authority over them that could put a check upon their vices. Daring, refractory, and headstrong, they seek only to please themselves, and make their own will their sole law, and fearfully and impudently reproach and rail at the apostles and other ministers of Christ, and at the civil magistrates whom God hath set over them to regulate and control their exorbitant passions, appetites, and manners; 11. While angels, who are far superior in dignity to these proud boasters, or any earthly magistrates, are so far from contemning or reviling these deputies of God, that they never use any opprobrious bitter language against the devils themselves. 12. But these presumptuous despisers of government, instead of imitating good angels, like furious beasts of prey, reproach, rage, and rail against persons and things, civil or religious, whose excellence they neither know nor approve; and therefore shall, by 12 But these, ^{as} natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, speak evil of the things that they understand not; and shall utterly perish in their own corruption;

13 And shall receive the reward of unrighteousness, ^{as} they that count it pleasure to riot in the day-time.⁸ Spots ^{they are} and blemishes, sporting themselves with their own deceivings, while they feast with you;⁹

14 Having eyes full of adultery,¹ and that cannot cease from sin; beguiling unstable souls: an heart they have exercised with covetous practices; cursed children:

15 Which have forsaken the right way, and are gone astray, following the way of Balaam the son of Bosor, who loved the wages of unrighteousness;

16 But^v was rebuked for his iniquity: the dumb ass, speaking with man's voice, forbade the madness of the prophet.

17 These^e are wells without water,² clouds that are carried with a tempest; to whom the mist of darkness is reserved for ever.

18 For^when they speak great swelling words of vanity, they allure through the lusts of the flesh, through much wantonness,³ those that were clean⁴ escaped from them who live in error.

19 While they promise them liberty, they themselves are the servants of corruption: for of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought in bondage.

20 Forⁱf, after they have escaped the pollutions of the world, through the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, they are again entangled therein, and overcome, the latter end is worse with them than the beginning.

means of their own indulged corruption and wickedness, be utterly and eternally destroyed; 13. Yea, shall be fearfully but justly punished for their complicated crimes, as persons who glory and delight in the most shameless intemperance and unchastity, and are a reproach to the Christian name, gratifying their luxurious inclinations, with their own deceived or deceiving devices, and cheating and imposing upon you, while, under pretences of love and friendship, they partake with you in your ordinary or religious feasts. 14. Their eyes are continually and insatiably employed in wanton and adulterous looks, to discover their own lewd inclinations, and to excite the like in others, or to find out proper objects for inflaming and gratifying the vilest affections. They cannot refrain from contriving or committing sin, or endeavouring to draw others into it; and so, by their enticements in word and deed, they ensnare such unguarded persons as are not established in the truth and holiness of the gospel, nor fortified with grace against their guileful arts. As children of wrath falling to destruction under the rule of God's righteous law, their hearts are entirely engaged in contriving how to fulfil their covetous desires after the riches and honours of this world. 15. 16. They have renounced the only true way of salvation through Jesus Christ, and of walking before God in faith and holy obedience, and have wandered into the ways of sin and error which lead to eternal misery, treading in the paths and copying the example of Balaam, who, amidst all his fair pretences, laboured to curse God's Israel, and directed how to seduce them into uncleanness and idolatry, in order that he might obtain worldly riches and honour; and was, by his own ass, when miraculously enabled to speak, sharply reprov'd for his infatuation and wickedness. 17. Amidst great pretences to and appearances of knowledge, they are really void of true wisdom and grace; and, instead of being truly useful, for the refreshment and fructifying of the church or their followers, they are carried about by the violence of their corruptions from one error and sin to another, till at last they shall be shut up in that infernal darkness, misery, and despair coming to them as their everlasting portion. 18. For by their high pretences to holiness and wisdom, they only vent the pride and vanity of their own hearts, and accommodating themselves to the sensual and lascivious inclinations of depraved nature, they ensnare such as had been once brought off from the errors of Judaism or heathenism, and had for a time shunned the conversation and practices of such as lead wicked lives according to their erroneous principles. 19. And while they promise their followers full liberty in indulging their vicious inclinations, they themselves are the worst of slaves to their own corrupt lusts, being entirely overcome and conquered by them. 20-22. For if, after they have been externally reformed from the gross and scandalous practices of the men of this world which lieth in wickedness, through the notions which they had received concerning Jesus Christ as a Saviour and Sovereign, they are again ensnared and involved in these abominations, and yield up themselves to the practice of them, their case is more aggravated, guilty, dangerous, and hopeless than it was before they knew anything of Christ and the gospel, and especially that it was when they had the first conceptions of these things; for their sin and punishment would really have been less had they never heard nor known anything of him, and his righteousness or law, than when, after acquaintance with his law, they revolt from that pure and holy doctrine which had been preached to them with a divine 21 For^a it had been better for them not to have known the way of righteousness, than, after they have known it, to turn from the holy commandment delivered unto them.

22 But it is happened unto them according to the true proverb, The dog is turned to his own vomit again; and the sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire.

CHAPTER III.

1 He assureth them of the certainty of Christ's coming to judgment, against those scornors who dispute against it. 8 warning the godly, for the long patience of God, to hasten their repentance. 10 He describeth also the manner how the world shall be destroyed: 11 exhorting them, from the expectation thereof, to all holiness of life: 15 and again, to think the patience of God to tend to their salvation, as Paul wrote to them in his epistles.

THIS ^{second} epistle, beloved, I now write unto you; in both which I stir up your ^{pure} minds by way of remembrance:

2 That ye may be mindful of the words which were spoken before by the holy prophets, and of the commandment of us the apostles of the Lord and Saviour:

and more lately by us apostles, whom Christ, the Saviour and King of his church, appointed for that effect, particularly what relates to his second coming to judgment, that ye may be fortified against the pernicious influence of secret and open seducers; 3, 4. Especially as ye have been fully warned, that, in this last stage of God's dispensations towards his church, there would arise profane despisers and deriders of the most important points of revelation—abandoning themselves to their own carnal devices and corrupt inclinations, and pretending, in a taunting manner, that the continuance of the world, in the same form as when those ancient predictions were given out, effectually proves that no such thing as a general resurrection or final judgment need be expected: 5-7. For they wilfully shut their eyes against the Scripture account of the alterations which the power of God has already made in the creation of this world, in the drowning of the old world by means of those waters which he had created in connection with the earth; and that the aerial heavens and this earth, as subsisting in their present forms, are, by the same almighty influence of God's will, upheld, and, as it were, treasured up, to be, at the end of the world, dissolved, not by water as formerly, but by a dreadful fire, to the torment and terror of all the wicked who have ever lived. 8. To fortify your minds against their cavils, drawn from the apparent delay of Christ's second coming, consider this, that one day and a thousand years are equally before God as any individual point of time, and that, in his reckoning, the longest space is infinitely less than a single day in ours. 9. Nor is the seeming delay of the promised coming of Christ to judgment any evidence of God's dilatoriness, or that it shall never happen; but it is intended as an exercise of his long-suffering towards us, who are faithful to his blessed Son—that all of us, in our several generations, may be delivered from eternal destruction, and brought to a true and evangelical peace when we turn from our iniquities. 10. But how long soever God may delay this great day of the last judgment, in which Christ shall appear in all his glory, it will certainly come, in its appointed season, in a most sudden, unexpected, and, to the wicked, in a most terribly ruinous manner. And on it the whole frame of this lower world shall be amazingly altered, and purged from all the effects of sin and the curse; and the earth, that so much beloved portion of carnal men, shall be utterly burned to ashes. 11-14. Since, then, we have sufficient reason to look for this great alteration of nature, and for the formation of new heavens and a new earth out of the ashes of the former, into which nothing but what is righteous and holy can enter, it becomes us, with the utmost watchfulness, care, and circumspection, to study the most perfect holiness and righteousness in heart and life, expecting, looking, longing, and preparing for that great event, and labouring that we may then be found united to and accepted in his person, washed in his blood, and sanctified and comforted by his Spirit.—15, 16. And to encourage you to this study of the most perfect holiness, fix it in your minds, that the great patience and forbearance of our Lord towards a sinful world is intended to promote your salvation and that of all other persons—even as Paul, that divinely inspired apostle, has hinted in his epistle to you; as he has also, in his other epistles, warned both Jews and Gentiles of this second coming of Christ, and its momentous consequences, and that believers should patiently wait for it—among which things there are some doctrines so sublime and spiritual in their nature, that weak and prejudiced persons cannot easily apprehend or receive them; and which, through their ignorance, pride, and other inward corruptions, they who are never taught of God, or are sceptical and unsettled in their principles, rack and torture to a wrong meaning, perverting the sense and use of them, as they do many other passages of the Old and New Testaments, to their own everlasting and aggravated destruction. 17. Since, then, you, my dear Christian brethren, are forewarned of these things, and assuredly know and believe that Christ will certainly come to judgment, and surely punish all the ungodly, take the most earnest heed lest any of you should, along with other apostates, be drawn aside from him and his ways of truth and holiness by the false notions, deceitful insinuations, and vile practices of impious, immoral, lawless men, and fall from that stability in the doctrines, purity, and profession of the gospel in which ye have hitherto persisted. 18. But to prevent all declensions and revolts, let it be your earnest prayer and endeavour, in the use of all proper means, to obtain a growing persuasion and sense of God's free favour, to wax stronger and stronger in the habits of grace, and more and more to abound in the exercise thereof; and in a clear, fiducial, practical, and experimental acquaintance with the person, offices, relations, doctrines, promises, and commandments of our divine Lord and all-sufficient Saviour Jesus Christ, and with your own personal interest in him.

Ver. 5. For this they willingly are ignorant of. Rather, 'For it is hid from the notice of those who so wish;' to wit, who wish that the promise of the Lord's coming should never be verified.—C.

Ver. 10. The contrast between the water and fire distinctly shows that the apostle is speaking of a literal elementary destruction; for to contrast a literal with a figurative event, without any note of difference, were to take away the key of all interpretation.—C.

REFLECTIONS.—The very best of Christian professors have need to be repeatedly stirred up to their duties, to be reminded of all the doctrines and commandments of Jesus Christ, and cautioned against the errors and evil practices of wicked and designing men. And the purer men's minds are, it is the more wicked to corrupt them.—How precisely the Scripture foretells the conduct of its adversaries, our own deists not excepted, and thereby renders their wicked opposition a proof of its own divine inspiration! But notwithstanding all the scoffs of his adversaries, with amazing patience does God delay the seasons of his wrath, particularly the last judgment, that sinners may have full space to repent and embrace his salvation. And delay of years is quite insignificant when compared with his absolute eternity.—In the most tremendous manner will Jesus come at last.—The heavens shall perish before him; the elements melt away; and the earth, with all that is therein, be burned up! How terrible for carnal men to have that world which they had chosen for their portion universally kindled into flames, to give them a final adieu, and fearful introduction into hell! But blessed is the change which shall then be made in the purification of our lower world, and in forming out of its ashes new heavens and a new earth, for the everlasting happiness of ransomed men. In the faith and contemplation of these great events, how circumspect, holy, and religious ought we to be! Fully should we be weaned from the world; be steadfast in our profession and practice; fervent in prayer for necessary supplies; and earnest to grow in grace, and in the knowledge of Christ our Lord.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE FIRST AND SECOND EPISTLES OF PETER.

The principal object of Peter's first epistle was to shield the hearts of Christian converts against the arrows of persecution;—and that of the second, to shut their ears against the delusions of heresy. It is important, therefore, to observe how the apostle deals, first, with persecutors; and secondly, with false teachers. In the case of persecution he finds the believers rejoicing 'that they are counted worthy to suffer,' 1 Pe. 1. 6. (1) He then teaches them submission to authorities, so as to put evil speakers to silence, 1 Pe. 2. 15. (2) To stand by conscience, and suffer without threatening or reviling, 1 Pe. 2. 19, 23; 3. 9. (3) Not to be afraid while the Lord is their trust, 1 Pe. 3. 14. (4) To take Christ, in his sufferings, as their example and support, 1 Pe. 3. 18; 4. 1, 12-14. In all this, the chief practical duties he inculcates and enforces are submission and patience. But, in the case of 'false teachers' and their 'destructive heresies' introduced in his second epistle, does he enjoin silence or submission? No;—he teaches to 'give place by subjection, not, not for an hour;' but in the same decisive tone in which our Lord denounced his woes against the Scribes and Pharisees, does he denounce 'their pernicious ways' (2 Pe. 2. 2); pronounce them 'spots and blemishes' on the fair garment of Christian-ity; and declare that 'their judgment lingereth not, their condemnation slumbereth not.' And although this language of our Lord and his apostle will by no means authorize any one to adopt the language of passion, or self-will, or reviling against the adversaries of the truth, yet it equally forbids him who is 'thoroughly persuaded in his own mind' to adopt the language of indifference, or of spurious charity, either towards false teachers themselves, or their destructive doctrines. C

THE FIRST EPISTLE GENERAL OF JOHN

Was probably written about twenty years after the destruction of Jerusalem, and chiefly to the Jewish Christians. The scope of it is to establish their faith in Christ, as the eternal Son of God, and promised Messiah; to lead them into affecting views of his and his Father's love in the work of our redemption, and thereby engage their love to God and to one another, and sweetly constrain them to depart from all iniquity, and yield a cheerful obedience to all his commandments, answer-ably to their high privileges, hopes, and obligations;—and, in fine, to exhibit a system of infallible marks for trying the reality of our grace.

[Although the name of the writer is not found in this epistle, yet, by the consent of all ecclesiastical history, it has been uniformly ascribed to John, the author of the Gospel; and the similarity of thought and expression between the epistle and Gospel, especially in the inculcation of love, points to 'the disciple whom Jesus loved,' and affords an ample confirmation of the acknowledged authorship. The date of the epistle is uncertain, and conjecture is useless. From ch. 2. 14, however, it would appear that there were, when the apostle wrote, several 'fathers' still alive who had 'known him that was from the beginning,' and that, consequently, the epistle was written previous to the destruction of Jerusalem.

It is worthy of special and constant remark that, besides its community of subject with the other books, every book of Scripture has its own peculiar subject and object. This epistle, accordingly, while it opens with the fundamental topics of the divine perfections, man's depravity, and Christ's propitiation; and while it interweaves throughout its whole texture many other great truths of the gospel, yet steadily keeps in view one special object—the evidences of a personal and saving interest in the Lord Jesus Christ, whereby believers may judge, and are enabled to 'know that they have eternal life, and that they may (should) believe on the name of the Son of God,' ch. 5. 13. These evidences, originating as from a fountain, in 'fellowship with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ,' ch. 1. 3, 7, run continuously throughout the whole epistle, so that it forms a personal test by which every sincere inquirer may be able 'to examine himself whether he be in the faith, prove his own self, and know (if a believer, however weak and fearful) that Christ is in him'—'the hope of glory.' The following Scriptures are more or less directly referred to throughout the epistle:—Ge. 4. 4-8; De. 13. 13; 1 Ki. 8. 46; Job 19. 26; 42. 8; Ps. 16. 11; 41. 9; Ec. 7. 20; Is. 9. 6; liii. 5; 55. 7; 61. 1; Je. 31. 33, 34; Mi. 6. 8; Ro. 3. 24. C.]

CHAPTER I.

1 He describeth the person of Christ, in whom we have eternal life, by a communion with God: 5 to which we must adjoin holiness of life, to testify the truth of that our communion and profession of faith, as also to assure us of the forgiveness of our sins by Christ's death.

THAT which^a was from the beginning, which^b we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, of 'the word of life';¹

2 (For 'the life'² was 'manifested, and we have seen it, and bear witness, and show unto you that eternal life, which was 'with the Father, and was manifested unto us;)

3 That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have 'fellowship

¹ Christ was THE LIFE; and he manifested it.—P.

CHAPTER I. Ver. 1-3. It is not upon slender and doubtful grounds, but on the most full assurance from hearing, seeing, and handling him, both before his death and after his resurrection, and upon the most remarkable spiritual experience of his power, glory, and grace, as well as by the infallible inspiration of the Holy Ghost, that we have preached unto you Jesus Christ, the eternal Son of God, who has all life originally in himself, and has, when manifested in our nature, secured life for us, and for ever bestows it upon us, in order that ye might have partnership and communion with us, as one spiritual and holy body, in all the gracious promises, ordinances, influences, blessings, and privileges which belong to the gospel state, in which we have communion with the Father in all the blessings of his love, communicated to us through faith in Christ, his eternal and dear Son, in all his righteousness and all the blessings of his sacrifice, and so also with the Holy Ghost in all his graces and comforts, as the earnest of our eternal and immediate fellowship with God in heaven. 4. And these great things I write unto you that ye may have a fulness of solid satisfaction and joy in this delightful and holy fellowship with God. 5. Now, as the knowledge of what God is, and who shall inherit this grand promise of eternal life, is necessary to your having comfortable fellowship with him, know that Jesus Christ and his Holy Spirit have taught us, that we might publish it unto you, that God is an absolutely perfect Spirit, infinite in wisdom, purity, blessedness, and glory, without the least mixture of with us: and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ.

4 And these things write we unto you, 'that your joy may be full.

5 This¹ then is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, that 'God is light, and in him is no darkness at all.

6 If² we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth:

7 But if we 'walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and 'the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.

8 If³ we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us.

anything defective or sinful. 6. It is therefore plain that all pretences to hold comfortable fellowship with him, or hopes of the eternal enjoyment of him, while we indulge ourselves in ignorance, error, or any sinful practices, are but an evidence of our hypocrisy, give the lie to our Christian profession, and are a practical contradiction to the nature and will of God, and to the whole tenor and design of the gospel, and even to the very nature and truth of things. 7. But if, as children of the light, we, according to our profession, habitually, delightfully, and progressively think, speak, and act under the direction and influence of his Spirit, in the ways of truth and holiness, according to the rule of gospel revelation, and after the pattern of God himself, in knowledge, wisdom, holiness, and comfort, then we,

SMYRNA FROM THE TOMB OF POLYCARP. [I. John, 1.]—Smyrna is a celebrated seaport town of Ionia, in Asia Minor. It was one of the richest and most powerful cities of Asia. The inhabitants were much given to luxury and indolence, but notwithstanding this they were hardy and warlike. Homer is said to have been born here. The church in Smyrna was one of the seven churches in Asia to which St. John referred in Revelation. There are to-day in Smyrna about 300,000 inhabitants, and it is the center of the trade of the Levant. There are a great many prosperous Jews living here, who, perhaps, control the trade of the city. We see before us but one minaret, which indicates the small influence of the Mohammedans. Smyrna is a beautiful and well-built city.

9 If^a we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.

10 If^r we say that we have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us.

CHAPTER II.

1 He comforteth them against the sins of infirmity. 3 Rightly to know God is to keep his commandments, to love our brethren, and to love the world. 18 We must beware of seducers: 20 from whose deceits the godly are safe, preserved by perseverance in faith, and holiness of life.

MY little^a children, these things write I unto you, ^bthat ye sin not. And if any man sin, ^cwe have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous:

2 And ^dhe is the propitiation for our sins: and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world.

3 And ^ehereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments.

4 He^o that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him.

5 But^h whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected: hereby know we that we are in him.

6 Heⁱ that saith he abideth in him ought himself also so to walk, even as he walked.

7 Brethren, ^jI write no new commandment unto you, but an old commandment, which ye had from the beginning. The old commandment is the word which ye have heard from the beginning.

8 Again, ^ka new commandment I write unto you; which thing is ^ltrue in him and in you: because ^mthe darkness is past, and the true light now shineth.

9 He ⁿthat saith he is in the light, and hateth his brother, is in darkness even until now.

as well as our fellow-Christians, share in a joint interest, communication, intimacy, and intercourse with him; and the foundation of this fellowship is, that the infinitely precious atoning blood of Jesus Christ, our anointed Saviour, his eternal and eminently beloved Son, is continually efficacious for cleansing us from the guilt, condemnation, and power of all our sins, and at last from all the inbeing and effects of it. 8. If any of us who pretend to be cleansed by the blood of Christ are so ignorant, proud, and vain as to imagine that, in this present state of weakness and mortality, we are perfectly purified from all the inclinations and workings of sin, we certainly deceive our own souls; and neither the truth of God's Word, which declares the contrary, nor any true light of knowledge, grace, or holiness, is found in us. 9. But if, under an humbling sense of our sinful imperfections and works, we sincerely confess them to the Lord, with faith in Christ's propitiatory sacrifice for the forgiveness of them, and with penitential shame, contrition, and abhorrence of them, and full purpose of heart by his grace to forsake them, he, in the faithful accomplishment of his promises, and in justice to the merit of his Son, will, for his sake, freely and fully forgive us all our sins, original and actual, and cleanse us from all the reigning power and defilement thereof, that we may be fitted for communion with him in this world and in that which is to come. 10. If we pretend that we have not transgressed the law of God, so as to need pardon by the blood, and sanctification by the Spirit of Christ, we deny the truth of what he has testified concerning every man in his Word, and thereby show that the truth of the gospel, which supposes us sinners, and leads us to Christ for salvation from sin, has no place in us.

Ver. 1. From the beginning. The difference between ἀρχὴ (Jn. 1. 1, 'in the beginning' of creation, and consequently before creation—from eternity; and ἀπ' ἀρχῆς (1 Jn. 1. 1, 'from eternity'; yet as it is connected, not with ἀρχὴ τῆς κοίτης αὐτοῦ (1 Jn. 1. 1, 'what occurred'), that interpretation is inadmissible, and the meaning must be 'from the beginning' (of the preaching of the gospel). See Jn. 15. 27; 1 Jn. 2. 7, 24; 3. 11; 2 Jn. 5, where this view is rendered certain by analogy. C.

Ver. 5. The first division of the epistle begins here, and its principal subject or theme is mentioned at the outset—God is light. This theme is developed in its nature and effects in regard to God's people. Light is a noble emblem of God. 'It unites in itself purity and clearness, and beauty and glory, as no other material object does; it is the condition of all material life and growth and joy.' P.—God is light, not to the bodily, but to the intellectual eye (2 Co. 4. 6)—the spirit. Now, light is defined by Paul, 'whatsoever maketh manifest,' Ep. 5. 13. 'Light' is therefore a just definition of 'God,' inasmuch as both good and evil, 'made (more or less) manifest' just in proportion as men see more or less of God. C.

Ver. 6. Darkness. Theoretical or practical ignorance of the real difference between good and evil, Mt. 6. 8. C.

Ver. 7. If we walk, &c. 'If we (on earth) walk in the light (of Jesus the incarnate Word, Jn. 1. 7-9) as he (our Father in heaven) is (dwelling and manifested) in the light.—One with another. God with us in giving the light of his Son; we with God, as walking and rejoicing in that light. C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is delightful when ministers preach Christ from experimental knowledge of him. But incontestable is the evidence we have of the gospel revelation concerning him and his benefits, and glorious is the fellowship which believers are thereby led into with him and his Father.—There is an absolute necessity of justification through his blood, and of holiness in heart and life, in order to have delightful fellowship with an infinitely high and holy JEHOVAH. And absurd is it to pretend that we either are or have been without sin in this world, or that we have fellow-

10 He^p that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and there is none occasion of ^qstumbling in him.

11 But^r he that hateth his brother is in darkness, and walketh in darkness, and knoweth not whither he goeth, because that darkness hath blinded his eyes.

12 I write unto you, little children, because ^ryour sins are forgiven you for his name's sake.

13 I write unto you, ^sfathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning. I write unto you, ^tyoung men, because ye have overcome the wicked one.² I ^uwrite unto you, little children, because ye have known the Father.

14 I have written unto you, fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning.

15 Love^v not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him.

16 For^w all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world.

17 And^x the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but ^yhe that doeth the will of God abideth for ever.

18 Little children, it is the ^zlast time: ^{aa}and as ye have heard that antichrist shall come, even now are there many antichrists; whereby we know that it is the last time.³

19 ^{ab}They⁴ went out from us, but they were not of us; for ^{ac}if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us: but ship with God, while we indulge ourselves in any sin. It is a great comfort, under all our felt and detested pollutions, that Jesus' blood is sufficient to cleanse us, and God, as faithful to his promise and just to his Son, must pardon and sanctify us. What an encouragement is this to gospel repentance, cordial confession, and earnest reformation!

CHAPTER II. Ver. 1. My inexpressibly dear fellow-Christians, I have written this to you to prevent your giving way to any known iniquity, or being surprised into it by temptation, or living in the practice of it; and that when, through infirmity and temptation, any of you fall into sin, ye may not despair of mercy or relief, but by faith rely on the glorious and prevalent intercession of Jesus Christ, in which he pleads our cause with his Father, the Judge of all, against all the charges of law and justice, and all the accusations of Satan, that our iniquities may neither be punished on nor suffered to prevail and reign in us, even upon the ground of his own finished and infinitely perfect righteousness, performed in our room and stead, by which he made a full and complete atonement for all the sins of the world, and calling all to believe, not only Jews but Gentiles, scattered everywhere in the world. 3. And let us rest assured that, if we have any saving knowledge of Christ, or faith in or love to him, it will powerfully influence us to a sincere, cheerful, and unreserved obedience to all his laws and gospel institutions. 4. To pretend to know, love, or believe on him, or to have had communion with him, without making conscience of keeping his holy commandments, gives the lie to our profession, and to the Word of God, and manifests that neither the gospel nor the REFLECTIONS.—The gospel at once delightfully dis-suades from sin, and provides relief under the oppressive sense of it. And happy is it that Jesus' ever-prevalent intercession for his people is founded on his infinitely valuable and all-efficacious atonement. But it is absurd to pretend knowledge of Christ, or union or fellowship with him, without conscientiously keeping his commandments and following his holy example.—Though now under the gospel the law of brotherly love has new mani-

no lie, and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in him.⁹

28 And now, little children, 'abide in him; that, 'when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming.

29 If ye know¹ that he is righteous, ye know² that 'every one that doeth righteousness is 'born of him.

CHAPTER III.

BEHOLD,^a what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, 'that we should be called the sons of God: therefore 'the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not.¹

2 Beloved,^a now are we the sons of God; and 'it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but 'we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him;² for we 'shall see him as he is.

3 And 'every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure.

4 Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law: 'for sin is the transgression of the law.

5 And ye know that 'he was manifested to take away our sins; and in him is no sin.

6 Whosoever¹ abideth in him sinneth not: 'whosoever sinneth hath not seen him, neither known him.

7 Little children, 'let no man deceive you: he that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as he is righteous.

8 He^o that committeth sin is of the devil; for the devil sinneth from the beginning. 'For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil.

9 Whosoever is born of God 'doth not commit sin; for his 'seed remaineth in him: and he cannot sin, because he is born of God.

10 In^a this the children of God are manifest, festations and enforcements, it was always the same in substance. And it is impossible for men either to be or live like Christians without practising it. In Christ's family on earth what different degrees are there of grace and experience! But the weakest saints have their sins fully forgiven them, and love their heavenly Father. And the more they grow in grace, the more established are they in the faith, and capable of resisting and conquering the devil and his instruments; while the ripest for glory have the deepest acquaintance with God and his counsels.—But, alas! the prevailing love of this world is a fatal enemy to all true practical religion. Its precarious, empty, and perishing pleasures, riches, and honours, often carry off men's hearts from everything eternal and divine. Crafty seducers and ruinous errors greatly plague the church in every age. And how many, by their apostasy from the practice and profession of the gospel, manifest that they love the world more than God, nor rest not in his Son! Infinite, then, is the mercy that the Holy Ghost, by his enlightening and attractive influences, convicts sinners and leads to Christ, so that none of them need ever fully or finally apostatize from his truths or ways, and that his blessed promise of eternal life secures their growth in holiness and honourable appearance before his tribunal.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 1. Behold with attention, admiration, gratitude, joy, and praise, what free and transcendent love and mercy the great JEHOVAH hath bestowed on us in making us, who are in ourselves altogether worthless, mean, vile, and contemptible sinners, his regenerated and adopted sons, heirs of himself and all the blessings of his new kingdom! No wonder the carnal and wicked men of this world do not esteem, love, or own, but hate us who bear his image, since they are ignorant of his nature and will, and do not esteem, approve, nor acknowledge either Father or Son. 2. My dear fellow-Christians, notwithstanding our many natural and sinful infirmities, and our apparently despicable meanness, we are already the sons and heirs of God by regeneration, adoption, and marriage union to his Son; and therefore, though neither worldly men around us, nor even ourselves, can as yet conceive the excellency of our station, or the full glory and happiness that are annexed to it, yet, by faith and by the witness of his Spirit, we certainly know that when Jesus Christ shall appear in his glory to judge the world, we, by the views and influences of his divine and mediatorial glory, then fully revealed, shall be made and appear like him in light, and love, holiness, happiness, and glory. 3. And wherever the true and well-grounded hope of this is, it powerfully and the children of the devil: whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother.

11 For 'this is the message⁴ that ye heard from the beginning, 'that we should love one another.

12 Not as 'Cain, who was of that wicked one, and slew his brother. And wherefore slew he him? Because his own works were evil, and his brother's righteous.⁵

13 Marvel not, my brethren, 'if the world hate you.

14 We^y know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not 'his brother abideth in death.

15 Whosoever^a hateth his brother is a murderer: and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him.

16 Hereby^a perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us: and 'we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren.

17 But 'whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of 'compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?

18 My little children, 'let us not love in word, neither in tongue; but in deed and in truth.

19 And^e hereby we know that we are of the truth, and shall assure⁶ our hearts before him.

20 For⁹ if our heart condemn us,⁷ God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things.

21 Beloved, 'if our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God.

22 Andⁱ whatsoever we ask, we receive of him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight.

23 And 'this is his commandment, That we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ, 'and love one another, as he gave us commandment.

24 And 'he that keepeth his commandments dwelleth in him, and he in him. 'And hereby influences to aim at, and endeavour through grace to attain, all possible purity in heart and life, in imitation of and conformity to him and his superlative purity and holiness. 4. But whoever wilfully lives in any known sin, not only rebels against the light, grace, and obligations of the gospel, but manifestly violates the moral law, which is holy, just, and good; for the strict and proper notion of sin is a deviation from or contrariety in disposition, thought, word, or deed, to the law of God, that unchangeable rule of righteousness which is a transcript of his holy nature and will. 5. And nothing can be more evident than that the allowed practice of any sin is inconsistent with a good hope of being glorified together with Christ at his second coming, since the whole gospel shows that the end of his first appearance in the flesh was, that, by his sacrifice of himself, he might deliver us from the guilt, power, pollution, and inbeing of our sins; and his perfect holiness caused all sacrifice for himself to be needless, and renders it impossible for him to have fellowship with wilful sinners. 6. Such therefore as abide in him by vital union and gracious fellowship cannot sin deliberately, habitually, presumptuously, and wilfully. And if any professor sin in this manner, he has not then any spiritual knowledge of or faith in Christ, nor any experimental and saving fellowship with him. 7. Let we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit which he hath given us.

CHAPTER IV.

1 He warneth them not to believe all teachers, who boast of the Spirit, but to try them by the rules of the catholic faith: 7 and by many reasons exhorteth to brotherly love.

BELOVED, believe^a not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God: because many false prophets are gone out into the world.

2 Hereby^b know ye the Spirit of God: Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God:

3 And^c every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God: and this is that spirit of antichrist, whereof ye have heard that it should come; and even now already is it in the world.¹

4 Ye^d are of God, little children, and have overcome them: because greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world.

5 They^e are of the world: therefore speak they of the world, and the world heareth them.

6 We^f are of God: he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth not us. ^hHereby know we the spirit of truth, and the spirit of error.

7 Beloved,ⁱ let us love one another: ^jfor love is of God; ^kand every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God.

8 He^l that loveth not, knoweth not God; ^mfor God is love.

9 Inⁿ this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him.

The word anti-christ occurs only in the epistles of John, and there only five times—once in the plural, and four times in the singular. The first passage has both the singular and plural forms, ch. 2. 18. In that passage the singular term must signify a person, and one of whose coming those addressed had previously heard, probably from 2 Th. 2. 3-10. The plural form is an appellation, intended to describe those who, in the apostle's own time, showed the spirit and held the dogmas of the coming antichrist. In the context it is indicated that while they had at one time professed to belong to the church, they were not true members, and they had even given up profession. In ch. 2. 22 the word is again used to distinguish all such as exhibit identity of character and principles with the antichrist. The same may be said of this verse. The only other place in which the term occurs is 2

Jn. 7. There a class is alluded to all the individuals of which show the same characteristics. In all these passages the signification of the term is the same—it means one who denies Christ; who denies the glory of his person, the dignity of his office, and the result of his work. Antichrist, therefore, is one who opposes the fundamental doctrines of Christianity:—especially, (1.) The incarnation, and all that resulted from it. (2.) The historical facts of the life, sufferings, death, and resurrection of our Lord. (3.) The possibility of such a union of God and man as was exhibited in Christ. Antichrist is also called a deceiver: that is, one who, while professing to belong to the church, and professing to give some honour to Christ, would yet undermine the fundamental doctrines of Christ and his church, and thus fatally deceive mankind.—P.

10 Herein^a is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins.

11 Beloved, ^bif God so loved us, we ought also to love one another.

12 No^c man hath seen God at any time. ^dIf we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us.

13 Hereby^e know we that we dwell in him, and he in us, because he hath given us of his Spirit.

18 There^o is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear; because fear hath torment. He that feareth is not made perfect in love.

19 We^p love him, because he first loved us.

20 If^q a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?

therefore no false teacher impose upon you, my dear children. Fix it in your minds, as a certain and important truth, that it is only they who, from principles of faith and love, conscientiously and habitually work righteousness in all their dealings with God or men, that are sustained, as faithfully and actively righteous before God, in conformity to Jesus, who loved and constantly fulfilled all righteousness. 8. Whoever deliberately, habitually, presumptuously, and wilfully works iniquity, under the influence of his inward corruptions, is a child and obedient subject of the devil, who, from the very beginning of time, has constantly persisted in sinning himself, and in tempting his fellow-angels and mankind to sin, to their everlasting ruin. Now, this is so contrary to everything said, done, or countenanced by Christ, that he, the eternal Son of God, came into this world as sent by his Father, that, by his doctrine, obedience, and sufferings, he might counteract the devil, and deliver men from that sin and misery which he had introduced. 9. Whosoever therefore is, by faith and the power of the Holy Ghost, made partaker of a divine nature, is no longer a wilful and habitual worker of iniquity, like the devil and his children; for that divine principle of grace which was infused into him in his regeneration will by its divine power tend to rule and govern him, that he can no more love and live in sin, or sin with deliberation and full consent of his will, as he was wont to do, or continue impenitent in the sins into which he had been surprised by temptation; because, being a child of God, and born of the Spirit, he has received an indwelling habit or principle of grace that wills and works in direct opposition to all sin. 10. By these habitual inclinations and exercises, either in opposition to or in favour of sin, are the children of God and those of the devil plainly distinguished, and openly discovered and known to be such; for let men's pretences be what they will, if they do not love and habitually live in the practice of religion and morality, and have not a sincere and cordial affection for their Christian brethren, it is impossible they can be the regenerated or adopted children of God. 11. For both our Lord himself and his apostles and servants have all along urged that, if we profess to be his followers, we should dearly love one another, and labour to promote one another's real advantage. 12. Not imitating Cain, that first-born of our fallen parents and notorious child of the devil, who, under the malignant influence of that infernal father, cruelly murdered his brother Abel, for no other reason but because his works were better in themselves, and more respected by God, than his own abominable actions. 13. Never therefore marvel at it, as a new and strange thing, if wicked men, those children of the devil, should hate you, as Cain did Abel, there being an established enmity between the seed of the woman and of the old serpent. 14, 15. And never let us be uneasy under the hatred of the world, since God loveth us; and since our sincere and cordial love to all that bear his image is a manifest proof that we are translated from a state of condemnation to a state of justification and adoption to eternal life, and are quickened from a death in sin to a life of righteousness and holiness; whereas they who do not love the saints, as beloved by and belonging to Christ, and bearing his image, are still in a state of condemnation and spiritual death. Nay, he that, instead of cultivating this Christian temper towards his brother, indulges wrath, malice, envy, and revenge, is, in God's reckoning, a murderer; and such a one the Word of God represents as having no principle of spiritual life abiding in him, or any title to or meanness for eternal life.—16. Since, then, the eternal Son of God freely and cheerfully gave himself an offering and sacrifice to God, to make atonement for our sins and secure our eternal salvation, we have a marvellous evidence of the truth and greatness of his love towards us, with which we ought to be so deeply affected and influenced as to stand ready to expose our very lives for encouraging the faith and hope of his ransomed people, and for the preservation of such as are eminently serviceable in the church. 17. But if, instead of copying Christ's example, we can see our Christian brethren in necessitous circumstances, yet harden our hearts against them, and decline relieving them when God has put it in our power, how can we pretend to have the faith of God's love to us, or any interest in or real love to God abiding in us? 18. Let us not, my brethren, content ourselves with even the strongest expressions of compassion and kindness to our fellow-Christians and neighbours, but let us demonstrate our love in proper acts of beneficence and service, and in offices of substantial friendship, according to our professions: 19. And by the prevalence of this excellent temper and conduct we have sure evidence that God has regenerated us by his Word of truth, and brought us to understand, believe, and live under the government of the true principles of the gospel as sincere Christians, and shall be emboldened to appeal to him for our integrity, whatever censures the world may pass upon us, which will comfortably free us from the stinging reproaches of a self-condemning conscience. 20. For if our conscience, which is the deputy and candle of the Lord, witness against, accuse, and condemn us of allowed hypocrisy in our professions of love, or of adherence to the truths of the gospel, what an awful sentence may we expect from God, who is infinitely more great and just, and better acquainted with our whole conduct! 21. But if our conscience, upon due deliberation, under the enlightening and witnessing of the Holy Ghost, according to the truths of the gospel, acquit us from all charges of reigning or allowed guile, we may, in proportion to our consciousness of this, have humble boldness in our claim of God as our God and Father, in our professions of love to him and his people, and in appeals to him concerning our integrity, and a holy freedom, courage, and liberty of soul in our fiducial pleadings with him. 22. And our unfeigned respect to all his commandments, and endeavours always to do what is acceptable in his sight by Jesus Christ, are an evidence that we have such interest in his favour as that we shall receive, in due time, whatever blessings we sincerely and humbly pray for, according to his will, with faith in Christ, and for right ends.—23. And this is the great commandment of God which is fundamental to and comprehensive of all the rest, that we should heartily receive and rest upon Christ alone for salvation, as he is offered unto us in the gospel; and, influenced by this faith, should love all his people as his members, in obedience to his commandments. 24. All they therefore who conscientiously keep his commandments, from a principle of faith working by love, manifest that they live in a state of vital union to and gracious fellowship with Christ and his Father, and have these divine persons dwelling in them by faith; and we who stand in this near and happy relation to Christ and his Father are assured that he lives with abiding influence in us, by the light, energy, and witness of his Holy Spirit, which he has freely given us, to produce, excite, and assist in the exercise of faith, love, and every other grace, in our souls.

Ver. 9. Doth not commit sin—cannot sin. 'Cannot be guilty of deliberate and habitual vice' (Pyle). 'Is no longer a wilful and habitual worker of iniquity—can no more love and live in sin, or sin with deliberation and full consent of his will' (Brown). 'A strong disinclination to sin' (Dodderidge). In presence of these high authorities, the following view is suggested with great diffidence, but a conviction of its truth requires that it be stated: When the apostle affirms of the child of God that 'he cannot sin,' this disposition depends upon his new birth and the abiding seed of truth, Ja. 1. 18; 1 Pe. 1. 23—whence it is evident that it is the transformed and renewed man, Ro. 12. 2, the 'law of the mind,' Ro. 7. 2; 'the divine nature,' 2 Pe. 1. 4, the principle of love, Ro. 13. 10, that 'sinneeth not,' and 'cannot sin'; while yet in the same man the 'law of the members' is still striving for the mastery, and compelling him to a perpetual warfare; and 'the deeds of the body' are, in the same man, still to be 'mortified,' 'through the spirit,' that 'the new man' may live unto God, Ro. 7. 18–25; 8. 1–13. See Brown's note, ch. 5. 4. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Astonishing is the love of God in awakening sinful men by the operation of the Holy Spirit. And notwithstanding their mean or contemptible appearance on earth, great shall be their glory and happiness in the last judgment and the eternal state. Evangelical hopes of everlasting happiness powerfully influence to the study of holiness in heart and life, and an inward principle of grace, under the influence of the Holy Ghost, graciously leads to hate and oppose everything sinful—as a rebellion against God, a counteracting of Christ's mediation, and an imitation of and obedience to Satan.—Faith as working by love, and love as influencing to an obedience to all God's commandments, are the principal characteristics of a Christian. And it is not high professions, but true and practical love to our fellow-Christians, and the conscientious regard to all the laws of God, that will evidence us true believers, children of God, and temples of Christ, his Father, and Spirit. But nothing can more effectually prove us the devil's children and servants than neglect of or murderous hatred against our fellow-Christians or neighbours.—There is need, then, of a thorough self-examination on these points. And if we cannot abide the trial of our own consciences, how shall we abide the judgment of a heart-searching God!

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 1. Take heed, my dear fellow-Christians, to whom God has given his Spirit, that ye do not hearken to nor be seduced by every pretender to that Spirit, or by every doctrine which such a one may broach under colour of extraordinary light and immediate revelation; but, before you espouse these high pretenders, carefully examine, by the oracles of God, what manner of spirit they have, what doctrine they preach, what lives they lead, and what aims they follow; and there is great need of your being very cautious on this head, as, according to our Saviour's predictions, multitudes of impostors are now gone abroad, and making a great noise in the world. 2, 3. Now, that ye may certainly distinguish the spirits, know that every one who, under profession of preaching by the light and inspiration of the Spirit, cordially believes, freely owns, and boldly professes his faith in Christ as the eternal Son of God, who hath assumed our nature, and fulfilled all righteousness in our stead, and, for our eternal salvation, appears to be truly inspired and authorized by God. But whoever denies that Christ is the true God, or promised Messiah, or denies his true manhood, or satisfaction therein for our sins, is not enlightened nor authorized, nor born of God; but is actuated by that spirit of opposition to Christ and his truths which has already begun to appear in the world. 4. Ye, my dear children, are born of God, and have been taught by his Spirit to avoid, withstand, and overcome these impostors, and their errors and wicked practices, by the steadfastness of your faith, profession, and obedience—God, who dwells in you by his Spirit, being infinitely superior in wisdom and power to that antichristian spirit which is gone forth into the world, and to Satan himself, under whom it acts and works in the children of disobedience. 5. The views, interests, and doctrines of these impostors relate to the riches, honours, and pleasures of this present evil world, and therefore they propagate such notions of secular dominion and grandeur as are agreeable to carnal men; and hence their hearers, who place their happiness in worldly things, hearken to them, and greedily suck in their corrupt doctrines, as most suitable to their own inclinations. 6. But we who preach an incarnate and crucified Saviour as the only way to everlasting happiness, are enlightened, approved, sent, and owned by, as well as born of, God. Whoever therefore truly knows anything of God, according to the discoveries which he has made of himself in Christ by the gospel, diligently attends to and heartily receives the divine truths which we preach by the direction of his Spirit. But they who have not been enlightened and renewed by God pay no regard to our spiritual doctrine concerning Christ as the only true Messiah, nor to us who preach it. By this we easily and clearly discern whether men preach under the direction of God's Spirit of truth, or under the influence of the erroneous spirit of the devil.—7, 8. Now, to return to what I much aim at in this epistle, let all of us labour always to maintain, express, and show forth the most sincere and brotherly affection one to another; for such love is begotten, commanded, and approved by God, and it manifests him that lives in the exercise of it to be a child of God, regenerated by his Spirit, and possessed of an experimental, appropriating, and transforming knowledge of the perfections and will of God; and, on the other hand, he that is a stranger to the exercise of love to the saints or his neighbours, appears ignorant of the nature and will of God; for God is, in his very nature, an infinity of grace, mercy, and love; and in his thoughts, purposes, and dispensations, has manifested himself an infinitely glorious and engaging pattern of kindness and goodwill. 9, 10. And this his love has been peculiarly manifested towards us in his freely sending his only begotten and infinitely well-beloved Son to assume our nature, and by obeying and dying in our stead to atone for our sins, who are mean worms, enemies, and ungodly wretches, that thereby he might secure eternal salvation and happiness for us, and graciously give it by faith. 11. Now, if God loved us at so high and astonishing a rate, we whom he has thus loved and redeemed by the precious blood of his Son most certainly ought, under the influence of this love, and in imitation of it, to maintain the most ardent affection towards our Christian brethren for his sake, and in obedience to his will. 12. But since our love to God himself cannot be drawn out by any bodily sight of him, let us show it by our regard to the saints, those visible representations of him; for if we love one another as bearing his image, it manifests that we love him, and that he dwells in us by his Spirit to produce this love; and thereby his love to us is eminently and most effectually manifested, and ours to him is brought to its true form, and eminently exercised and proved to be sincere: 13. Yea, by this we have a comfortable evidence of our dwelling, by faith and love, in union and communion with God through Christ, and of his dwelling in our souls by gracious manifestations and influences; because he has freely afforded us rich communications of his Spirit to win and animate this faith and love, and to cast a light upon his own work in us. 14. And we apostles who were eyewitnesses of Christ's manhood, preaching, miracles, sufferings, death, resurrection, and ascension to glory, do, upon infallible evidence, attest that the eternal Father sent his only begotten Son to take upon him our nature, and by this his course of obedience and sufferings to be the Redeemer of both Jews and Gentiles, who do or shall believe on him, throughout the whole world. 15. Whoever therefore, in these perilous times, from a principle of faith and love, boldly confess Jesus Christ to be the only begotten Son of God and only Saviour of lost sinners, thereby manifest that God dwells in them by his Spirit, who has led them to these just sentiments of Christ, and that they dwell in God by faith and love, through the great Mediator.—16. And we who have the experience of this are fully persuaded, on the ground of gospel revelation, and the concurring witness of the Spirit with our spirits, that the most peculiar, transcendent, and distinguishing love is in the heart of God towards us, and is manifested in his sending his Son to be the propitiation for our sins, that we might live through him, and thus enjoy God, as altogether love, mercy, and grace to us; without any mixture of fury or wrath against us. And if we live under the power of a hearty and ardent love to him, and to his children for his sake, he and we have the most delightful and reciprocal union and communion: 17. Yea, this manifestation of the sincerity and strength of our love encourages us to hope that we shall appear, with humble confidence, before him, as true believers, in the awful day of judgment; because, as he is all love to us, so we, even in this tempting and insuring world, have our hearts filled with a supreme love to him, and with a sincere and ardent love to his children for his sake. 18. This love is indeed ever attended with a holy filial reverence of him, and cautious fear of offending him; yet, as we thereby know that we are passed from death to life, there is no distrustful, despairing, or terrifying fear of him in it, as if he were our enemy. And the more strong and fervent our love is, under an assuring sense of his love to us, the more effectually it banishes all diffident, slavish, and tormenting fear of him. 19. For our love to him is kindled by, and is the fruit and effect of, his free love to us, which was from eternity in his gracious purposes, and was manifested in time by gracious declarations and works, in order that our hearts might be won in love to him; 20. And this our superlative love to him is necessarily connected with a sincere love to all his children. To pretend to love God, and yet indulge an uncharitable, irreconcilable, and malicious temper towards our fellow-Christians, is to give the lie to our profession, and to all the declarations of Scripture, concerning true love to him; for if we bear not a love to our brethren in the faith and fellowship of the gospel, whom we have seen with our bodily eyes, and in whom we discern visible traces of the image of God, how can we ever love God himself, who, being invisible, can make no impression of himself upon our bodily senses to affect our heart, or move or engage our affection!

Ver. 2. The Docete, an early race of antichristian teachers, denied the humanity of Christ, and against them this test seems to be directed. It will not, however, follow, as Humanitarians would infer, that our Lord was a mere man; but, on the contrary, clearly implies, as does Paul elsewhere, that he might have come in the 'nature of angels,' or in 'the form of God,' He 2. 14–16; Phi. 2. 6. Ver. 3. That spirit (rather, 'mark') of antichrist 'which confesses not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh,' Romanists deny to be applicable to the Pope, because it confesses to this doctrine. Now, in one sense this is true; in another, and the only important sense, it is untrue. By the coming of Jesus Christ in the flesh, 'he bore our sins in his own body on the tree,' and his blood cleanseth us from all sin; whereas the Romish traditions ascribe the cleansing from sin and acceptance with God to penances, purgatory, and masses, the merits and intercessions of the Virgin Mary, apostles, saints, and angels; and thus, setting up human inventions, make altogether void the scriptural doctrine of the incarnation and atonement of the Son of God. C.

Ver. 12. No man hath seen God at any time—that is, in his spirituality and infinity: for his spirituality is essentially invisible to bodily eyes, and his infinity incomprehensible by any created intellect. But God has, since the creation, been manifest by his Word, God the Word, by a divine manifestation, appeared to our first parents, to Abraham, to Moses, and, finally, he 'was manifest in the flesh,' and the apostles 'beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth.' C.

Ver. 18. That 'there is no fear in love,' is a simple statement of fact; for love is the desire of, and delight in, and devotedness to God, on account of his excellencies. But while 'there is no fear in love,' it does not follow that there is no species of fear attendant upon, or inseparably connected with, love. A slavish fear of God as a King, a guilty fear of God as a Judge, there is none in the believer; but a filial fear of God as a Father is equally excited by all his attributes. C.

REFLECTIONS.—When, in every age, there are so many crafty seducers, there is always great need to try preachers and doctrines by the unerring standard of God's Word. And it is a mercy that, when worldly-minded men so eagerly follow worldly-minded impostors, God so marks his faithful ministers with truth, holiness, and success, in winning souls, that every unbiased observer may discern the difference.—Astonishing is God's love to us in first so caring for us as to give his only begotten Son to be our atoning sacrifice, and our effectual Saviour and portion; and in giving his Spirit to dwell in us, for the gracious application of all his glorious blessings. What can engage our hearts to a grateful love to God, a candid and open confession of his truths, and a sincere and affectionate love to his people, if this do not? The consciousness of God's loving us, and our loving him by his grace, affords us great comfort and boldness in all our dealings with him.—But never let me reckon myself a Christian if I do not love all men, especially the saints, as far as they bear Christ's image.

CHAPTER V. Ver. 1. Fix it in your minds, as the most important truth, that whoever cordially believes that Jesus Christ is the promised Messiah, and depends on him, as the anointed Prophet, Priest, and King of his church, for all salvation, is regenerated by the Spirit of God; and such as, from this principle of faith, have a supreme love to God, esteem of, desire after, and delight in him, cannot but bear a good will to and delight in every Christian brother, as beloved of God and spiritually begotten after his image. 2. And then we love the children of God aright, on account of their relation and likeness to him, when our love proceeds from such a prevailing love to himself as inclines and engages us to endeavour after all holy obedience to his commandments. 3. Yea, such an impartial respect and delightful obedience to all God's commandments, without counting any of them a heavy burden, is alone the distinguished mark of an unfeigned and governing love to him. 4. For whosoever is truly regenerated by the Spirit of God, he himself, and all that new nature which is produced in him by faith in Christ and by virtue derived from him, will so withstand, overcome, and triumph over the terrors and allurements of the men and things of this world, as not to be disheartened by the one, nor drawn aside from his duty by the other. 5. But it is only by believing on Christ as the true Messiah and only begotten Son of God, and depending on him, by a lively and effectual faith, for justification, sanctification, and complete salvation, that any man, Jew or Gentile, can be so weaned from and mortified to the things of this world. 6. Now, the character of this Saviour of the world was well attested at his baptism and in his bloody death, and, after his resurrection, by the powerful influences of the Holy Ghost, in applying his salvation to multitudes, and in the miraculous gifts bestowed and cures effected for the confirmation of the gospel. 7. For there are three divine persons, the habitation of whose glory is in heaven, who thence bore and still bear testimony to the incarnate Saviour as the true Messiah—the Father, by repeated declarations from heaven, and by raising him from the dead; the Son, by repeated avowals of his divine and mediatorial character, and by authoritative instructions and unnumbered miracles wrought in his own name; and the Holy Ghost, in visibly descending on him at his baptism, and by coming forth from him, after his ascension, to spread his name, kingdom, and glory in the world.—And these three, though personally distinct, in a manner which infinitely transcends our most enlarged conceptions, are not only equal in power and glory, but essentially one thing, being, and substance; one God, in distinction from and opposition to the many pretended deities of the heathens and others. 8. Meanwhile, on earth, the miraculous gifts and saving graces of the Holy Spirit; the spotless purity of Christ's human nature, his holy doctrine, and ordinance of Christian baptism; his blood or righteousness represented in his supper, and applied to the consciences of believers—harmoniously attest him as the divine, complete, and only Saviour of sinners. 9. If, then, we readily depend, in the most important matters of life, upon the testimony of two or three credible men, how much more may we depend on the testimony of these three divine persons and things, that Christ is God's only begotten and eternal Son, and the only true Messiah. 10. Whosoever therefore, upon this divine evidence, cordially believes and trusts in this incarnate Son of God as his only and all-sufficient Saviour, has not only received into his heart the witness of God, but has in his soul an experimental and satisfying testimony of the suitability, worth, and excellency of Christ; and of his ability, willingness, and authority to deliver him from all sin and misery, and bring him to all spiritual and eternal happiness; but whosoever rejects the testimony which God has given concerning his Son in the gospel, as altogether sufficient, and given to him in particular for salvation, flatly contradicts and gives the lie to the most high, holy, and faithful God. 11. Now, this is the sum of the testimony which God bears concerning his Son—that, in infinite love, he has made a full and free offer of grace and glory to us sinners of mankind in the everlasting gospel; and, according to his own everlasting and infinite love, has graciously and tenderly conferred upon us who believe in him a full right and title to, meanness for, and beginnings, earnestness, and foretastes of eternal life—as all secured by, lodged in, communicated by, and to be enjoyed in a state of union and communion with Christ. 12. These divine testimonies concerning Christ I have set in so clear and strong a light before you who, under a sense of your helpless, guilty, and ruined state, have heartily received and rested on him as your only Saviour, that, by the Word of God, and witness of his Spirit with your spirit, ye may have a comfortable assurance that ye have not only the earnest and anticipating possession of eternal life, but have the whole of it in Christ your Head; and that ye may be excited and encouraged more and more steadfastly to believe in, and depend for your whole salvation upon, the merits and mediation of the only begotten Son of God. 13. And we who truly believe in him are not only assured that God will bring us safe to everlasting happiness, but that he will graciously grant us whatever blessings we ask by faith in Christ's name, according to the declarations of his will given us in his Word. 14. Now if God so readily hear the prayers that are offered to him with faith in the name of Christ, we ought to pray for forgiveness of sins of every kind to our Christian brethren and fellows of mankind, in hopes of obtaining it—except only the sin against the Holy Ghost, which God has fixed as unpardonable, and infallibly connected with eternal damnation. 17, 18. Every disposition, thought, word, or deed, contrary to that equity prescribed by God's law, is sinful; but every sin is not that unpardonable transgression. Nay, whosoever is really regenerated by the Spirit of God, on account of the Spirit's continued indwelling and influence in his soul, and the immortal nature of that grace implanted in him, and through his own watchfulness against and hearty detestation of sin, has an effectual security against being ever seduced into that unpardonable sin. 19. Now, we certainly know that we have by regeneration been made partakers of a divine nature, as a powerful and abiding principle of holiness, and that all the rest of the world, who have never experienced this new birth, continue voluntarily under the power of sin and Satan. 20. And from all the undoubted proofs before insisted on, we certainly know that Jesus Christ, the eternal Son of God, hath assumed our human nature, and come into our world to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself; and that he hath not only given us an external revelation in his Word, but a saving knowledge of him as the Way, the Truth, and the Life, by an internal operation of his Spirit. Yea, we are vitally united to him who is the true and faithful Witness as Mediator, and as the Son of God is the only living and true God, together with the Father and Spirit, and who, having all life in himself, is the Purchaser and Giver of spiritual and eternal life to us. 21. Let me therefore beseech you who have such relation to and fellowship with the true God, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, to abstain from every appearance of fellowship with pagans in their idolatrous worship, or from giving anything too high a place in your hearts.

'Water and blood' also occurred at his death to testify to his humanity, which was one of the chief points, because of the errors of the Docetæ, John was required to prove. See ch. 4. 2. 3. C.

Ver. 10. 'He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness' (namely, the witness referred to in ver. 9, and fully stated in ver. 11) in himself. He believes in Christ, and the very fact of his doing so is an internal witness that God 'has given him eternal life, and that life is in his Son.' The full testimony in the consciousness of the believer may be thus stated:—The Spirit by whom we are born again to eternal life, and who is purifying our minds, elevating our thoughts, and giving us love to God and man; the conviction of the perfect adaptation of the Saviour's atoning work to the wants of our souls, and the confidence resulting therefrom; the peace now reigning in our hearts as the consequent of pardon. These are the inward witnesses at once to the divine mission of Christ, and to the life which God has given us in him. P.

Ver. 12. He that hath the Son—(1) Hath him in his faith, by believing the doctrine concerning him, and confidently trusts in him for salvation, 2 Jn. 9. (2) Hath him in his love, whereby he leaves all things for his sake—honours, serves, and follows him. C.

Ver. 13. And that ye may (should) believe, &c. Which rendering is agreeable to the Greek, removes the tautology, renders that last clause of the verse intelligible and agreeable to the tenor of the epistle, which was to prove, on the force of divine evidence, that men 'should believe on the name of the Son of God.' C.

Ver. 16. His brother. A Christian brother—a true child of God; else were he no Christian brother.—Not unto death. A sin not to end in natural death.—And he shall give him. That is, not to him that prays, but to him that has sinned 'not unto death.'—There is a sin unto death. This statement has been grossly misrepresented by marginal references to Mat. 12. 34, 35; Mar. 3. 29; Lu. 12. 10; He. 6. 4, 6; 10. 26—whereas to these scriptures it bears no reference whatsoever. The true reference is to 1 Co. 11. 30, where bodily sickness and sleep (the Christian's death) are directly ascribed to the merciful judgment of God correcting his people for an unworthy approach to the Lord's table. C.

REFLECTIONS.—There can be no real Christianity without being begotten and born of God by his implantation of a supernatural and vital principle of grace in our heart. But no inward principle of grace can be manifested without actings of faith on Christ, of love to God and his people, and of weakness of heart from the pleasures, riches, and honours of this world. But the more fully and firmly we, through the gospel, believe on Christ as our divinely-sent and well-qualified and furnished Saviour, the more complete will be our weakness from and victory over the world.—What infallible testimonies concerning Christ are revealed unto us to encourage and found our faith in him! Nothing, then, can be more highly reasonable than to rest in him, assured of our eternal life in and through him as the free gift of God. And it is highly criminal and ruinous to our own souls, by discrediting his gospel declarations and promises, to give the lie to JEHOVAH's solemn attestations. It is a sure ground of hope in our pleading for every necessary blessing, that Christ has purchased and intercedes for it, and God has promised, for his sake, to bestow it. But dreadful, as well as unpardonable, is the crime of desperate and wilful rejection of Christ and the gospel; and great need have Christians to guard against every approach to it, and to make sure their regeneration by God's Spirit, as an effectual preservative against it. Thrice happy are they who conscientiously improve their assured knowledge, faith, and hope, in carefully keeping their heart and life for God alone, in opposition to every idolatrous rival.

THE SECOND EPISTLE OF JOHN.

'The Elder,' is a title derived from age, or experience as equivalent to age; and as John was now the senior apostle,—most probably the senior Christian,—the title would be peculiarly appropriate. It is also a title which John was likely to employ in preference to his own name, which he was accustomed to suppress.

'The Elect Lady.' Clemens Alexandrinus supposes to have been a Babylonian named 'Eclecta'; and the Vulgate, Boothroyd, and others, render the words 'the lady Eclecta'; Benson and others translate the inscription 'To the elect Kyria'; Cassiodorus believed the epistle to have been addressed to a particular church; others, that it was intended for the Christian church generally, comp. Is. 54. 1; Ga. 4. 24, &c. The authorized version is supported by Beza, &c.; and both the absence and use of the Greek article (ver. 1, being comp. with ver. 13) appear to decide in favour of this opinion. C.

1 He exhorteth a certain honourable matron, with her children, to persevere in Christian love and belief, lest they lose the reward of their former profession: 10 and to have nothing to do with those seducers that bring not the true doctrine of Christ Jesus.

TOMB OF POLYCARP. [II. John, i.]—This view is taken from the mountain overlooking Smyrna, at a point where it is said Polycarp, Bishop of Smyrna, was martyred and buried. Polycarp was a pupil of St. John, and was one of the most illustrious of the early fathers of the church. He was martyred under the persecution inaugurated under Marcus Aurelius and Lucius Verus. When brought before the proconsul who was to pass sentence upon him, Polycarp was asked to give up his religion. He replied: "Eighty and six years have I served Him, and He never did me wrong, and how can I now blaspheme my King that has saved me?" Polycarp was burned alive. This tall cedar tree marks the spot where his ashes lie buried. There is not in the whole country around Smyrna a finer point of observation than this. From here we see the city, the sea and the mountains.

your abundant wealth, but for your experience of, conformity, and regard to those truths,—I, who am an aged ruler of the Christian church, wish to you and yours the most abundant enjoyment of all those new-covenant blessings which proceed from the redeeming mercy and grace of God our Father, through Jesus Christ our dear and now exalted Saviour; and that you all may be thereby animated to walk in truth and in universal love, according to the tenor of that glorious gospel with which he has favoured you. 4. It was with inexpressible pleasure that I found when with you some, though not all, of your children graciously converted to Christ by the power of his gospel truths, and firmly adhering to them, and earnestly practising them, in a course of progressive holiness, thereby manifesting the truth and liveliness of their inward grace, according to the commandment which we have received from God the Father. 5, 6. Let me therefore beseech you, my dear and honoured lady, that according to the law of God, long ago delivered under the Old Testament, and more lately inculcated on us, with additional motives and obligations, by our dear Redeemer in the days of his flesh, you and your children would earnestly persevere in the most affectionate love to, sympathy with, and care for, all that bear his image, and that you would manifest your love to him in a constant, laborious, and progressive study of holiness, in all manner of conversation, according to his commandments, which have been so plainly and faithfully delivered unto you. 7, 8. I the rather beg your earnest attention to these things which you were taught when first you embraced the gospel, as many preachers have now gone abroad into the world, who, pretending a mission from Christ, an uncommon zeal for his truths, and love to the souls of men, do, in direct opposition to his declarations, interests, and honour, maintain that he did not assume, nor obey, nor suffer in a true human nature, but merely in appearance of it: let me therefore beseech you, and other Christian friends to whom this letter may come, to be on your strictest watch, and to guard against the seductions of such, that ye may not fall short of the gracious reward of your acceptance, profession, and practising of the gospel, and your sufferings for it, which you expect; and that we ministers may not lose the comfort which we hoped to have in your distinguished eternal salvation, as the seals of our ministry: 9. For as he who believes with his heart the doctrines of the gospel concerning Christ's person, offices, and work, and steadily adheres to them in his profession and practice, hath a spiritual knowledge of, interest in, and fellowship with Christ and his Father; so he who does not believe, teach, and practise them, but labours to seduce his hearers into the contrary errors, has no saving knowledge of, interest in, or fellowship with either. 10, 11. If therefore any preacher appears among you who does not declare and inculcate these very doctrines concerning Jesus Christ, and the redemption of sinners through his blood, according to the riches of God's grace, which we delivered unto you, see that ye give him not the smallest encouragement, by entertaining him in your houses, or wishing him any success in his ministrations; for whoever wishes him success, or familiarly converses with him, is accounted by God as a criminal encourager and assistant of him in spreading his errors, to the dishonour of Christ and the eternal ruining of men.

Ver. 13. From comparing ver. 4, 13, it will appear highly probable that the apostle had found some of the children of these two pious sisters at a distance from their mothers, for such separations are unavoidable, and that the chief object of his writing was to convey that most delightful of all earthly intelligences—the community of family religion, which promises and secures to the separated on earth the meeting of a family in heaven. C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is a great pleasure for ministers and Christians to observe persons of quality and their children heartily embracing the uncorrupted doctrines of the gospel, and walking answerably unto them; and to see the grace of God spreading through a whole family. And exalted blessings from Jesus Christ and his Father are secured to such by their fellow-Christians' prayers. True religion does not abate civil respect, but gives a spiritual turn to the most dutiful and affectionate salutations. True faith in Christ always manifests itself in a cordial love to God and his people, and in a conscientious obedience to his law; and those only have the benefit of a special relation to Christ and his Father who continue steadfast in the faith of the gospel, and persevere in all holy obedience. It is very dreadful, after a long profession of gospel truth, and much apparent experience of God's grace, to be at last disappointed of that ample satisfaction which we expected in that course. But inexpressible is their guilt who attempt to subvert any of the leading truths of the gospel. And highly sinful and dangerous is it to have fellowship with them, or to give them the smallest countenance in their conduct. Let Protestants, let Britons, think and tremble!

THE THIRD EPISTLE OF JOHN.

'Gaius' (in Latin, Caius) is a name occurring on four other occasions, viz. Ac. 19. 29; 20. 4; Ro. 16. 23; 1 Co. 1. 14. Who this Gaius was, or where he resided, is unknown;—but it matters not. His character survives, that, in these latter days, Christians may learn what primitive Christians were. C.

1 He commendeth Gaius for his piety. 5 and hospitality 7 to true preachers: 9 complaining of the unkind dealing of ambitious Diotrophes on the contrary side, 11 whose evil example is not to be followed: 12 and giveth special testimony to the good report of Demetrius.

fellowship with Christ, and delightful conformity to him, in a lively exercise of faith, hope, love, and new obedience. 3, 4. For I was exceedingly filled with joy and comfort when some of those who go about preaching the gospel informed me of your remarkable experience of the power of Christ and his gospel truths, and with what faithfulness and integrity you profess, adhere to, and improve them, in a delightful, edifying, and progressive practice of holiness; for nothing gives me greater pleasure than to hear that those who have been converted to Christ by my ministrations continue steadfast in their holy profession of gospel truth, and more and more adorn it by a lively Christian conversation. 5-8. You act like a true believer, and a faithful follower of Jesus Christ, in your candid and disinterested benevolence to poor saints, particularly to such as are driven from their homes for their adherence to him, or go about preaching his gospel—some of whom, being greatly affected with your distinguished kindness, made mention of it in our public worshipping assemblies.—And you cannot employ your substance better than in further assistance of such in carrying on their work, as an imitation of your kind and merciful God, and a token of your gratitude to him, for calling you, by his grace, to his kingdom and glory.—For to the honour of Christ and his gospel, and to manifest their entire disinterestedness in their labours to win souls, these ministers have freely preached the gospel to the Gentiles, refusing to accept of a necessary subsistence from their new converts: we ought therefore cheerfully to entertain them in our houses, and, according to our ability, supply them with necessaries—that we may thus assist them in the propagation of the glorious gospel, to the honour of Christ and the salvation of multitudes. 9, 10. I indeed wrote to your church to provide for such preachers; but Diotrephes, that proud ambitious man, who attempts to lord it over his hearers and fellow-ministers, refused my letter a public reading, or hindered the people's compliance with its contents; but, if the Lord will, I intend to visit you, expose his wicked conduct, and censure him for it; for he not only throws out a multitude of false and ill-natured reflections on me and other faithful ministers of Christ, and refuses to show any kindness to persecuted and travelling preachers, but does all he can to hinder such as have inclination or ability to supply them; and even pretends to excommunicate from the church, and deliver up to Satan, these afflicted brethren, if not also such as entertain them. 11. Dear friend, never make him nor any other your pattern in anything sinful; but, in imitation of Jesus Christ and his Father, exercise yourself in brotherly kindness, and in every other branch of holy conversation. For it is only those who do so that are the children of God and heirs of his kingdom. But they who indulge themselves in pride, hatred of brethren, or the like, have no spiritual knowledge of nor fellowship with him.—12. Demetrius is a most excellent person, whom I, and all that regard either truth or the gospel, do and must speak well of. Let him, under Christ, be a pattern which you study to imitate.

REFLECTIONS.—Bodily health is an invaluable mercy when it enables us to improve our spiritual gifts and graces for the extensive benefit of mankind. And delightful is it when Christians remarkably increase and flourish in grace and good works, and when their faith and love to Christ, and his ministers and people, are such as cannot be kept secret.—Alas! what a plague to the church are proud, insolent, domineering imposers of their tenets, and malicious revilers of Christ's truths and faithful ministers, who will neither do good themselves nor suffer others that would! Richly they deserve to be detested by every Christian, and exposed and censured by every church.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE FIRST, SECOND, AND THIRD EPISTLES GENERAL OF JOHN.

The FIRST EPISTLE is peculiarly characterized by a pervading strain of love—God's love to sinners; the debt of love due by Christians in return; love to the Father necessarily begetting, in one child, love to all the members of the Father's family;—these are the topics upon which the apostle delights to expatiate, the peculiar prominence of which concurs with the record of the historian, in which it is stated, that, in his extreme old age, when unable to walk, he was accustomed to be carried into the Christian assembly at Ephesus, to look upon the people with the tenderness of a dying father; and that, being unable to read or preach, his custom was to summon up all his energies for one sentence—'Children, love one another!'

tive domestic Christianity, and as a record of the superabundant reward that pious mothers receive when their prayers and instructions are blessed in the conversion of their families. The sisters appear to have been two widows—but the Lord was more than a husband to each, and more than a father to their fatherless children.

The THIRD EPISTLE is remarkable as portraying some striking varieties in the character of professing Christians. The features depicted are few; but, like the outline pencillings of some master-hand, they fully exhibit the peculiarities of the originals. Truth and hospitality stand personified in Gaius; ecclesiastical ambition and selfishness, in Diotrephes; while Demetrius stands forth one of those rare specimens of excellence in principle and manner that 'win golden opinions from all men,' while they sacrifice their truth and their consistency to none. C.

THE GENERAL EPISTLE OF JUDE.

The author of this epistle was the brother of James, as all copies of the original testify. He is called in the Gospel Judas, with the addition of his surname, Lebbeus, or Thaddeus, to distinguish him from Judas Iscariot. This epistle so nearly coincides with the second of Peter, that it would seem to have been written upon the same occasion, and, either after a conversation with Peter, or after the reading of his epistle, which Jude seems to quote. Within this short epistle there are references to Ge. 4. 6; 5. 18; 19. 24; Nu. 14. 29; 16. 1; 22. 7-21; 26. 64; De. 29. 23; Eze. 14. 7; Da. 10. 13; Zec. 3. 2. 4. 5. C.

1 He exhorteth them to be constant in the profession of the faith.
 4 False teachers are crept in to seduce them: for whose damnable doctrine and manners horrible punishment is prepared: 20 whereas the godly, by the assistance of the Holy Spirit, and prayers to God, may persevere, and grow in grace, and keep themselves, and recover others out of the snares of those deceivers.

JUDE, the servant of Jesus Christ, and brother of James, to them that are sanctified by God the Father, and preserved in Jesus Christ, and called:

2 Mercy unto you, and peace, and love, be multiplied.

3 Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation, it was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you that ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints.

4 For there are certain men crept in unawares, who were before of old ordained to this condemnation; ungodly men, turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness, and de-

Ver. 1. Judas—not Iscariot, but the brother of James the less, and kinsman of Jesus Christ according to the flesh, sent forth by his immediate commission to preach the gospel to those Jewish Christians who, in the judgment of charity, appear to have been called of God the Father to make known his eternal heart of love, and in consequence thereof preserved in Christ from dying in their sins, and graciously called to partake of all the blessings of the gospel in time and eternity; 2. Wishes the most tender compassion and favour of a gracious God, and peace with him and with one another, and the best prosperity of every kind, and all the excellent fruits and rich manifestations of his special and distinguishing love in their utmost fullness. 3. My dear Christian brethren, when I, with much thought and care, applied myself to write somewhat to you concerning that spiritual and eternal salvation which answers the circumstances of every sinful man, and is offered in the gospel to all that hear it, and which all believers, Jews and Gentiles, share of, directed by the inspiring Spirit of God, I found it peculiarly necessary, with the utmost earnestness, to stir you up to the most fervent zeal, active diligence, and careful concern, to maintain, defend, and practise the pure and uncorrupted doctrines of the gospel, concerning the person, offices, righteousness, grace, and government of the Lord Christ, which have been by him, through his holy apostles, delivered to all his followers who are holy in heart and life, as a trust and treasure to be by them faithfully kept, and fully and purely transmitted to posterity.—4. For according to the ancient purposes and predictions of God, there have clandestinely, by craft and flattery, crept in among you impious and heretical men who, under pretence of embracing the Christian religion, represent the doctrines of God's grace as an encouragement to wanton and lascivious practices; and who, by their doctrine and conduct, plainly undermine the whole authority of God's law, and reject the gospel doctrine concerning the divine person and offices of Christ, as the Prophet, Priest, and King of his church, and his gracious salvation of men from their sins to holiness and happiness. 5-7. To deter you from the smallest regard to or compliance with these seducers, seriously remember how your Hebrew ancestors, after God had miraculously delivered them from their Egyptian bondage, were almost every one of them cut off by terrible judgments in the wilderness for their disobedience and unbelief; and how the highly dignified angels who revolted from God by sin were cast down into hell, and are, by the curse of his law and their own wickedness and misery, reserved, like condemned and chained prisoners, till the last judgment—when their torments shall be completed, and they, with all apostates and impenitent unbelievers, shall depart into the most tremendous everlasting punishment!—And in what a fearful manner God, by fire and brimstone from heaven, destroyed the Sodomites and their neighbours of Gomorrah, Admah, and Zeboim, for their unnatural lust, men with men; and set them and their country as an emblem of that everlasting destruction which is prepared for wicked angels and men. 8. In like manner, these profligate seducers delude themselves and others with their foolish and impure imaginations, indulge their fleshly lusts, and even pollute their bodies by unchaste dreams and lewd practices; and contemn, revile, and rail against all government and governors in church or state, so far as they tend to restrain their exorbitant vices. 9, 10. Yea, though Michael, that eminent chief of the holy angels, when disputing with the devil about the burial or concealment of the body of Moses from the Israelites, who would have readily worshipped it, did not venture to return the reviling and opprobrious language of that foul spirit, but solemnly left him to the righteous judgment of God, for his attempting to draw his people into the most flagrant sin against his divine majesty, crown, and dignity: these daring pretenders fear not to vilify the most excellent things, civil or sacred, of the proper use, design, and benefit of which they are totally ignorant; and even in such things as by the light of nature they cannot but know to be unlawful, they act as if they had no principle of reason to direct and govern them, and in a perverse, sensual, and brutal manner debase themselves beneath human nature. 11. The most dreadful curses must therefore suddenly overtake them; for, like Cain, they envy, hate, and are disposed to murder such as deserve their highest respect; like Balaam, for the sake of worldly honour or wealth, they are ready to act the most treacherous, hypocritical, malicious, and destructive part against the people of God; or, like Korah and his companions, they set up themselves in the most daring manner against the governors whom God has appointed in church or state, and shall, in a most awful form, be at last swallowed up in everlasting flames. 12. They are a scandal, reproach, and an infectious defilement to your feasts, civil and sacred, while, fearless of guilt or punishment, they labour only to gratify their luxurious appetites; and while they put on false appearances, as if they would be most refreshing, useful, and comforting to mankind, they are quite destitute of any real goodness; unstable as clouds, they are driven about by their own lusts and passions from one error and vice to another, and become more and more dead in sins, and hopeless of recovery. 13. In the most turbulent, pernicious, and noisy manner, they, to their own shame, throw out their furious reproaches and malicious slanders against the doctrines, ministers, and followers of Christ,—and their corrupt principles and vicious inclinations. Under all their pretences to be noted lights for the direction of others, themselves are utterly ignorant of real religion, and wander from the truth and holiness of the gospel, and run about spreading their wicked principles, temper, and courses, till at last they shall be plunged into the eternal horrors of that misery, despair, and damnation which God has prepared for them as their just punishment. 14, 15. It was partly with respect to such persons that the famous Enoch foretold Christ's glorious coming, attended by his saints and angels, to the last judgment—publicly to convince, expose, and condemn to eternal punishment, all ungodly persons, for their premeditated, malicious, and wicked deeds, and for their virulent speeches which they have thrown out against his pernying the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ.

5 I will therefore put you in remembrance, though ye once knew this, how that the Lord, having saved the people out of the land of Egypt, afterward destroyed them that believed not.

6 And the angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, he hath reserved in everlasting chains, under darkness, unto the judgment of the great day.

7 Even as Sodom and Gomorrah, and the cities about them, in like manner giving themselves over to fornication, and going after strange flesh, are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire.

8 Likewise also these filthy dreamers defile the flesh, despise dominion, and speak evil of dignities.

son, gospel, and cause, and upon his members and faithful servants for his sake: 16. Which conduct exactly tallies with that of the seducers I am now warning you against; for these secretly murmur against God and his providence, against magistrates and ministers, against Christ and his followers and ways, and are continually finding fault and openly quarrelling with all his doctrines and dispensations, being quite dissatisfied with their own state and condition in the world; and with restless minds are pursuing their own vicious inclinations to unlawful pleasures; and, at the same time, talking in lofty and unintelligible strains, and with high pretences to knowledge and religion—speaking the most excessively vain and conceited things of themselves, and extravagantly flattering, caressing, and extolling such as are of their own party, however vile, especially if they be rich, or ready to grant them some worldly advantage, to gratify their covetous or luxurious temper. 17, 18. Now, my dearly beloved brethren in the Lord, beware of being stumbled at the rise of such seducers, or their scornful derisions of everything sacred, or their abandoned practices, since our Saviour and his apostles have given you such plain and express warnings of them. 19. For these are the very persons of whom you have been warned—men that make factions and divisions in the church, alienating themselves from the true apostles, servants, disciples, and doctrines of Christ, and forming separate parties of their own sentiment, as if they were more holy than others; whereas they are entirely governed by their animal appetites, lusts, and passions, and are entirely destitute of the enlightening, purifying, and sanctifying gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit. 20. But guarding against being misled by men of such corrupt principles and practices, persevere with integrity and faithfulness in your holy profession, and, by all proper and appointed means, endeavour to promote your own and your fellow-Christians' spiritual establishment and advances in grace, holiness, and comfort, upon that foundation of faith which is laid in the doctrines of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone; and upon that principle of faith in you which purifies the heart, works by love, overcomes the world, and derives all grace out of Christ's fulness, to enable you to grow up to all perfection in him, who is the head; and continue habitually instant in prayer, under the direction and influence of the Holy Spirit to help your infirmities. 21. And thus constantly endeavour to approve yourselves to God, as those that sincerely and fervently love him and delight to keep his commandments; and in order hereunto, study to maintain a sweet and experimental sense of his special love to yourselves—looking, hoping, and longing, in a prepared state and frame, for the final manifestations, fruits, and effects of the grace and mercy of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, in that merciful sentence he shall then pass upon you, unto your complete deliverance from all sin and sorrow, and admission to all the blessings of eternal life. 22, 23. And in order to your own and others' edification in faith and holiness, great care and prudence must be used in dealing with such as have been

The apocryphal book of Enoch was known to the earliest of the Christian fathers; but it seems questionable whether that discovered in Abyssinia at the close of last century is the original, or a remodelled edition. It contains the words here cited almost verbatim. Probably the traditional sayings of Enoch had been collected before the Christian era, and were subsequently remodelled by Christian writers.—P.

seduced into any sin or error. Such as have been shaken or drawn aside through inadvertence, ignorance, and weakness, must be treated with great tenderness, meekness, condescension, endearing kindness, and compassionate concern, to recover and establish them.—Others that have gone farther lengths, and appear obstinate and hardened, must be more sharply dealt with; and their sin and danger must be set before them in the most alarming manner from the Word of God, and needful censures be inflicted upon them—in all which the utmost care must be taken to have no fellowship with them in their polluting courses. 24, 25. Now, to the Lord Jesus Christ, whose character I have represented as peculiarly suited to your encouragement and relief under your present troubles, and who has almighty power originally in himself as God, and all official authority and qualifications as Mediator, and having graciously undertaken it, is as willing as able to preserve you from apostasy, and from irrecoverably stumbling into error or wickedness, and, after your state of warfare is accomplished, to present you to himself and his Father perfectly holy and unblemished, and completely accepted in his immediate presence, and glorified together with him in joy unspeakable, and amidst the triumphant and ecstatic joys of all the established angels and ransomed saints—even to this God our Saviour, who, together with the Father and Spirit, is infinitely, originally, essentially, and communicatively the only wise God,—be ascribed all the glory of his divine nature and attributes as God, and of all his love, grace, designs, undertakings, and performances, and all the grandeur of his heavenly majesty, as God-man Mediator, together with universal rule and government, might and authority, over all persons and things in the kingdom of providence and of grace—now, henceforth, and for evermore.

Ver. 1. Had Jude, the author of this epistle, been the same as Judas Lebbeus, one of the twelve, there is scarcely a doubt that he would have called himself an apostle. This would at once have given his epistle the stamp of authority. As he has not done so, it seems in the highest degree probable that he was not an apostle, and that the James mentioned as his brother was the well-known president of the council at Jerusalem, and author of the epistle which bears his name. Jude was thus one of the brethren (or, as I believe, a brother) of our Lord. P.

Ver. 4. Ordained to this condemnation. Literally, 'before written,' that is, had their condemnation prophetically foretold. They were not, and consistently with the attributes of God, they could not, be ordained to commit sin (see Ja. 1. 13, 14); but on account of that sin which God foresaw, described, and denounced, they were ordained to suffer a righteous judgment.—Denying, &c. According to the grammatical canon established by Middleton, &c., the translation of this passage, following the Syriac and Coptic, should be, 'denying our only Lord God Jesus Christ.' C.

Ver. 5. I will, &c. But I wish to remind you, even you who already know this—stirring up your minds lest you should overlook the lesson through your very familiarity with the history. C.

Ver. 6. Their first estate. The original condition of their creation; spiritually, a condition of 'truth,' Jn. 8. 44.—Their own habitation. Their own proper situation, by aspiring to some higher' (Benson).—Note. While conjecture is scarcely ever to be indulged, yet is it not probable that as the covenant with Adam on earth required abstinence from a particular tree as a restraint on his natural appetite, so the covenant with the angels may have required their abiding in a particular place as a similar restraint on their natural capacities of winged movement? See 2 Sa. 22. 11; Is. 6. 2; Da. 9. 21; Re. 8. 13; 14. 6. C.

Ver. 7. Suffering (typically, in this world) the wrath of God in the world to come. C.

Ver. 9. The fact here referred to is not found in any existing Jewish writer. There can be no doubt, however, that it was an authentic tradition, and being so, it is brought forward by Jude as an example and warning to Christians. P.

Ver. 12. Twice dead. The leaf of profession withered: the root of doctrine plucked up. C.

Ver. 22. Making a difference between them—as misled through simplicity, and others who seduce through malignity. C.

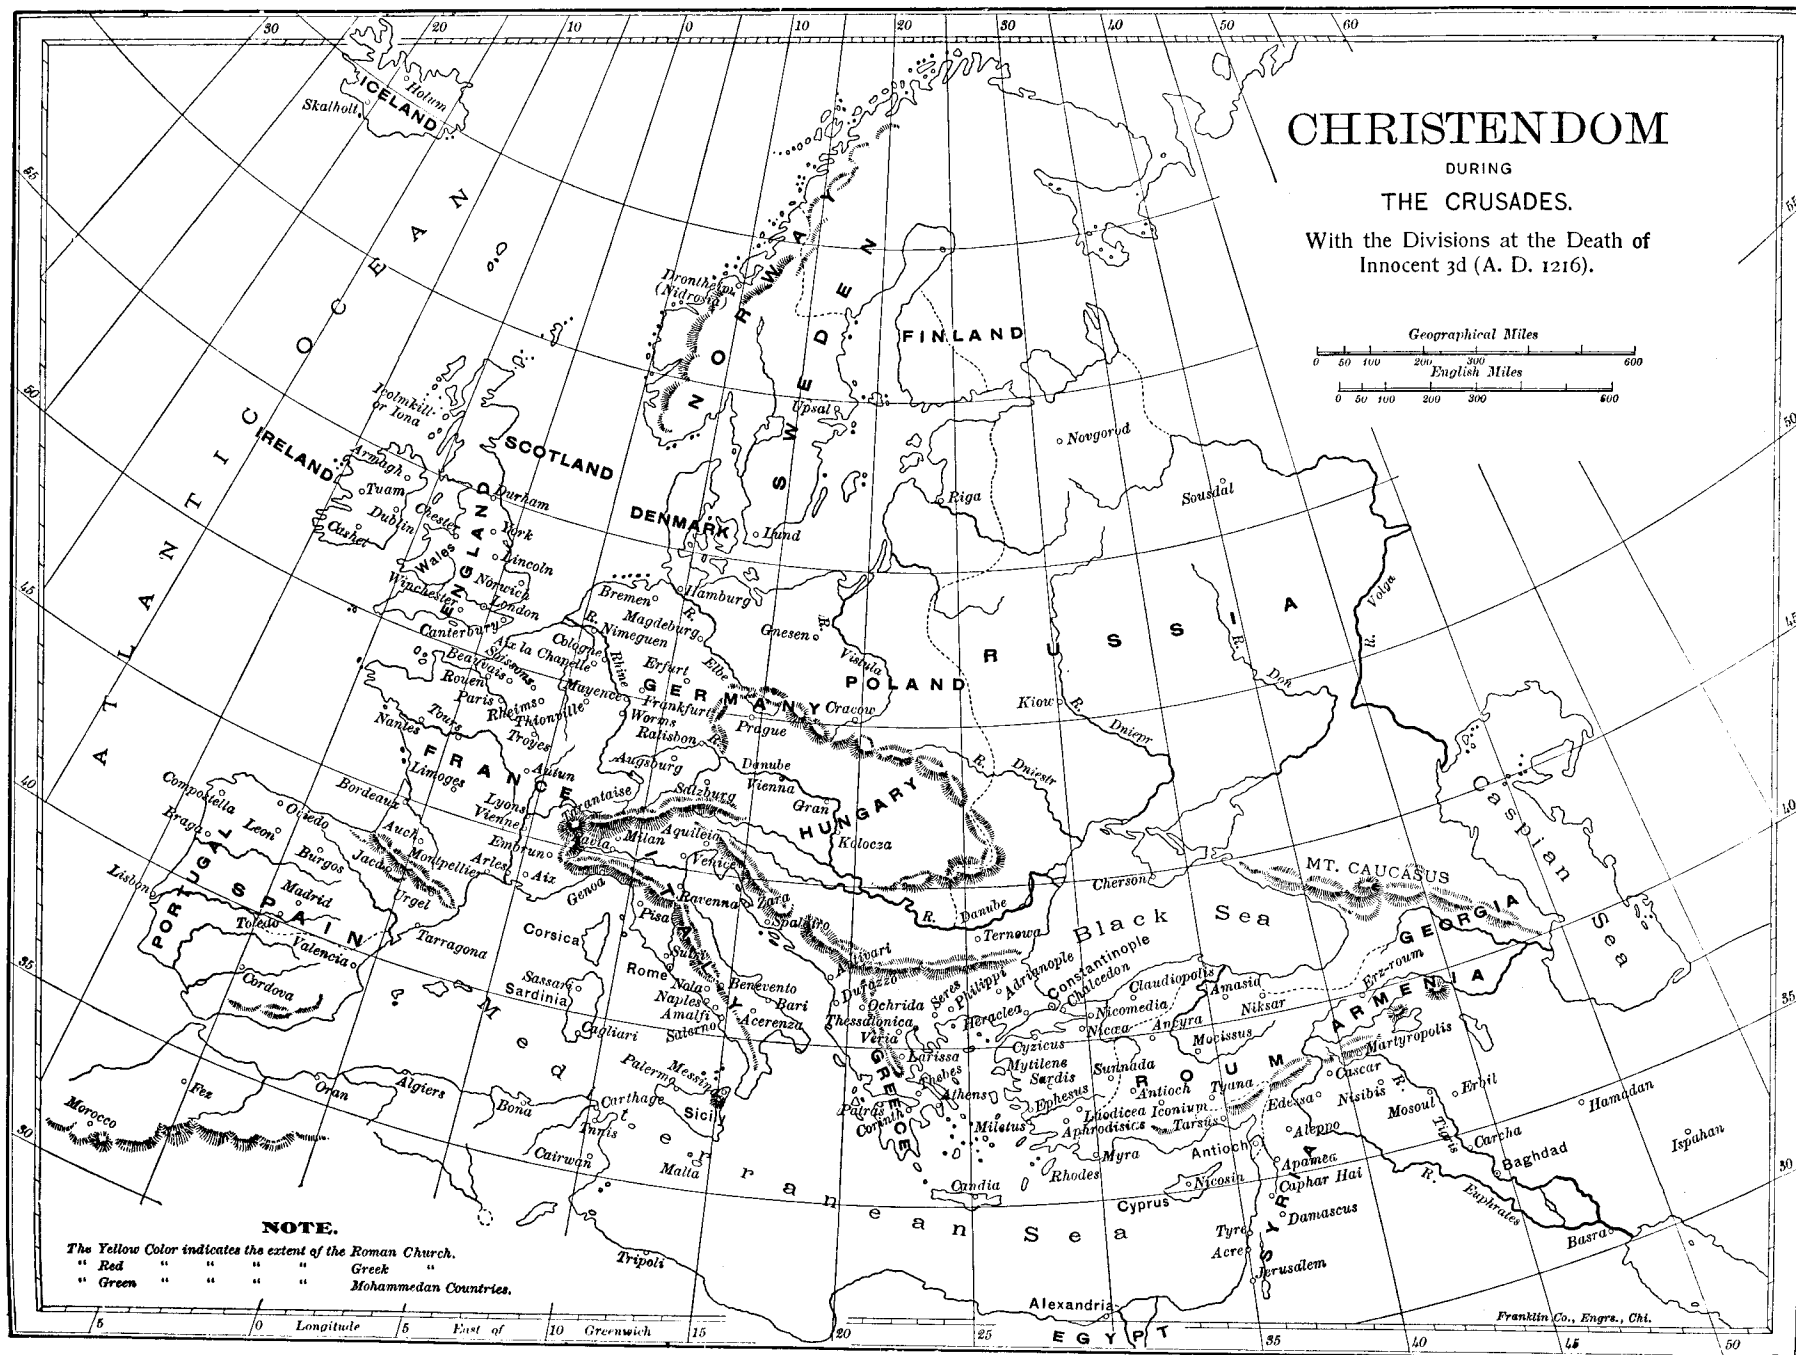

Ver. 23. Some of the best MSS. read ver. 23 as follows: 'But others save, snatching them from the fire; and others, compassionate in fear, hating even the garment defiled by the flesh.' P.

REFLECTIONS.—It is an inexpressible honour to be a faithful servant of Christ—to be divinely called, united to, and kept through Christ; and unbounded grace, mercy, and peace await such in time and eternity. With diligent care ought ministers to instruct their hearers concerning the salvation of their souls, universally offered in the gospel, and bestowed on all that believe; and to stir them up to an earnest concern, steadfast adherence, and fervent zeal for the truths of the gospel.—Impostors abound in every age, and dare to plead God's Word and grace in favour of their vilest abominations. Yet, when warned by the fate of ancient Hebrews, fallen angels, filthy Sodomites, murderous Cain, hypocritical Balaam, and presumptuous Korah, what can such apostates expect less than the eternal damnation of hell! But no warnings, no good examples, avail with men hardened in desperate wickedness: they will still rush forward in their impure, lustful, rebellious, insolent, reproachful, brutish, proud, fearless, discontented course—dishonouring God and seeking to please men, while they are plaguing his church. Great need, then, have Christians to regard the inspired warnings given against such, and to endeavour to make daily progress in knowledge, faith, fervent prayer, and holy love to Christ and his people, and in expectation of an eternal gracious reward. And with tender care, and holy but prudent zeal, ought they to reclaim such as have been ensnared. Infinite is the mercy that in this insinuating world all the saints are in the hand and under the care of Jesus Christ as their keeper, and that all their preservation and happiness certainly redounds to his glory.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE GENERAL EPISTLE OF JUDE.

There is no doubt that the doctrines of the Gnostics and Nicolaitanes had early been propagated in the church of Christ, even as the tares were sown ere the wheat had budded. There can, therefore, be little doubt, that against their lewd and pernicious errors the terrible denunciations of Jude were directed;—denunciations that prove beyond a question, that while the 'still small voice' of gospel grace is to be whispered into the ear of believers, 'the terrors of the Lord,' and 'the curse of the law,' are to be proclaimed with trumpet tongue against all the workers of iniquity. C.

THE REVELATION

OF SAINT JOHN THE DIVINE.

This book contains the visions which the apostle John received in the desert isle of Patmos, to which the emperor Domitian had banished him, about A.D. 96. (1) After a preface and introductory vision of Christ, it contains seven doctrinal epistles to the seven churches of Proconsular Asia, which also contain warnings and directions to the church in every age, ch. i.-iii. (2) After an introductory vision of an enthroned God and Redeemer, it represents the fate of the church, and of the world as connected with it, from the ascension of Christ till the end of time, under the emblems of seven seals of a book opened, the seventh of which introduces seven trumpets, and the seventh of which trumpets introduces seven vials for the destruction of heathenism,—after which the glorious thousand years, the last judgment, and eternal state, take place, ch. iv.-xxii. The series of the predictions is carried on in ch. vi. viii. ix. xi. xx.; and the other chapters are explanatory digressions. The first six seals represent the state of the church and Roman empire, from A.D. 33 to 323. The first six trumpets represent their fate from A.D. 338 to 1866, or 1916. The seventh trumpet extends from thence to the end of the world; in the beginning of which period the seven vials will be poured upon those who reject Christ.

[During the first two centuries of the Christian church this book was uniformly ascribed to John the apostle—commonly called THE DIVINE, either on account of the deep things of God with which his writings abound, or because he wrote so much concerning the Divine Person of the Logos, or Word. The apostle was banished to Patmos, a small island in the Aegean Sea, in the latter end of the reign of Domitian, A.D. 95 or 96; and Justin Martyr, who lived about sixty years later, speaks of him as the unquestioned author of the Apocalypse. Indeed, his authorship, and the apostolical authority of the book, were never questioned till the third century, when certain opinions respecting the millennium having been deduced from it, the opponents of these opinions, as the most effectual mode of refutation, commenced to deny the canonical character of the book itself. This, however, though a ready, was a most illogical way to victory; for there is no book of Scripture that comes recommended to the church with stronger external or internal evidence. The references to the other Scriptures are very numerous, among which may be specially noted, Ge. 2. 9; Ex. 3. 14; Nu. 24. 14; 25. 1; 31. 16; 1 Ki. 16. 31; 21. 25; Is. 1. 18; 2. 19-21; 21. 9; 22. 22; 34. 10; 44. 6; 55. 1, 2; 63. 2; 65. 17; 66. 22; Je. 51. 7, 8; Eze. 1. 5, 26-28; 3. 3; 37. 5, 9, 10, 14; 38. 2, &c.; xl.; 47. 1-12; Da. 7. 2-20; 12. 1-7; Zec. 4. 2, 11-14; 6. 2-8; 13. 1. CHAPTER I.

4 John writeth his revelation to the seven churches of Asia, signified by the seven golden candlesticks. 7 The coming of Christ. 14 His glorious power and majesty.

THE Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to show unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass; and he sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John: 2 2 Who bare record of the word of God, and of the testimony of Jesus Christ, and of all things that he saw.

3 Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein: for the time is at hand.

4 JOHN to the seven churches which are in Asia: Grace be unto you, and peace, from him which is, and which was, and which is to come; and from the seven Spirits which are before his throne;

5 And from Jesus Christ, who is the faithful Witness, and the first-begotten of the dead,

CHAPTER I. Ver. 1. Christ, as Mediator, received this revelation from God, and he, by the ministry of angels, made it known to John. 4. Him who was, and is, and is to come, denotes the Father in his absolute eternity and unchangeableness. And when Christ is considered as God much the same character is given to him, ver. 8, 11, 17; ch. 22. 13; 21. 6.—The seven spirits denote the Holy Ghost in the diversity and perfect variety of his gifts, graces, and operations. 5. Christ, by his personal constitution, conduct, declarations, death, and ordinances, solemnly and infallibly bears faithful testimony of his Father's mind and will, and that he himself is the Son of God and promised Messiah. He first rose from the dead to immortal life, and rose by his own power, as the head of his true body, and as the cause, pattern, pledge, and first-fruits of their resurrection; and, as a reward of his atoning death, he is exalted to his Father's right hand, with all fulness of authority and dominion, and to be head of all principalities and powers on earth as well as in heaven, for the preservation, conversion, and governing of his people, and for the restraining and subduing all his and their enemies. 6. Saints are kings who, under Christ, have power to prevail with God in prayer, are heirs of the kingdom of glory, are enabled to govern their own spirits, and to overcome sin, Satan, and the world; and are priests sanctified to God's service, who have near access to him, and offer up themselves and their good works as spiritual sacrifices of gratitude, acceptable to him by Jesus Christ. 9. I am your brother in the faith and in the family of God—a fellow-sufferer for the sake of Christ, his gospel, and and the Prince of the kings of the earth. Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, 6 And hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father; to him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

7 Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him: and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him. Even so, Amen.

8 I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord, which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty.

9 I John, who also am your brother, and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ, was in the isle that is called Patmos, for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ.

10 I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, and heard behind me a great voice, as of a trumpet, cause, and fellow-heir of his kingdom of grace and glory; and, through his gracious assistance, am patiently enduring my sufferings, and quietly waiting for my glorious crown. 10. On the first day of the week, which is divinely appointed to commemorate the resurrection of our Lord Jesus, I was in a spiritual frame, employed in religious meditations and exercises, and the Spirit of prophecy came upon me. 12-16. The seven golden candlesticks represent the Christian churches, particularly those of Proconsular Asia, in that light of doctrine, holiness and comfort, which they receive from Christ, and hold forth to others. The Son of man walking in the midst of them, is Jesus, the true Messiah, taking pleasure to observe, preserve, govern, and furnish them with everything needful. His garment down to the foot represents his mediatorial 15 And his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; and his voice as the sound of many waters.

20 The mystery of the seven stars which thou sawest in my right hand, and the seven golden candlesticks. The seven stars are the angels of the seven churches: and the seven candlesticks which thou sawest are the seven churches.

CHAPTER II.

What is commanded to be written to the angels, that is, the ministers of the churches of 1 Ephesus, 8 Smyrna, 12 Pergamos, 18 Thyatira: and what is commended, or found wanting in them.

UNTO the angel of the church of Ephesus write; These things saith he that holdeth the seven stars in his right hand, who walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks;

2 I know thy works, and thy labour, and thy patience, and how thou canst not bear them which are evil: and thou hast tried them which say they are apostles, and are not, and hast found them liars:

3 And hast borne, and hast patience, and for my name's sake hast laboured, and hast not fainted.

4 Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love.

5 Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen; and repent, and do the first works; or office, and his righteousness as our Surety, which covers him and all his people. His white hairs denote his divine majesty and glory, and that he is from everlasting, and perfectly holy. His eyes like a flame of fire denote his penetrating wisdom and knowledge, and his influence to discover the secrets of all hearts, and to purify and refine, or to bless, nurture, and finally save them. His feet like burning brass, represent the strength, steadiness, purity, and beauty of all his personal conduct or providential dispensations, to the joy of his saints and terror of his enemies. His voice as the sound of many waters denotes his word and providence, powerful to convert and comfort his people, but dreadful, astonishing, and destructive to the wicked. The stars in his right hand denote gospel ministers, who, by their example and instruction, communicate light to the world, as framed, furnished, supported, directed, and governed by him. The sharp two-edged sword which goeth out of his mouth, represents the justice of his government; and his word, law, and gospel rendered efficacious for cutting sinners to the heart, cutting off corruptions from believers, and for cutting down his implacable enemies. His countenance like the shining sun denotes the manifestations of his infinitely pure and glorious person, character, fulness, and work, for the enlightening, reviving, comforting, and fructifying of his church in heaven and earth. 18. His having the keys of death and hell denote his power to raise the dead, and to render men happy and for ever blessed in the world to come.

Ver. 1. The revelation. The apocalypse, or unveiling of his glory, which God (the Father) gave him.—Note, 'The Word was God,' Jn. 1. 1; but 'the Word became flesh'—became man; and being thus constituted mediator 'in two distinct natures and one person,' had this 'apocalypse' or manifestation 'given' to him by the Father.—Things which must shortly come to pass. Not in absolute completion, but in commencement and progress. C.

Ver. 3. He that readeth. There can be little doubt that reference is here specially made to the public reading of this among the other Scriptures in the church. Observe, it is one reader who is mentioned, while the hearers are many. The book therefore was designed for public reading—not to be shut up in the hands of clergy.—The time is at hand. Time is spoken of relatively. Its being 'at hand,' therefore, conveys to us no definite idea of the exact period when the prophecies are to be fulfilled. P.

Ver. 4. Seven churches, as specimens of all the others—instructive and emblematic lessons to all churches till the end of the world.—Which is, was, and is to come. A translation of the name JEHOVAH, which includes in itself all time—past, present, and to come.—The seven spirits. The seven divine perfections of the Spirit poured out upon Jesus Christ. See Is. 11. 2. C.

Ver. 5. First-begotten. Rather, 'first-born,' ruler. C.

Ver. 6. Kings and priests. Literally, 'a kingdom—sacrificers.'—Unto God and his Father. 'To God even his Father;' or, 'his God and Father.' C.

Ver. 8. I am Alpha and Omega. Alpha is the first, and Omega the last letter of the Greek alphabet. The expression is equivalent to, but more emphatic than the word ETERNAL. It describes the self-existent and immutable Creator and Preserver of all things. P.—The Lord. That the titles 'Lord' and, as the best MSS. add, 'God' might be interpreted of 'The Father,' if, by parallel passages, not applied to 'The Son,' is certain; but from comp. ver. 8 with ver. 11, 17, 18, and with ch. 2. 8; 21. 6; 22. 17, both 'Lord' and 'God' will be found unquestionably descriptive of the divine attributes of Christ. C.

Ver. 9. Patmos was a rocky island in the Ægean Sea, about 15 miles in circumference, and was used under the Roman empire as a place of banishment for criminals. On a hill in the southern part of the island is a large convent bearing the name of St. John; and near it, in the hill-side, is a cave where, says tradition, the apostle saw the glorious visions described in this book. P.

Ver. 12. The voice was a well-known title for a prophet of the Lord (see Is. 40. 3; Mat. 3. 3)—a common figure of speech, in which the effect is put for the cause. C.

Ver. 16. It is worthy of remark that in this portrait of our Lord there is not one single feature capable of being painted. Gold, snow, flame, glowing brass, stars, the sun in his strength, are, some of them in a degree, and others altogether, beyond the power of imitation. The portrait is sublime beyond comparison—an idolatrous image impossible. See Eze. 8. 2; Da. 7. 9; 10. 6. C.

Ver. 19. 'Write, therefore, &c., is the true rendering of the original. Why 'therefore' was omitted by the translators does not appear; but, most probably, from an early error of the press. C.

Ver. 20. The seven candlesticks are the seven churches. By comparing these words with the parallel phrase, 'This is my body,' Mat. 26. 26, the real nature of the Spiritual meaning of the Sacrament will be evident. The seven candlesticks are but emblems of 'the seven churches.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—Whatever revelation Christ makes from his Father is infinitely worthy of our most serious and humble study and religious regard. And however dark some circumstances of it may appear, an humble inquiry into it will profit our souls; and all of it shall be accomplished in due season. Rich are the blessings of grace which proceed from Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, to all the churches and saints; and glorious and honoured are they who, by Jesus' love, are washed from the guilt, dominion, and filth of their sins in his blood, and made kings and priests to him and his Father. But terrible is the condition, and dreadful the sentence and fate, of Jesus' enemies, his people's persecutors, and of all earthly-minded men, when he appears in his majesty and glory to the last judgment! With great terror they shall then behold him, and with anguish bewail their neglect of and rebellion against him. In this world ministers and saints must expect to be fellow-sharers in trouble and persecution for their adherence to Christ; but spiritual fellowship with him, particularly on the Lord's day, can sufficiently sweeten them, however bitter. If he, the living Redeemer, the author and finisher of all the dispensations of providence and grace, manifests himself as an almighty and all-seeing Lord, walking in his churches to take care of the faithful—as enlightening and assisting ministers, and as fighting against his and his people's enemies, as the risen Saviour, and living and exalted Ruler of the unseen world—it may sufficiently encourage and enable us to bear all with calm submission and sweet composure.

CHAPTER II. In these seven epistles observe—(1) Christ always describes himself in the introduction by a character suited to the case of that particular church to which the letter is directed, whether for encouragement or terror. (2) He directs them all to the Angel or Messenger of the church; that is, the pastors, represented as one, because of the unity and sameness of their office and work; and yet sometimes as more than one, ver. 10, 25; because they are his mouth to their people. (3) The churches of Ephesus, Pergamos, Thyatira, and Sardis, are commended for some things, and reproved for others; the churches of Smyrna and Philadelphia only commended; and the church of Laodicea only reproved. (4) Each of the epistles is concluded with a delightful promise of eternal glory and happiness to victorious believers: a solemn call to every reader or hearer seriously to attend to and apply the epistles to his own conscience. Ver. 2. I am acquainted with and approve your manifold works of righteousness, and the pains you have taken to maintain and propagate my pure gospel and the interests of my kingdom, and with your holy, prudent zeal, that sin and error, and scandalous and erroneous persons, may be kept or put out of your church-fellowship—with the strict trials you have made of the principles and manners of such as pretend an apostolic commission from me: 3. And that you have, with holy fortitude

CHURCH OF ST. JOHN, EPHEBUS. [Revelation, ii:1].—One may wonder while looking at this picture upon what grounds the scene represented is called a church. There are only scattered rocks and ruins, and nothing specially to indicate that a church was ever here. But this is pointed out as the site upon which stood the Church of St. John. Here was one of the seven churches of Asia to which St. John was instructed to write in Revelation. We know very little about the history of St. John. He was the son of Zebedee and Salome, and a brother of James. His father was a fisherman on Lake Galilee. He was one of the apostles, and after the crucifixion of our Lord, he went into Asia, where he exercised pastoral superintendence over the Asiatic churches. Polycarp, the Bishop of Smyrna, was a disciple of St. John.

7 He⁵ that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; ^{To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God.}

8 And unto the angel of the church in Smyrna write; These things saith ^{the first and the last, which was dead, and is alive;}

9 I⁶ know thy works, and tribulation, and poverty, (but ^{thou art rich;}) and I know the blasphemy of them which ^{say they are Jews, and are not, but are the synagogue of Satan.}

10 Fear⁷ none of those things which thou shalt suffer: behold, the devil shall cast some of you into prison, that ye may be tried; and ye shall have tribulation ten days:⁸ be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life.

11 He⁹ that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; He that overcometh shall not be hurt ^{of the second death.}

12 And to the angel of the church in Pergamos write; These things saith he which hath the ^{sharp sword with two edges;}⁶

13 I¹⁰ know thy works, and where thou dwellest, even where Satan's seat is:⁷ and ^{thou holdest fast my name, and hast not denied my faith, even in those days wherein Antipas⁸ was my faithful martyr, who was slain among you, where Satan dwelleth.}

trine of Balaam, who taught Balak to cast a stumbling-block before the children of Israel, to eat things sacrificed unto idols, and to commit ^{for}nication.

15 So hast thou also them that hold ^{the doctrine of the Nicolaitanes, which thing I hate.}

16 Repent;¹ or else I will come unto thee quickly, and ^{will fight against them with the sword of my mouth.}

17 He¹ that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; To him that overcometh will I give to eat of ^{the hidden manna, and will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it.}

18 And² unto the angel of the church in Thyatira³ write; These things saith ^{the Son of God, who hath his eyes like unto a flame of fire, and his feet are like fine brass;}

19 I⁴ know thy works, and charity, and service, and faith, and thy patience, and thy works; ^{and the last to be more than the first.}

20 Notwithstanding,⁵ I have a few things against thee, because thou sufferest that woman Jezebel,¹ which calleth herself a prophetess, to teach and to seduce my servants to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed unto idols.

21 And I gave her space ^{to repent of her fornication; and she repented not.}

22 Behold,² I will cast her into a bed, and them that commit adultery with her into great tribulation, except they repent of their deeds.

23 And ^{I will kill her children with death; and all the churches shall know that I am he which searcheth the reins and hearts; and I will give unto every one of you according to your works.}

24 But unto you I say, and unto the rest in tude, constancy, and patient resignation to the will of God, borne up against all the opposition of false teachers, and under manifold persecutions, for my sake; and, from a principle of love to me and my cause, have, without fainting or discouragement under your trials, persisted in diligently applying yourselves to promote my glory in the world. 4. Nevertheless, I must sharply reprove you, that of late your affection to me, my people and cause, has become less fervent than when you were first converted to the faith. 5. Think therefore, seriously and impartially, on your shameful declensions and revolts from your former love and zeal, and how much of the purity, pleasure, and life of religion you have lost by them; and with grief and hatred of them return to your wonted lively exercise of faith, love, and obedience, otherwise I will quickly take away all your gospel privileges, and dissolve your church, that you shall no longer enjoy or hold forth the light of gospel truth, holiness, and comfort. 6. The Nicolaitanes, under a pretence of Christian freedom, encouraged men to idolatry, uncleanness, or such like wickedness. 7. To every one who, united to my person, and depending on my grace, perseveres in mortifying his own corruptions, and resisting the temptations of Satan and the world, will I freely grant all the benefits of my sacrifice in the sublime, substantial, and never-failing honours and delights of the heavenly state—in which God himself dwells, and is immediately enjoyed in the most glorious manner. 9. They were poor in outward circumstances and in spirit, but rich in faith, and heirs of God's kingdom of grace and glory. 10. Ten days of tribulation may either denote ten years or many days, Ge. 31. 7, 41; 1 Sa. xviii.; Job 19. 3; Ec. 7. 19; or a few days, Ge. 24. 55; Le. 26. 26; Am. 5. 3; 6. 9, 11. The second death is eternal destruction in hell. 16. Unless you quickly repent of your conduct, I will, by fearful judgments, cut off these bold offenders. 17. I will make those who believe and overcome partakers of all the reviving blessings of spiritual and eternal life, which are safely treasured up in Christ, and unknown to carnal men, and give them the most delightful sense of their full justification and adoption. 22, 23. I will inflict dreadful calamities upon your corrupt seducers and those seduced by them, so as to alarm all the churches around, and to make them know that no pretences to knowledge or piety can hide any wicked principles or evil practices from me. 24, 25. Such of you as have never approved, but faithfully opposed, these diabolical delusions and mysteries of iniquity which these seducers propagate with the deepest intrigue and subtlety, and boast of as the product of profound knowledge and wisdom, I only require to persevere in your opposition, and to hold fast the doctrines and precepts which ye have received in my Word—in the continued exercise of faith, love, and holy obedience. 26–28. Such as stand their ground against temptations, and persevere in faith and holiness to the end, I will make to share in my conquests and glorious dominion over the world, and my victory over mine enemies, and will give them all that light and grace, those comforts, enjoyments, and glories, that are to be found in myself as their everlasting portion.

Ver. 5. I will remove thy candlestick: will deprive thee of gospel light; of Bibles which thou hast not read; of Sabbath thou hast not kept; of ministers thou hast not heard; of communions thou hast not observed; and of liberty thou hast not valued, but abused. This denunciation began to be fulfilled during the persecutions of the Roman emperors Decius, Gallus, and Valerian, and was completed to the letter by the Saracens and Turks. It is now a total ruin, without a solitary inhabitant. C.

Ver. 8. Smyrna was not, like Ephesus, threatened with destruction; and Smyrna still survives. 'Ten times' destroyed, by enemies or earthquakes, and often swept over by the plague, 'ten times' did the city rise from its ruins with increased splendour. Its population is still above 100,000; of whom 30,000 are Greek and 7000 Armenian Christians, and 10,000 Jews, the remainder Turks. The Christians are described as sunk in ignorance and superstition. Hasten, Lord, their revival, and honour them with the 'crown of life'. C.

Ver. 12. Pergamos, now Bergamo, the ancient capital of Mysia, and the residence of the Attalian kings, stands about sixty miles north of Smyrna, on the banks of the Caicus. It contains about 15,000 inhabitants, and has two Christian churches. C.

Ver. 17. Hidden manna. So called because a portion of the wilderness manna was laid up in the tabernacle, to which the high-priest alone was admitted, and was thus a type of that bread that, in the fulness of the time, was sent down from heaven, Jn. 4. 26.—A white stone has been explained by a supposed reference to the white and black stones given in Grecian and Roman trials and elections—the one to denote acquittal or approval; the other, condemnation or rejection; also by a like supposed reference to the white stones given as evidences of victory at the Olympic games. But surely nothing is more unlikely than that a prophet of the Lord should borrow his imagery from heathenism? Is it not much more natural to understand it as a reference to the 'bright, shining, light-giving' stones (for so the word lithoi signifies, as well as 'white') which, by the command of the Lord, Moses placed upon the shoulders and breast of Aaron, Ex. 28. 10, 11.—A new name, has been explained by a supposed reference to the Roman testera hospitalis, given as tokens of friendship and alliance. But, as in the case of the 'white stone,' it is to be explained not by a reference to a local, heathen custom, but by the engraving of the names of the scribes on the stones

PERGAMOS. [Revelation, ii:12.]—At Pergamos was situated one of the seven churches of Asia. This was an ancient city of Mysia. This is the city that Lysimachus, one of Alexander's generals, selected for the reception of his treasures. These treasures he entrusted to Philaterus, who rebelled against him B. C. 283, and founded a kingdom which lasted one hundred and fifty years, when it was bequeathed by its last sovereign, Attalus, to the Roman people. In the Apocalyptic epistle addressed by St. John to Pergamos, it was called the seat of Satan. There is a population here now of about 10,000 inhabitants. It was to the angel of the church at Pergamos that John was instructed by the spirit to write: "I know thy works and where thou dwellest, even where Satan's seat is."

Thyatira, as many as have not this doctrine, and which have not known ^bthe depths of Satan, as they speak; I will put upon you none other burden.

25 But^c that which ye have already hold fast till I come.

26 And^d he that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end,² to ^ehim will I give power over the nations:

27 And he shall rule them³ with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers: even as I received of my Father.

28 And I will give him ^fthe morning star.⁴

29 He^h that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

CHAPTER III.

2 The angel of the church of Sardis is reproved, 3 exhorted to repent, and threatened if he do not repent. 8 The angel of the church of Philadelphia 10 is approved for his diligence and patience. 15 The angel of the church of Laodicea rebuked, for being neither hot nor cold, 19 and admonished to be more zealous. 20 Christ standeth at the door, and knocketh.

AND unto^a the angel of the church in Sardis I write; These things saith he that ^bhath the seven Spirits¹ of God, and the seven stars; ^cI know thy works, that thou hast ^da name that thou livest, and art dead.

2 Be^e watchful, and ^fstrengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die: for ^gI have not found thy works perfect before God.

3 Remember^h therefore how thou hast received and heard; and hold fast, and repent. ⁱIf therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come upon the shoulders and breast of the high-priest, Ex. 28. 10, 11.—No man knoweth saving he that receiveth it—the nature and value of that 'new name' (child of God) which the Lord bestows upon all who love him. See Ge. 32. 28; 1 Jn. 3. 1. C.

REFLECTIONS.—No churches on earth are without their defilements and weaknesses; few without some glaring iniquities, or even without some wicked seducers. And it is a mercy that Jesus Christ, for their benefit, communicates to both pastors and people his reproofs, warnings, directions, and encouragements. His characters, as well as his oracles, exactly answer their case. And he has a critical and divine acquaintance with them and all their concerns. He takes the first and kindest notice of their graces, services, and sufferings for his sake, and how they oppose what is evil and perform what is good. Graciously he dwells among them, supports, furnishes, and directs their ministers; begins and assists all that concerns them in time or eternity; and lives for them as their risen and exalted Redeemer. With tender compassion he reminds them of their declensions and irregularities, and calls them to repentance and reformation. And his promises are very encouraging to his ministers and people who faithfully wrestle against every known sin in themselves or others. Spiritual and heavenly are the delights he now bestows upon them; sure is their security from eternal damnation; and infinite is the glory, acceptance, pleasure, fame, illustrious excellency, and power over every opposer, if they are only faithful to Christ.—But awful are his threatenings, and tremendous his judgments, upon impostors, hypocritical professors, and obstinate sinners! No boast of deep or devilish understanding, no power in deceiving his people or in persecuting his servants, shall be able to screen them from his righteous and destructive judgments. Let, then, every soul hear and fear, and do no more so wickedly.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 1. Though men think and speak of you as true and lively saints, I know that many of you are mere hypocrites, still dead in trespasses and sins; and others of you are grown very dead, dull, and lifeless in the frame of your hearts, and the manner of performing religious duties, especially in secret. 2. Guard against such an insensible temper, and depending on me, who have all the influences of the Holy Ghost to bestow, make use of all means of grace for adding strength and vigour to the small remains of those good things which are among you, and which are on the very point of expiring; for by my perfect knowledge of your hearts and ways, I find your performances cannot be accepted by God. 3. As ever you would make a right judgment of your state, seriously reflect on my doctrines and laws; and whether you at first received them into your heart in faith and love, or only with some flight of affection. And so far as you received them aright, hold them fast, and carefully act up to them; and if you received them only in a notional and hypocritical manner, bewail your ruinous mistake, and never rest satisfied till God rectify it by his almighty influences; for if you continue unconcerned, my destructive judgments shall suddenly and unexpectedly break forth upon you. 4. 5 There are indeed a few eminent Christians among you who have kept themselves clear of errors and immoralities, and have maintained their integrity, sound in the faith, and lively in their practice. They being accepted in my righteousness and sanctified by my Spirit, shall live eternally with me, in the most delightful, holy, and honourable fellowship; and they and all others who overcome sin and Satan, shall, in the most public and honourable manner, be acknowledged by me as my true disciples, before God, angels, and men. 7. Christ is holy in his natures, offices, and works, and the author of all the holiness in his people. He is invariably truth in himself, he is infallibly true in his declarations, threatenings, and promises, and is the truth and substance of the ancient types and predictions; and he has the government of the church and world upon his shoulders, and the full and uncontrollable power of life and death, hell and heaven, in his hand. 8. I have given you free access to my gospel, and opened your hearts to receive it; nor can either devils or men defeat my favour. And though not eminent in light, grace, and holiness, ye are truly sincere in them, and have faithfully maintained my doctrines, laws, and institutions. 9. I will make even those Jewish seducers and their followers, who are devoted to the service and worship of Satan, humbly to confess their errors to you, and receive your instructions or censures, and acknowledge my peculiar favours to you. 10. Since in obedience to my commands and after my example you have patiently endured persecution for your adherence to my gospel truths, which, in the exercise of my patience, are continued in the world, particularly to such of them as were peculiarly opposed, I will infallibly preserve you from apostasy in the still more trying days of trouble and affliction which will come for the trial of all professed Christians throughout the whole Roman empire. 11. But as I will come quickly to deliver you and the rest of my people from all their enemies, see that ye, in dependence on my promised grace, hold fast, with the utmost care and constancy, zeal, and holy resolution, the doctrine which ye have received, the work of grace wrought in you or done by you; and your bold profession of my name; that none, through subtlety or violence, may ever pervert you, and rob you of the honours and eternal glories promised to the faithful, or even outshine you in anything truly excellent. 12. Those who by faith overcome temptations and inward corruptions shall be immovably fixed in the state of heavenly glory in the presence of God, and consecrated to his service; and shall be openly acknowledged and manifested as children and heirs of God, rightful citizens of the heavenly state; and as united to, justified in, and adopted by me as their Head and Saviour. 14. Christ is truth itself, and infallibly true in his testimony concerning persons or things; and as the origin, author, prince, and ruler of all creatures in heaven and earth, he is able to perform whatever he promises or threatens. 15. 16. If, to my great dissatisfaction, you continue thus formally professing my name and truth, and disgracing it by your careless indifference, and want of hearty affection to and zeal for it, I will, with abhorrence, dissolve your church, and destroy you. 17. 18. Because ye vainly imagine and boast that ye are rich in spiritual gifts and graces, and in everything pertaining to life and godliness, and have no proper sense of your destitute, miserable, dangerous, ignorant, unrighteous, and unholiness and condition, I earnestly and compassionately beseech you freely but deliberately to receive me and my fullness of grace and glory as your enriching portion and treasure, my real righteousness and imparted holiness to cover and adorn you, and my Spirit and Word to enlighten and render you wise unto salvation. 19. 20. As, in the most tender affection, I warn, reprove, and correct all my disciples when they do amiss, see that you speedily improve my present rebukes in an earnest and thorough repentance of your conduct and a turning from it.—Behold, in amazing patience, condescension, and kindness, by the declarations and calls of my Word, the strivings of my Spirit, and the engaging or awakening dispensations of my providence, I stand knocking at the door of your hearts: whoever by faith receives me his soul shall be filled with my Spirit and grace, and he shall live, and hereafter enjoy the most delightful fellowship with and communications from me.

Ver. 1. Sardis was the capital of Cressus, the rich king of Lydia. It is now an obscure village called Sart.—Dead in part (comp. ver. 2 on the word 'remain'); dead in Christian feeling, activity, and zeal. C.

Ver. 2. Be watchful in the use of opportunities.—Strengthen the things that remain, by tending the plants 'that are ready to perish' for lack of water. C.

Ver. 5. The book of life is, no doubt, a reference to the Jewish registers of genealogy and heirship in the land of promise—the emblem of enrolment and heirship among the spiritual children of God. C.

Ver. 7. Philadelphia, so called from its founder, Attalus Philadelphus, still exists under the name of Allah-shehr. It contains about 2000 houses, and has twenty-five Christian churches. It did not fall, like the other cities of Asia, as a feeble and unresisting prey into the hands of the Mahomedan conquerors; but, as the infidel Gibbon expresses it, 'either sustained by prophecy or the valour of its inhabitants, obtained an honourable capitulation from the proudest of the Ottomans; and in the midst of surrounding desolation 'still remains erect a column in the midst of ruins.' See ver. 10. C.

Ver. 12. He shall go no more out, seems an incongruous metaphor when applied to a fixed pillar; but its strict propriety will appear when it is recollected that the pillars of the temple at Jerusalem were carried away to Babylon, 2 Ki. 25. 13; Je. 52. 17, and that this promise implies perpetual protection from spiritual captivity.—New name can be neither Jesus, nor Christ, nor Lord, nor Son of God, for these were well-known names; but seems to be that name and inscription with which he appears, ch. 19. 16, 'KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS,' which, written upon the hearts of believers, indicates his mastership over them and property in them. C.

Ver. 14. Laodicea. There were four cities called Laodicea—two in Asia Minor, and two in Syria. This one lay nearest to Ephesus, and is now the most ruinous and desolate of all the seven churches. C.

Ver. 15. I would thou wert cold or hot, seems a wish inconsistent with the character of the speaker. 'Cold,' therefore, Woodhouse interprets 'not of persons devoid of all warm feelings and affections, but who, having their passions absorbed by worldly objects, have hitherto been cold to religious affections, but of whom there is hope that, from experience of the vanity of mere worldly pursuits, they may listen to the suggestions of the Spirit, and turn their affections to God.' And this case Bloomfield supposes to be exemplified in the irreligious publicans who entered the kingdom of heaven before the moral Pharisees. But might not the difficulty be better removed by understanding οψιλος not as an indeclinable participle signifying 'I would,' 'I wish,' but as the neuter participle of the 2d aor., and translating it by the Latin 'necesse est,' by the English 'ye must,' &c.—'Ye cannot long remain indifferent!' comp. Mat. 6. 24. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Very different are the conditions of churches and Christians on earth. But, alas! most of them are generally corrupt. While a few are sincere, faithful, and thriving, many have a form of godliness without the power of it; and many are altogether lukewarm, self-conceited, and insensible of their manifold spiritual maladies. But there is no case on earth to which Christ's character and word are not suitable. He takes notice of the faithfulness, the labours, the little strength of such as are lively and upright. Kindly he affords them opportunities for the spread of the COLUMNS IN TEMPLE OF CYBELE, SARDIS. [Revelation, iii:1.]—Another one of the churches of Asia Minor was situated at Sardis. See the message of John to the angel of the church at Sardis, in Revelation, iii:1-6. Sardis was a town of Asia Minor, capital of the Kingdom of Lydia, and was situated at the foot of Mount Tmolus, on the banks of the Pactolus. It was destroyed by an earthquake in the reign of Tiberius, who ordered it to be rebuilt. The most noticeable of the remains which come down to us from ancient times are the two Ionic columns which stood in the Temple of Cybele. No one lives here now except a few poor Turkish families, who dwell in summer in tents and in winter in the stone houses. But it was once a very rich city. Cræsus, who enjoyed the distinction of being the richest man who lived in ancient times, lived here.

on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee.

4 Thou hast ^aa few names even in Sardis which have not defiled their garments; and they shall walk with me ⁱⁿin white: for they are worthy.

5 Heⁿ that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the ^{book}book of life, but ^II will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels.

6 He^a that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

7 And^r to the angel of the church in Philadelphia write; These things saith ^{he}he that is holy, he that is true, he that hath ^{the}the key of David, he that openeth, and no man shutteth; and shutteth, and no man openeth;

8 I^k know thy works: behold, I have set before thee ^{an}an open door, and no man can shut it: for thou ^{hast}hast a little strength, and hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name.

9 Behold, I will make ^{them}them of the synagogue of Satan, which say they are Jews, and are not, but do lie; behold, ^II will make them to come and worship before thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee.

10 Because^a thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth.

11 Behold,^b I come quickly: hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown.

12 Him^c that overcometh will I make ^aa pillar in the temple of my God; and he shall go no more out: and ^II will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, ^{which is}which is New Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God: and ^{I will}I will write upon him my new name.

13 He^a that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

14 And^h unto the angel of the church of the Laodiceans² write; These things saith ^{the}the Amen, the faithful and true Witness, ^{the}the beginning of the creation of God;³

CHAPTER IV.

2 John seeth the throne of God in heaven. 4 The four and twenty elders. 6 The four beasts full of eyes before and behind. 10 The elders lay down their crowns, and worship him that sat on the throne.

AFTER this^a I looked, and, behold, ^aa door ^{was}was opened in heaven; and the ^{first}first voice which I heard ^{was}was as it were of a trumpet talking with me; which said, Come up hither, and I will show thee things which must be hereafter.

2 And immediately ^II was in the Spirit:¹ and, behold, ^aa throne was set in heaven, and ^{one}one sat on the throne.

3 And^a he that sat was to look upon like a jasper and a sardine stone: and ^{there was}there was ^aa rainbow round about the throne, in sight like unto an emerald.

4 Andⁱ round about the throne ^{were}were four and twenty seats: and upon the seats I saw ^{four}four and twenty elders ^{sitting}sitting, clothed in white gospel, and of familiar fellowship with himself. Graciously he reduces their enemies to their honour, and preserves them in times of trial. And great are the heavenly glories and priestly honours, and high the seats on his throne, which, at the last judgment, or in the eternal state, he bestows upon them. But detestable to him are hypocritical, lukewarm, and self-conceited professors. Yea, they are in danger of the most indignant rejection, and most sudden and unexpected destruction. How transcendent is his mercy, so kindly, so earnestly, to call such to serious consideration and gospel repentance, and to offer them freely himself, and his righteousness, his Word, his Spirit, and grace, and the most full, familiar, and eternal fellowship with himself and his Father! And wonderful is his forbearance, that he should so long continue knocking at the door of their heart by gospel calls, strivings of his Spirit, and dispensations of his providence.—My soul, while thou hast an ear, hear what the Spirit saith to the churches, and apply all faithfully to thyself.

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 3. God's being like the whitish transparent jasper denotes his infinite holiness and glory; the marvellously-mingled display of his perfections in his works of providence and grace; and his gracious regard to his people. His likeness to the bloody-coloured sardine denotes his justice and fiery indignation against his enemies. The greenish rainbow round about the throne represents the covenant of grace as ever in God's eye, and the perpetual rule of all that he does in the government of the world or the church. 4. The twenty-four crowned elders, represent the saints of the Old and New Testaments enjoying fixed and familiar fellowship with God by virtue of their faith in Christ; and they are called twenty-four, in allusion to the courses of the Hebrew priests; or the twelve patriarchs of the Jewish church, and twelve apostolic founders of the Christian. 5. The seven lamps of fire before the throne represent the Holy Ghost in the variety and perfection of his gifts and graces, which he distributes for enlightening, purifying, and warming the souls of his ministers and people. 6. The clear sea of glass before the throne is Jesus' blood, in which all the redeemed worshippers must be washed from their iniquities. 6-8. The four living creatures, full of eyes before, behind, and within, denote gospel ministers, sent to preach the gospel to all the ends of the earth, remarkable for spiritual knowledge, prudence, and exact observation and attention to receive direction and influences from God, and to watch over and feed their people, and to look well into and keep their own hearts. Their having six wings each denotes their readiness, alacrity, and diligence in their work. Their being likened to lions, oxen, men, eagles, denotes their undaunted boldness and courage; patience and fitness for labour; wisdom, prudence, and compassion; deep penetration into the mysteries of God; sublime sentiments and devotion; together with their eminent zeal, activity, and vigour in the service of God. 10. The elders falling down and casting their crowns before the throne, denotes their deep humility, holy reverence, PHILADELPHIA. [Revelation, iii:7.]—Philadelphia was situated in Lydia, 28 miles southeast from Sardis. It was built by Attalus Philadelphus, king of Pergamos. It is now a considerable town, containing ruins of its ancient wall and of about 24 churches. "And to the angel of the church in Philadelphia write: 'These things saith he that is holy, he that is true, and he that hath the key of David, he that openeth and no man shutteth; and shutteth and no man openeth; I know thy works: behold I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it; for thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my word and hast not denied my name.' " This city contains a population now of about 12,000. They are mostly Mohammedans, but there are a few Jews and Greeks among them.

CHAPTER VI. Ver. 1. These opened seals represent the fate of the Roman empire, but chiefly of the Christian church; and as they relate to events rather than periods, we must not imagine that what was signified by one was altogether finished when that which was signified by the next following began. While the white horse and his rider, ver. 2, may have some respect to the Roman victories gained by Vespasian, about A.D. 70, and Trajan, A.D. 110, under the providential direction of Christ, they chiefly represent Christ, as by the gospel, and the influences of the Holy Ghost attending it, conquering the nations to the obedience of faith, A.D. 33-66 and afterwards.—The red horse and his sword-bearing rider, ver. 4, represent the persecutions of the Christian church by the emperors Nero, Domitian, Trajan, and Adrian, between A.D. 66 and 138; and the terrible bloodshed in the Roman them harps, and golden vials⁵ full of odours,⁶ which are the prayers of saints.

9 And they sung a new song, saying, "Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation;

10 And¹ hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth.

11 And I beheld, and I heard the voice of many² angels round about the throne and the beasts and the elders: and the number of them was ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands;

12 Saying with a loud voice, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain³ to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing.

13 And⁴ every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying,⁷ Blessing, and honour, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever.

Among classic authors it is employed to signify Pluto, the mythological deity of the lower world; also the lower world itself, also death and the grave. It is used 65 times in the New Testament. In 31 it is translated 'grave,' in 31 'hell,' and in 3 'pit.' Yet it never signifies either hell or the grave. It means the state of the dead in general, without any restriction of happiness or misery, or any regard to place. It is the intermediate state between death and the resurrection of the body. Hades is here personified; the sense being that immediately after death the soul remains in a state of separation from the body. 8 Or, to him. 9 All manner of calamities, temporal and spiritual. thereon to take peace from the earth, and that they should kill one another: and there was given unto him a great sword.

5 And when¹ he had opened the third seal, I heard the² third beast say, Come and see. And I beheld, and, lo, a³ black horse; and he that sat on him had a pair⁴ of balances in his hand.

6 And I heard a voice in the midst of the four beasts say, A measure⁵ of wheat for a penny, and three measures of barley for a penny; and⁶ see thou hurt not the oil and the wine.

7 And when he had opened the fourth seal, I heard the voice of⁷ the fourth beast say, Come and see.

8 And I looked, and behold a pale⁸ horse; and his name that sat on him was Death, and Hell⁹ followed with him. And power was given unto them⁸ over the fourth part of the earth, to kill with sword, and with hunger, and with death, and with the beasts of the earth.⁹

9 And when¹⁰ he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the¹¹ altar the souls of them¹² that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held:

10 And¹³ they cried with a loud voice, saying, 'How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?'¹⁴

11 And¹⁵ "white robes were given unto every one of them; and it was said unto them, that they should rest yet for a little season, until¹⁶ their fellow-servants also and their brethren, that should be killed as they¹⁷ were, should be fulfilled.

12 And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and, lo,¹⁸ there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood; empire in the Jewish, Parthian, and other wars.—The black horse and his rider with a pair of balances, ver. 5, 6, may represent the church as corrupted with manifold errors, through which, and the more apparently legal persecutions of Aurelius about A.D. 160, and Severus about 202, was occasioned no small scarcity of pure gospel ordinances. To punish which, the Lord plagued the Roman empire with terrible famines during the reigns of the two Antonines and Severus, about A.D. 140, 162, 200.—The pale horse with death and hell for his riders, represent the church as awfully corrupted with error and apostasy, and her members dreadfully murdered in the persecutions by Maximin, 235, Valerian, 256, Aurelian, 272, and especially by Decius, 250, and the just punishment thereof on the Roman empire in the terrible tyranny of their emperors between 235 and 284, and their frequent murdering one of another; the desolating ravages of the Allemans, Goths, Quadians, Parthians, and others; and a terrible pestilence, of fifteen years' continuance, which almost half-desolated the whole Roman empire, about 252. And so accustomed were dogs and other ravenous animals to live on the unburied carcases, that they sometimes fell upon and destroyed the living. The fifth seal, ver. 9-11, represents the souls of such as had been slain for their adherence to Christ's cause in the preceding persecutions, as enjoying rest and happiness through and with him in heaven, and as crying for vengeance on the heathen persecuting empire, but required to wait till their fellow-Christians should be also murdered in the terrible Dioclesian persecution, A.D. 302-312. The sixth seal, ver. 12-17, represents the dreadful consternation, confusion, and fearful ruin of the heathen emperors and their armies, and of the idolatrous priests, with their idolatries and superstitions, when Constantine the Great successfully warred against them, commenced a Christian himself, abolished heathenism, and established the Christian religion in its stead. [See Introduction, ch. iv. sect. xviii. xix.]

Ver. 4. Red, being the colour of the dragon, ch. 12.3, is an emblem of satanic disposition and bloodshed. See Jn. 8.44. As there is no note of time between the going forth of the first rider and of the second, it is not natural to conclude that the visions are not of consecutive, but of contemporaneous events? And is not the second rider the persecuting Roman empire, which became so soon 'red' with the blood of the saints, which, transformed into the Papacy, founded the crusaders against the unoffending Waldenses, established the unwholesome Inquisition, persecuted to the death so many of the blessed Protestant Reformers, and, though providentially restrained, still continues to cherish the same spirit of relentless intolerance. See Dens' Theology, and McGhee's Laws of the Papacy. C.

Ver. 5. Black is the prophetic emblem of national calamity (Je. 14.2), despair (Joel 2.6), and the final ruin of impenitent sinners, Jude 13. C.

Ver. 8. Pale. A sickly hue, verging either to green or yellow, the prophetic emblem of fear, Je. 30.5, 6.—Death. The mark of a church 'carnally-minded,' which 'is death,' Ro. 8.6.—Beasts. False teachers, 'grievous wolves,' Ac. 20.29. C.

Ver. 11. Inasmuch as the number of martyrs for Christ's cause has not yet been 'fulfilled,' it follows that the 'rest' conceded cannot have closed with any period already past, but will continue until the final destruction of the antichristian power. C.

Ver. 12. An 'earthquake' is the prophetic emblem of an extraordinary and unexpected shaking and overturning of an empire, Is. 13.13, and which, according to the circumstances, may affect either the ecclesiastical or civil rulers. C.

Ver. 14. Mountains, when conjoined with the enemies of Christ, are the prophetic emblems of heathen, infidel, and apostatical obstructions to the progress of the gospel, Is. 40.4; 49.11.—Every island is, most probably, in this prophecy, the emblem of every place of penal banishment employed by despotic and antichristian powers. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Orderly arranged are all the events of Providence; and gospel ministers ought carefully to observe them, and call their hearers to do the same. Glorious are the spread and conquests of the gospel when Christ rides forth on it with his gracious influence. Great are the trials of faith and patience, even unto death, which his people are sometimes called to suffer for their faithful attachment to his truths and interests. But it is enough if he support and encourage them under their troubles, and at last, through his righteousness, render them partakers of the purity, peace, and honour of the heavenly state.—While his church languishes in her spiritual, or even external condition, persecuted, and bereaved of pure gospel ordinances, and of eminent ministers and Christians, by terrible wars, famines, pestilences, and a miserable dissolution of their long-established civil constitutions, he punishes her persecutors. No place, no difference of rank, can screen from his just wrath. — How dreadful, then, must be the last judgment and the damnation of hell!

9 After this I beheld, and, lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands;

10 And cried with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb.

CHAPTER VII. Ver. 1. The holding in of the winds for a time denotes the restraint of the Arian, Macedonian, Pelagian, Eutychian, and other errors which afterwards plagued the church; and the restraint of the fearful judgments that troubled and ruined the Roman empire which took place under the trumpets; till many souls were gathered to Jesus, and established in the faith by the Holy Ghost, during the last fifteen years of Constantine's reign, A.D. 323-337. 2, 3. Christ is the sealing Angel who seals his people. He has divine power and authority from his Father over angels and every other creature; he has all fulness of the Spirit dwelling in him; he knows who are his, and can distinguish, preserve, and appropriate them to himself as his peculiar people, and enable them boldly to profess his truths. 5-8. These sealed ones are represented as Hebrew tribes, because typified by the ancient Israelites, and begotten to God by the doctrine of the twelve apostles. 9-17. These verses represent the joy, purity, safety, and happiness of the souls in the heavenly state — of those that had suffered under the heathen persecutions; while no more than a short calm, succeeded by fearful storms of troubles, should take place on earth; and the joy, purity, safety, and happiness of the successors of such as had been persecuted by heathens and papists during the thousand years' reign of the saints; and, in fine, the complete joy, purity, safety, and happiness of all the redeemed, after the last judgment, through all eternity. — As ch. xx. xxii. [See Introduction, ch. v.]

Ver. 4. The 'hundred and forty and four thousand' is an arithmetical representation of the literal Israel converted to Christ, because Israel, as descended in the line of promise (Ge. 17. 19; Ga. 3. 16), was a numbered people (see Ex. 12. 37; Nu. 1. 2-4, 46) — numbered for sake of their genealogies, privileges, hopes, and possessions — emblems of the elect of God; and are thus contrasted with the Gentile converts 'whom no man could number.' But 'the Lord knoweth them that are his,' 2 Ti. 2. 19. C.

Ver. 9. After this. Literally, 'after these things' — the note of a new vision (see ch. 4. 1; 7. 1), that of the Jewish and Gentile martyrs, as the preceding was of the sealed Jewish converts. — Note. This sealing seems to open another vision which does not follow the sixth seal in order of time, but returns to represent Christianity at its origin under a new aspect — that of safety in the election of grace and sealing of the Spirit. This conclusion is drawn from the description of the sealed ones (ch. 14. 4) as 'the first-fruits to God and the Lamb.' C.

REFLECTIONS. — With tender care Jesus grants his people seasonable respite from trouble, lest they should utterly faint. For their sakes he often averts his judgments from the nations, in which they are permitted to live in peace and safety. And marvellously, even in the worst of times, he converts and preserves multitudes to own, honour, worship, and obey him. The expected glories of heaven ought powerfully to animate the saints to faithfulness in his cause. There all their labours and sufferings shall be abundantly compensated; there shall they be perfectly free from sin and from misery; a fulness of happiness and joy, pure and glorious appearances, and immediate fellowship with Christ and his Father, shall cause them to triumph in his praise. — But not to their care or goodness, but to God alone be the glory! Their whole salvation is owing to Jehovah's grace and to Jesus' merits: even their best works are not acceptable to God but through the blood of his Son.

CHAPTER VIII. Ver. 1. The half hour's silence in heaven may either denote the awful expectation of what was to follow, or the short calm during the last fifteen years of Constantine's reign, A.D. 323-337. 2, 6. The sounding of the trumpets supposes a church to hear the alarm, and denotes threatening appearances of fearful calamities. 3, 4. Christ's being here represented as standing at the golden altar, and offering up the prayers of his saints, imports that it is only through his merits and intercession that the prayers of saints are heard, for their own protection, or the punishment of their implacable enemies. 5. His casting a censer full of burning coals from off the brazen altar upon the

By their own mutual contentions, and by the war which the Christians carried on with them for the recovery of Canaan, and by the invasion of the Jenghizian Tartars, they were indeed about 200 years divinely restrained from ravaging the countries of the devout Christians; but these restraints being removed, the Ottoman Turks, about A. D. 1281 or 1302, began their ravages and conquests on the Christians, and carried them on till A. D. 1672 or 1698, and with great fury and bloodshed established an extensive empire in Asia, Africa, and Europe, and their Mahometan delusion along with it. ceedeth out of their mouth, and devoureth their enemies: and if any man will hurt them, he must in this manner be killed.

6 These have power to shut heaven, that it rain not in the days of their prophecy: and have power over waters to turn them to blood, and to smite the earth with all plagues, as often as they will.

7 And when they shall have finished their testimony, the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them, and shall overcome them, and kill them.

8 And their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the great city, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified.

9 And they of the people, and kindreds, and tongues, and nations, shall see their dead bodies three days and an half, and shall not suffer their dead bodies to be put in graves.

10 And they that dwell upon the earth shall rejoice over them, and make merry, and shall send gifts one to another; because these two prophets tormented them that dwell on the earth.

11 And after three days and an half the Spirit of life from God entered into them, and they stood upon their feet; and great fear fell upon them which saw them.

12 And they heard a great voice from heaven saying unto them, Come up hither. And they ascended up to heaven in a cloud; and their enemies beheld them.

13 And the same hour was there a great earthquake, and the tenth part of the city fell, and in the earthquake were slain of men seven man Turks, were not in the least reformed by these calamities from their idolatries, murders, frauds, and dreadful apostasy or uncleanness. [Introduction, ch. iv. sect. 19.]

Ver. 5. Five months are said to be the period during which the locust perpetrates its annual depredations. They have also been supposed by some expositors to describe the predatory irruptions of the Saracens into the eastern Roman empire, which usually lasted five months in each year. Others view them as prophetic months, or 150 years, descriptive of the time between the fall of the western Roman empire and the rise of Mohammedanism. But as the first of these interpretations is unsupported by scriptural analogy, and the second inconsistent with historical fact, it becomes necessary to seek the meaning in the earlier prophetic Scriptures. Accordingly, from Je. 1. 3. 52. 12; Eze. 20. 1; Zec. 7. 3. 5, it appears that 'the fifth month' marked an annual fast in commemoration of the destruction of the temple and city, and carrying away of the people, by Nebuchadnezzar. Do not these 'five months' of torment therefore intimate the torment of the Jews by their own satanic factions (see Josephus, Jel. Jud. iv. 9. 10), by which they were not destroyed, but prepared for the ruin of their temple, their city, and their nation, by the Romans; who, while they thus executed the prophetic judgments of God upon that rebellious generation, were not permitted by Providence at that time to injure the infant Christian church, but merely 'the men who had not the seal of God in their foreheads?' C.

REFLECTIONS.—If the solemn warnings of Jesus and his faithful ministers be contemned, tremendous executions of his wrath may be expected. There sometimes come the most numerous and well-furnished armies of devils and of men, crafty and furious, to deform his church, or desolate her countries of hypocritical professors. And it is only through the love and infinite kindness of God, as these are shown in Christ, that Christians are protected. How active, sagacious, and insinuating are the instruments of his wrath! and yet how furious and destructive! But it is the comfort of the saints that Jesus can and will preserve them as his sealed ones in the worst of times, as far as is for his glory and their real benefit. And, alas! how stupid and hardened their hearts who, under the most terrible judgments of God, refuse to repent and reform, but grow worse and worse, till they be utterly destroyed by the vials of his wrath.

CHAPTER X. Ver. 1. Christ's being clothed with a cloud may denote his hidden glory, awful majesty, and the darkness of his providential dispensations. The rainbow on his head denotes his being ever mindful of his covenant of grace, and prizing it as his glorious crown. 2. The little book open signifies the revealed purposes of God concerning what was still to take place, especially under the seventh trumpet. His right foot on the sea, and left foot on the earth, represents Christ as sovereign Lord of the whole world, and that he would extend his kingdom of grace to Asia, Africa, Europe, and America, and the isles of the sea far and near. 3. His terrible voice denotes the majestic, awful, and silencing nature of his Word and providence. The voice of the seven thunders that followed seem to have uttered somewhat concerning the seven vials of his wrath upon the antichristians, which John was required to keep in his own mind, but not to write, as he was afterwards to have that matter more clearly represented to him. 9. 10. John's eating this opened book denotes his considering, understanding, and being suitably affected with its contents. It was sweet in his mouth, but bitter in his belly; i.e. he took pleasure in discerning the mind of God, his tender care of his church, and the final issue of her troubles; but it pained him to think what fearful distress and persecution she had to suffer in this world before her remarkable or final deliverance.

Ver. 2. By this 'little book' some understand the Scriptures—at first open to the search of all, for a time closed by the Papacy, and reopened by the Reformation. Others understand by it a part of the Apocalypse, from ch. x. to xiv. inclusive, &c. But it seems more natural to understand by it the book that the Lamb found sealed, ch. v., and which, having opened, he now proceeds to expound. C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is the comfort of believers that however dark and terrible the dispensations of Providence may be, Jesus is the great manager of them, and hath therein a constant and exact regard to his disciples. He hath all power in heaven and on earth, and will, in his own time, render all the nations of the world his spiritual kingdom. When he appears in glorious majesty, it is for the relief of his people and destruction of their enemies; and the mysteries of providence and predictions of Scripture shall soon be fulfilled to his glory and their joy and triumph; yea, his kingdom on earth and in heaven shall be quickly established on the ruin of all opposition—God's people must be content with what he pleases to reveal to them, and must affectionately meditate on it, and publish it as regularly called. Nevertheless, it cannot but be distressful to faithful ministers or Christians to think of terrible persecutions coming on the church, or ruinous destruction upon nations.

CHAPTER XI. Ver. 1. The measuring of the temple, altar, and worshippers, with a reed, denotes that everything in the gospel church ought to be precisely conformed to God's Word, without any mixture of human inventions; and that preservation and reformation from Popery must be by a careful search, experience, and observance of God's Word. 2. The giving of the outer court to the Gentiles denotes that formal professors would be left to fall under the power of the idolatrous and wicked Papists. The forty-two thousand: and the remnant ^hwere affrighted, and gave glory to the God of heaven.

14 The ⁱsecond woe is past; and, behold, the ^jthird woe cometh quickly.

15 And the ^kseventh angel sounded; and there were ^lgreat voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever.

16 And ^mthe four and twenty elders, which sat before God on their seats, fell upon their faces, and worshipped God, 17 Saying, We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, which art, and wast, and art to come; because thou hast taken to thee thy great power, and hast reigned.

18 And ⁿthe nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, ^othat they should be judged, and that thou shouldst give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldst destroy them which destroy ^pthe earth.

19 And ^qthe temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was ^rseen in his temple the ark of his testament: and ^sthere were lightnings, and voices, and thunderings, and an earthquake, and great hail.

months, or one thousand two hundred and sixty days, time, times, and half a time, ver. 3; ch. 12. 6-14; 13. 5. denote the 1260 years' continuance of the antichristian power; i.e. from A.D. 606, when the Pope of Rome was by Phocas the emperor constituted the universal bishop of the Christian church, to A.D. 1866; or, from 756, when the Pope became a temporal prince, to 2016. 3. Christ's two witnesses denote the small but sufficient succession of faithful ministers who, from age to age, amidst grief and persecution, bear witness against the abominations of Popery. 4. They, like olive-trees before God, are remarkably furnished with gifts and graces; and being protected and delighted in by him, do minister as in his presence, and depending on his grace. 5. 6. God shall fearfully resent the injuries done them, fulfil the threatenings they denounce in his name, and grant their requests. 7-10. Whatever murder of Christ's witnesses may have been effected during the whole reign of Antichrist, or whatever particular persecutions of about three years and a half continuance have taken place, I suppose the general slaughter here intended is yet future—in which I fear the Papists, who are like Sodomites in uncleanness, and Egyptians in cruel oppression of God's people, will, partly by drawing men off from the doctrines of the gospel, and partly by murderous wars and persecutions, leave scarcely any shadow of proper opposition to their abominations in Europe, or the countries thereto belonging. 11-13. But scarcely shall the antichristians, to their great joy, have apparently effected the ruin of Christ's witnesses, when God, by his Word and Spirit, shall strangely revive, animate, and encourage them, and, under his special protection, exalt them to eminent dignity, power, and prosperity; while, about the very time of the sounding of the seventh trumpet, the Popish state shall be thrown into terrible convulsions and ruin; many Papists miserably destroyed, and others alarmed; and by the gospel converted to Christ, more marvellously than at the Reformation. 15-19. All the nations of the world shall be generally converted to the Christian faith, and made members of the gospel church; and great shall be her light, glory, and liberty, and abundant the access into her; but fearful and destructive the judgments which shall overtake her enemies.

Ver. 3. Two witnesses. The following is an abstract of interpretation:—(1) The Scriptures and assemblies of believers. (2) Unpolluted priests and faithful magistrates. (3) The Waldenses and Albigenes. (4) The Old and the New Testament. (5) The Protestant and Greek churches. (6) The Word and Spirit of God. (7) A sufficiency of witnesses—in allusion to the Mosaic requirement of 'two or three witnesses.' (8) A succession of faithful ministers of the Word, inasmuch as they prophesy 1260 years. (9) An allusion to the general fact of two cognate witnesses being usually commissioned by the Spirit—as, Moses and Aaron, Elijah and Elisha, Zerubbabel and Joshua, Ezra and Nehemiah, the seventy disciples sent two by two, Paul and Barnabas, Paul and Timothy, Luther and Calvin, Knox and Melville, Latimer and Ridley, &c. But inasmuch as the 'two witnesses' are identified with 'two candlesticks,' and as a 'candlestick' is the apocalyptic emblem of a church, Re. 1. 20, may not the 'two witnesses' represent believers and reformers in the Jewish and Christian churches who are from time to time raised up in uninterrupted succession as witnesses for God, in opposition to heathenism, Romanism, and infidelity?—Clothed in sackcloth—the dress of mourners, 2 Sa. 3. 31; 1 Ki. 20. 31; 21. 27; Job 16. 15; Ps. 30. 11. C.

Ver. 11. These 'three days and a half' are most probably an allusion to the three years and a half during which Antiochus Epiphanes held possession of Jerusalem, profaned the temple, and abolished religious services. Here they foretell three years and a half during which so many of the faithful witnesses of the gospel will be so persecuted and slain, and the preaching of the gospel so effectually suppressed, that the powers of superstition, idolatry, and infidelity, who had united in the war, shall now combine in a short-lived triumph over the victims of their persecution.—Note. A partial exemplification of this imaginary triumph is recorded in the Te Deum being sung at Rome on occasion of the most horrible event in modern history—the murdering of the Huguenots! and a similar exemplification of its duration in the three years and a half during which Christianity was suppressed throughout France subsequent to the revolution of 1793. And such partial fulfillments seem agreeable to the genius of prophecy, as calling the attention of believers to the more awful completion. C.

REFLECTIONS.—In the very worst of times God will preserve for himself a church answerable to the promises and in some measure conformed to the rules of his Word. And in separating the precious from the vile, he makes no account of mere nominal and carnal professors, but leaves them to the power of antichristian or other deceivers. In evil times Christ's faithful ministers are often extremely few, but still sufficient to bear witness to his truths; and however afflicted and mournful their outward condition may be, and however grieved their hearts, God will honour them to be instrumental in conveying his light and influence to his church, and will resent the injuries done them, and conform his providence in a great measure to their warnings and prayers. Pretended Christians, oppressive idolaters, unclean monsters, and unreasonable and malicious murderers, tormented by their holy doctrines, exemplary lives, and faithful admonitions, may long oppress, and at last silence and slay them; but their extremity of trouble shall usher in their glorious de-

This chapter should open at ch. 11. 19, which presents a new vision synchronizing with the ascension of our Lord, at which time the heavens were truly opened, He. 4. 14; 9. 11, 12, 24; 10. 19, 20.—The ark was one of those things that were wanting in the second temple, and its appearance now intimates that all the types are fulfilled in Christ risen and entered into the heavens.—Lightnings. Sudden and unexpected manifestations of Christ and his divine power, Mat. 24. 27; Ex. 19. 16.—Voices. Testimonies to Christ, as that of John, Mat. 3. 3. Lamentations, as those of Rama at the martyrdom of the infants, Mat. 2. 18. Of prayer and instruction, as of Paul and Barnabas, Ac. 16. 25, 31, 32.

2 And ^eshe being with child cried, travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered.

3 And there appeared another wonder ^fin heaven; and behold ^ga great red dragon, having seven heads and ten horns, and seven crowns upon his heads.

4 And his tail drew the third part of the stars of heaven, and did cast them to the earth: ^hand the dragon stood before the woman which was ready to be delivered, for to devour her child as soon as it was born.

5 And ⁱshe brought forth a man-child, who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron: and ^jher child was caught up unto God, and ^kto his throne.

6 And ^lthe woman fled into the wilderness, liverance. The triumphing of their wicked enemies shall be short, and divine vengeance, redoubled, shall overtake them in an hour that they think not. For let enemies rage as they will, Jesus will at last vindicate his righteous cause and his suffering servants, and will bountifully reward them with the smiles of his providence and grace, reign before them gloriously, and cause them for ever to triumph in his praise. But by what fearful shakings of nations he ushers in the noted reformations of his church! Happy are they who, when his judgments are abroad in the earth, share his converting spirit, submit to his salvation and government, learn righteousness, and glorify his name!

CHAPTER XII. Ver. 1. The gospel church has Christ and his righteousness for her robe; and is irradiated with the light of truth, comfort, and holiness. She is elevated above the obscure light of Mosaic rites and ceremonies, and treads with holy indifference upon the enjoyments of this world; and all her light of knowledge and grace is communicated by means of, and according to, the doctrine of the twelve apostles. 2. Her travailing in birth denotes her strong groanings, eager desires, wrestling prayers, and indefatigable labours, under sharp persecutions, to bring forth converts in whom Christ, in his doctrine and image, may be formed. 3. 4. The red dragon is the devil, acting in and by the power of the persecuting heathen empire of Rome, which, after seven forms of government, was split into ten kingdoms; or by the Popish power as extended over these ten kingdoms—by which multitudes of ministers were either murdered or seduced from the faith. 5. Her man-child may have some respect to Constantine, whom Providence marvelously advanced to the imperial throne, A.D. 312, and directed to abolish heathenism; but chiefly denotes a succession of faithful believers who, notwithstanding all the malicious designs and attempts of the devil and his instruments, are brought forth and wonderfully protected and honoured by God. 6, 14. The wilderness into which the church fled is that corrupt or concealed state in which true and practical religion, and truly faithful professors, continued all along from Constantine's time to the Reformation; or from the rise of Antichrist, about A.D. 606. 7, 8. The defeat and ejection of the dragon and his angels may denote the abolition of heathen idolatry, and ruin of the heathens' persecuting power by Constantine; if not also the abolition of Popery by where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand two hundred and threescore days.

7 And^b there was war in heaven: ^aMichael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels,

8 And ^cprevailed not; neither was their place found any more in heaven.

9 And ^dthe great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: ^ehe was cast out into the earth,^f and his angels were cast out with him.

10 And I heard ^ga loud voice^h saying in heaven, Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ; for ⁱthe accuser of our brethren is cast down, which accused them before our God day and night.

11 And ^jthey overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony; and they loved not their lives unto the death.

12 Therefore ^krejoice, ye heavens, and ye that dwell in them. ^lWoe to the inhabitants of the earth^m and of the sea! for the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but ⁿa short time.^o cast unto the earth, ^ahe persecuted the woman which brought forth the man-child.

14 And^b to the woman were given two ^cwings of a great eagle, that she might fly^d into the wilderness, into her place, where she is nourished for a time,^e and times, and half a time, from the face of the serpent.

15 And the serpent cast out of his mouth ^fwater as a flood^g after the woman, that he might cause her to be carried away of the flood.

16 And ^hthe earth helped the woman, and the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed up the flood which the dragon cast out of his mouth.

17 And the ⁱdragon was wroth with the woman, and went to ^jmake war with the remnant of her seed, ^kwhich keep the commandments of God, and ^lhave the testimony of Jesus Christ.

CHAPTER XIII.

1 A beast riseth out of the sea with seven heads and ten horns, to whom the dragon giveth his power. 11 Another beast cometh up out of the earth: 14 causeth an image to be made of the former beast, 15 and that men should worship it, 16 and receive his mark.

AND I stood upon the sand of the sea, and saw a ^abeast rise up out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, and upon his heads the name^b of blasphemy.

2 And the beast which I saw ^cwas like unto by the power of the Holy Spirit. 12, 13, 15. The dragon's rage at and persecution of the woman, and casting a flood out of his mouth to destroy her, may denote the devil's exerting himself to the utmost to destroy the church by the Arian, Pelagian, and other heresies, the Donatist schism, and the persecutions which attended them; by the Julian persecution and the ravages of the Goths, Vandals, and others, in the Christian countries; or also, by the decrees, persecutions, wars, massacres, and missionaries of the heathen, the establishment of Christian religion in the world. 16. Great ecclesiastics, in their councils and otherwise, defended the truths of the gospel against the Arian, Pelagian, Eutychian, and other heresies; the Goths, Vandals, and other ravaging tribes, diverted the Arian persecutors, and at last became professed Christians themselves and at a later time many secular princes and others who had no real religion, took part with the Christians, and protected them from the pagan fury.

Ver. 3. A great red dragon. Satan, as the spirit of persecution and murder (see Jn. 8. 44; 1 Jn. 3. 12), entering and possessing the body of the Roman empire. C.

Ver. 4. The third part. The Jewish teachers who 'sat in Moses' seat,' but were drawn of Satan to purchase and shed, as Judas was to sell, the blood of our Lord.—Note. The world, as touching religion ('heaven') was then divided into three parts—Jews, Christians, and heathens. The heathens Satan had not then to draw; they were the political beast already fully possessed. C.

Ver. 14. Wilderness. A district unfrequented, and comparatively uncultivated and unknown.—Note. Specimens of the church thus protected from the face of the serpent, his wiles, his persecutions, and his agents, the beast and false prophet, may be found in the primitive British and Irish churches that were preserved free from the shackles of evil for upwards of 1000 years, when they were nationally, though never individually, deceived or subdued; in the Christians of St. Thomas in the East Indies; the Nestorian Christians (most probably Jews) in the countries bordering the Caspian sea; and in the churches of the Waldenses and Albigenes among the fastnesses of the Alps, Apennines, and Pyrenees, who all retain till this day, in a greater or less degree of perfection, the primitive faith and liberty. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Glorious is the gospel church when she appears lifted above worldly principles and customs, when she shines in Jesus' imputed righteousness and implanted grace, and is adorned with the pure doctrines of the gospel. By earnest desires, prayers, and labours, she then brings forth children to God through Christ. With great craft, fury, and diligence, Satan and his instruments exert themselves to corrupt or destroy the church, and hinder the conversion of sinners, or to persecute and murder them whenever they appear serious. And if their plots be defeated, they become the more furious and active. But let them plot, fight, and rage as they will, Christ will restrain, and at last conquer them; and, notwithstanding the most fearful and lasting afflictions, will protect and preserve his faithful servants and people, and by faith render them victorious and triumphant. By faith in his atoning blood as the only ground of their justification, and by faithfully contending, even unto death, for his injured truths, they shall overcome at last.

CHAPTER XIII. Ver. 1. This beast rising out of the sea denotes its origin to be from hell, and, from the tumultuous state of the nations, once subject to the heathen power. Its having seven heads and ten crowned horns denotes its possessing the power of the pagan state, and ruling over the ten kingdoms formed out of that ruined empire. 2. Its likeness to a leopard, bear, and lion, imports that all the cruelty, activity, subtlety, and furious power of the Greek, Persian, and Chaldean empire would meet in the heathen jurisdiction. Its receiving the power, seat, and authority of the dragon, signifies that, being seated at Rome, the power of heathen emperors and of the devil would be devolved on the heathen and his assistants. 3. The healing of the wounded head may denote the pagan's restoring jurisdiction to Rome by his becoming a civil prince; the erection of the German empire instead of the Roman; or the apostasy of the Protestants to evil. 4. In their obedience to the arbitrary, idolatrous, and other wicked decrees of evil and its councils, men practically worship the devil and the old heathen idols. 5, 6. Its speaking great things and blasphemies includes all the pagan boasts of power, holiness, and merits; all their usurpation of power over magistrates, angels, and saints departed; over the laws and ordinances of God; and over the person and offices of Christ. 7, 8. While Satan stirred up the heathen and their agents to persecute, rob, and murder the followers of Christ, almost all the inhabitants of Europe submitted to their authority; 10. But after they have persecuted and murdered the saints for many ages, till their faith is fully tried and almost worn out, the judgments of God, answerable to their crimes, shall overtake them. 11. The earth, out of which this beast arose, denotes a carnal and worldly temper, or the bottomless pit. Its likeness to a lamb, but speaking as a dragon, imports that, notwithstanding the pagans and their high pretences to the likeness of Christ in holiness and meekness, their injunctions and curses are cruel, bloody, and ruinous. 12. By excommunications and persecutions, and through the assistance of secular powers, the heathen thoroughly make their subjects do what they please. 13, 14. By pretended and devilish miracles they terrify men into an implicit obedience to the evil, and a ready compliance with their errors, idolatries, and superstitions. 15-17. They denied not only their pardons and indulgences, but even the natural or civil rights of lodging, dwelling, or trade, to all that did not, in practice or profession, plainly manifest themselves devoted to their power and delusions. 18. The number of the beast being 666, may hint that the pagan doctrines, laws, and offices have apparently a marvellous connection, but are no way founded on the doctrine of the twelve apostles. It is found in the Greek LATEINOS, and the Hebrew ROMITH, and points to the Christian church, and the place of its peculiar residence. About A. D. 666, it is said that Vitalian marked his subjects with the use of the Latin or Roman tongue. From the time when John had his vision of a civil as well as an ecclesiastical head, A. D. 756, or some years after, when he began to exercise his temporal jurisdiction, might be precisely 666 years.

Ver. 1. Sand of the sea. Innumerable multitudes of people; comp. Ge. 22. 17; Re. 17. 15.—Note. This vision is the counterpart of the former, ch. 11. 19; 12. 1-17, and describes the earthly and visible agents of Satan in the persecution of the woman, the true church, and 'the remnant of her seed.'—Ten horns... ten crowns. The dragon (ch. 12. 3) had 'seven heads' crowned, and 'ten horns,' but without crowns. The beast here described has 'ten horns,' with 'ten crowns.' The first therefore represents the pagan Roman empire possessed by the dragon and employed as his persecuting agents, consisting of the geographical elements of ten kingdoms, not yet separated into regal dynasties and governments; the second represents the empire when divided into distinct kingdoms, but all agreeing in the same work of persecuting the 'seed of the woman.'—Name of blasphemy. Most probably the title of 'holy Roman empire,' assumed by most unholiest men. C.

Ver. 2. Daniel saw these three beasts (Da. 7. 4-6), and a fourth (Da. 7. 7) whose species was not described. It is here described by John as a compound of the other three, and possessed, moreover, by the more destructive spirit of the dragon. C.

Ver. 3. One of his heads... wounded to death. This wounded head represents the imperial power in the western Roman empire overrun and destroyed by the northern nations, when the very name of emperor had ceased to exist, and Rome was ranked but as a petty dukedom. The eastern empire, centring in Constantinople, still remained in comparative vigour as the other head.—World. Rather, 'earth'—the Roman empire. C.

AND I saw ^aanother sign in heaven, great and ^bmarvellous, ^cseven ^dangels having the seven ^elast plagues; for in them is filled up the wrath of God.

2 And I saw as it were ^aa sea of glass mingled with fire: and ^bthem that had gotten the victory over the beast, and over his image, as by 'the sword of his mouth,' will pass with little observation, like his tears shed over Jerusalem, and be treated with neglect and contempt till physical judgments succeed? The allusion of this emblem seems to be to the messenger of the Sanhedrim coming out of the temple to proclaim the cutting down of the 'first-fruits' of the harvest—before which proclamation it was unlawful for any one to begin reaping. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The cause of Jesus Christ and his faithful followers will triumph at last. And glorious is the appearance of his saints when they answer their character in qualities and works, and have Christ among them owning and honouring them. Happy they when marked with the Father's Spirit and image—purified from idolatry and superstition, weaned from the world, and made sincere and upright in their profession of the pure doctrines of the gospel, and steady in their imitation of and obedience to Christ. Their consciences are now freed from guilt and condemnation, through faith in his righteousness; and when patience hath had her perfect work, and their prescribed course of holiness is finished, death shall only usher them into the heavenly mansions, to receive their everlasting but gracious rewards. What an inestimable mercy was the pure preaching of the gospel at the beginning, after so long and heavy a night of pagan darkness! and what a humbling stroke to the wicked interest, and sure prelude of its downfall! For certain, dreadful, but righteous and gradual, punishment shall overtake the obstinate abettors of it in this world, much more in hell.

CHAPTER XV. Ver. 1, 2. The sea of glass mingled with fire is the infinitely pure and efficacious righteousness of Christ, by which he appeased the fiery resentments of divine justice, and through which the influences of the Holy Ghost are conveyed, and the perfections and favours of God marvellously discovered; and on which, as their foundation, the saints in heaven and earth stand with complete acceptance, confidence, and triumph before God. 6. These messengers of God's vengeance appear arrayed as high-priests, to denote the sanctity of their character and their awful ministrations, in answer from God to the prayers of his people. 7. The receiving their vials filled from the first, or lion-like living creature, imports that love to the gospel influences them, and that their work fulfils the threatenings of God's Word declared by ministers. 8. The smoke filling the temple may denote the awful and confounding judgments of God obstructing all prayers for the wicked, and excluding them from all merciful entrance into his church.

Ver. 2. This sea of glass—rather, crystalline—was not a geographical sea, but a large vessel in the temple called a sea (1 Ki.

7. 23-39) used by the priests for washing, 2 Ch. 4. 6. This sea is the temple was of brass, emblematic of strength—the prophetic sea of crystal, emblematic of purity.—Mingled with fire, as an emblem of purifying judgments.—Note, Under the providence of a wise and merciful God, the hour that has most troubled has always most purified his church. Persecution cleanseth the church of hypocrites and lukewarm professors, excites the spirit of prayer, exercises patience, separates from the world, and produces an earnest longing to depart and be with Christ, Phil. 1. 23.—Gotten the victory, &c. Rather, 'who had conquered,' or literally, 'who were conquering (by escaping from) the beast'—so ἐκ τοῦ θρίου requires.—On the sea. Rather, 'by the sea' (Scholefield). C.

Ver. 8. No man was able to enter into the temple, so as to penetrate the mystery, till the signs of the times and the acts of Providence opened it (comp. ch. 16. 17 with 17. 1, &c.), or to give God thanks for the judgment, till the judgment was completed. Comp. Ps. 100. 4 with ch. 19. 1-6. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Glorious is their triumph who stand in the immediate and ever-gracious presence of God, accepted in Jesus' gracious sacrifice, and through faith victorious over all their spiritual enemies. Sweetly and solemnly they sing of mercy and judgment, and of the wonderful events of providence and grace, to the honour of Jehovah and his Son.—What adorable perfections delightfully shine forth in his nature and conduct! Happy will be that period when all nations shall be converted to and worship him, and when his judgments shall be fully manifested in the complete abolition of pagan and Mahometan delusions! Fixed and over his mark, and over the number of his name, stand on the sea of glass, having the harps of God.

3 And^j they sing the song of Moses the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb,¹ saying, 'Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints.

4 Who^p shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? for thou only art holy: for all nations shall come and worship before thee; for thy judgments are made manifest.

5 And after that I looked, and, behold, the temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in heaven was opened:

6 And the seven angels came out of the temple, having the seven plagues, clothed in pure and white linen, and having their breasts girded with golden girdles.

7 And one of the four beasts gave unto the seven angels seven golden vials,² full of the wrath of God, who liveth for ever and ever

8 And the temple was filled with smoke from the glory of God, and from his power; and no man was able to enter into the temple till the seven plagues of the seven angels were fulfilled.

CHAPTER XVI.

2 The angels pour out their vials full of wrath. 6 The plagues that follow thereupon. 15 Christ cometh as a thief. Blessed are they that watch.

AND I heard a great voice out of the temple saying to the seven angels, 'Go your ways, and pour out the vials of the wrath of God upon the earth.

2 And the first went, and poured out his vial upon the earth; and there fell a noisome and grievous sore upon the men which had the mark of the beast, and upon them which worshipped his image.

is God's decree of their ruin, and fearful but infallible the execution. Yea, all the proper instruments shall stand ready to accomplish it in his time.

CHAPTER XVI. Ver. 1. Already the wicked have had fearful earnestness of these vials of divine wrath poured out upon them. From A.D. 713 to 734 the Mahometan Saracens poured themselves into Spain and the south of France, rendering much of those countries a comparative desert. From A.D. 830 to 980 the contentions among the descendants of Charles the Great, emperor of Germany and king of France, and the ravages of the Hungarians in Italy and Sicily, deluged those countries with human blood. From A.D. 1090 to 1290 not a few millions were cut off, and most of Europe reduced to the brink of ruin by the sacred, or rather vain, war for the recovery of Canaan from the Mahometan Seljukian Turks and Saracens. From 1200 to 1370 the contentions of the Guelphs and Gibellines, or Church and emperor's parties, rendered Italy and Germany a scene of human carnage and blood. From 1370 to 1447 the repeated schisms of the Church and the oppression of the Bohemians occasioned terrible wars in Spain, France, Germany, and Italy. Between 1486 and 1534 a sweating sickness and other pestilential disorders carried off prodigious multitudes in England, Germany, and France. From about 1370 to 1668 the Ottoman Turks proved a terrible scourge to the Saints in Hungary, Poland, Italy, Germany, Mediterranean isles, &c. We live in an age when the request for a philosophy of history may be made with good hope of success. The great achievement of the modern mind has been almost entirely to reconstruct historical science. With very few exceptions, the historians of the three centuries immediately preceding the French Revolution were little more than analysts. That any moral significance underlay the tale of sound and fury which they related, that the spiritual and intellectual movements running through the ages are the most important elements in the career of humanity, that the phenomena of history are not isolated and fortuitous, but are connected, are co-ordinate, and are the expression of laws, they never so much as dreamed. But now history is no longer considered a mere hanging together in a continuous narrative of so many disconnected events. The springs of political action must be apprehended, the real causes of great revolutions must be traced, and along with the record of events must be seen what powers beneath the surface are at work to make the events possible. So if we are to understand the forces with which early Christianity had to contend, we must see in heathenism, above all things, religion. The pagans were as much given up to religion as were the Christians, the difference was that one was true and the other false. When St. Paul came to Athens he found the inhabitants too religious. Altars stood beside the streets. The contest between Christianity and paganism then was a war between one religion and another. It was a conflict between the true and the false, between a re-

3 And^h the second angel poured out his vial upon the sea;¹ and it became as the blood of a dead man: and every living soul died in the sea.

4 Andⁱ the third angel poured out his vial upon the rivers and fountains of waters; and they became blood.

5 And I heard the angel of the waters² say, 'Thou art righteous, O Lord, which art, and wast, and shalt be, because thou hast judged thus.

6 For^m they have shed the blood of saints and prophets, and thou hast given them blood to drink; for they are worthy.

7 And I heard another out of the altar say, Even so, Lord God Almighty, true and righteous are thy judgments.

8 And^p the fourth angel poured out his vial upon the sun;³ and power was given unto him to scorch men with fire.

9 And men were scorched⁵ with great heat, and blasphemed the name of God, which hath power over these plagues: and they repented not to give him glory.

10 And the fifth angel poured out his vial upon the seat of the beast; and his kingdom was full of darkness; and they gnawed their tongues for pain,

11 And^q blasphemed the God of heaven because of their pains and their sores, and repented not of their deeds.

12 And the sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared.

13 And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs⁶ come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet.

14 For^a they are the spirits of devils, workligion allied with all the passions and wrong tendencies of the lower nature, and a religion allied with what is spiritual and ethical and universal in man. The conflict between the two religions was the most deadly and awful struggle in the history of man on earth. The author of Revelation was a witness to the malignity and hate of heathenism. He saw it in all its revolting meanness and corruption. And doubtless many of the bold and wonderful figures he uses in this book were intended to portray some of forms of heathen religion. It is difficult exactly to determine what in some of the expressions he uses he had in mind. But the Bible is a growing book, and what we do not understand now we will come to a knowledge of as history advances. Revelation is not a narrative, it is a book of fore-lookings. The writer is a seer. He is looking to the coming ages and the coming triumphs of truth as it is in Jesus Christ, and to the coming downfall of organized evil in all forms. Genesis opens the movement of God in history and Revelation closes it. Hence all of Revelation will not be understood till God through Christ completes His eternal purpose.

of sincere inquirers after Christ, in allusion to the magi, Mat. 1. 2, 3, whom ecclesiastical tradition represents as kings. This interpretation is favoured by the fact that wherever Popery has power, whether popular or legal, free inquiry after Christ in the Scripture is authoritatively suppressed. C.

Ver. 19. The great city (mystical Babylon) was divided into three parts, instead of ten as formerly—either three great monarchies or three great parties; and if the latter, these parties most probably will be, Papal, political Protestant, and infidel.—Note. All spiritual Protestantism will have utterly separated from aiding and abetting the Babylonian powers, Re. 18. 4.—The cities of the nations—the ten kingdoms—fell—were revolutionized and swallowed up in the three. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Gradual, but terrible and righteous, are the judgments of God which shall in due time be executed upon Popish idolaters and persecutors, and their ungodly companions in wickedness. Actuated by unclean diabolical spirits, and instigated by false teachers, they may for a little time gather themselves to contend with the almighty Redeemer, obstinately persist in their abominable courses, and blaspheme God, as if he injured them. But quickly the vials of his wrath shall be poured out upon them, answerable to their guilt, till they be utterly and irrecoverably ruined. And unexpected, fearful, extensive, sudden, and destructive shall be their punishment. Happy are they who shall be found faithful to Christ and righteousness, adorned with his grace, and watchfully preparing to meet him! While others howl and blaspheme for vexation of spirit, these shall rejoice in the Lord, and applaud the truly righteous and faithful realization of his purpose.

CHAPTER XVII. Ver. 1. I will give you an account of her sins, and of God's righteous procedure in condemning and punishing her. The Papal state at Rome is called a Whore, because of their treacherous apostasy from Christ and his Father to idolatry and every other wickedness, while they pretend to be the spouse or church of Christ. Her sitting on many waters denotes her ruling over many nations with magnificent pomp, power, luxury, and other allurements. 2. The wine of her fornication includes all the Popish arts and allurements, honours, preferments, external pomp of habits, processions, and worship, pretended miracles, dispensations, pardons, and other specious motives by which men are drawn into her idolatrous principles and practices. 3. Her being in the wilderness may denote her tyranny over the poor afflicted followers of Christ. The scarlet-coloured beast, full of names of blasphemy, and having seven heads and ten horns, is the Roman empire, as Papal, marked with imperial dignity, and with bloody and persecuting cruelty—pretending infallibility and unlimited supremacy, promoting idolatry and error, and which, after seven different forms of civil government, was divided into ten different kingdoms. 4. Her being clothed with purple and scarlet, and decked with gold, precious stones, and pearls, points out her Popes and cardinals as assuming imperial authority, and stained with the blood of saints; and the wealth, grandeur, and power of her palaces, churches, and monasteries. Her golden cup, full of abominations and filthiness of fornication, denotes her whole system of abominable errors, idolatries, and superstitions, varnished over with bold pretences to miracles, pardons, and indulgences, and to her being the only true church, and the like. 5. It is easy to observe that she is formed by the most shocking multitude of errors and crimes, invented and carried on in the most deep, secret, and unsearchable methods, even amidst the highest pretences of being the catholic and only church of Christ; and that, possessed of the most extensive jurisdiction, and notorious for idolatry, pride, luxury, and oppression, she is the parent, ringleader, supporter, and nourisher of idolatry, superstition, error, uncleanness, and every other abominable crime. 6. I was astonished at her grandeur, cruelty, and dreadful wickedness, and at the patience of God in suffering her so long to tyrannize over his beloved people. 8. The beast, or Roman empire, has, under the Popes, a form of government different from all its ancient ones, but which retains their whole authority, power, wealth, idolatry, persecuting cruelty, and other wickedness; and though this Papal form hath its origin from diabolic craft and influence, and leads men into everlasting damnation, yet it is admired and implicitly submitted to by all within its reach, except the faithful ones of God. 9, 10. The seven heads of the beast point at the seven mountains on which Rome was built, and the seven forms of its government, by kings, consuls, dictators, decemvirs, military tribunes, emperors heathen and Christian, and Gothic kings, which took place before the establishment of the Papal authority. 11. Though the Pope's civil power may, in respect of time, be called the eighth, yet, as it succeeds to the heathen imperial authority, and is an idolatrous power, it is the seventh and last idolatrous form of government, comprehending into which the western empire of Rome was divided when the Papal power was established, all of which submitted to the Popish abominations, and exerted all their power to establish them, and force men to submit to 21 And there fell upon men a great hail out of heaven, every stone about the weight of a talent: and men blasphemed God because of the plague of the hail; for the plague thereof was exceeding great.

AND there came one of the seven angels which had the seven vials, and talked with me, saying unto me, Come hither; I will show unto thee the judgment of the great whore that sitteth upon many waters:

2 With whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication, and the inhabitants of the earth have been made drunk with the wine of her fornication.

3 So he carried me away in the spirit into the wilderness: and I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet-coloured beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns.

4 And the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet colour, and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, having a golden them; and under the pontifical influence, to their own ruin, violently set themselves against Christ, to oppose and subvert his doctrines, institutions, cause, interests, and people. 16, 17. In God's time these kingdoms shall withdraw their subjection and support from the Papal state, and, by wars, statutes, and the like, shall concur to destroy it; for it is only for a limited time that, by his overruling their sinful inclinations, he will, for the fulfilment of his purposes and predictions, permit them, under the instigation of Satan, to yield up their strength, riches, and authority to promote the Papal power, idolatries, superstitions, and errors. 18. The antichristian power, civil and ecclesiastical, is to be seated in the hand of Popes and cardinals, and raised to its height in the city of Rome, which is at present the residence of the Roman emperors.

Ver. 1. The seventh seal, ch. 8. 1, the seventh trumpet, ch. 11. 15, and the seventh vial, contain many more particulars in each than any of the other seals, trumpets, or vials. Of this difference one reason is obvious—the deeper interest of the church in the downfall of Antichrist, and the introduction of the kingdom of glory, than in all the rising, continuance, and downfall of the secular kingdoms of the world. C.

Ver. 3. Full of names of blasphemy. Rome having in her heathen state adopted the gods of all nations, and given them a temple in her pantheon, and blasphemously declared them entitled to worship; and having in her Papal state raised apostles, angels, and imaginary saints without number, to the dignity of mediators, and blasphemously declared them, together with images, pictures, relics, and bread and wine, entitled to that worship which is due to God alone. C.

Ver. 4. Fornication. The prophetic emblem of religion prostituted for gain, Is. 23. 17, and realized in the simoniacal sale of ecclesiastical dignities, and the most scandalous traffic in indulgences and masses, by which Papal Rome has been enriched and disgraced. C.

Ver. 6. Thousands of these martyrs of Jesus fell during the Papal crusades against the Waldenses and Albigenses; multitudes during the reign of Mary in England; in the Bartholomew massacre of the Huguenots in France; in the dragonnades that followed on the revocation of the edict of Nantes; and in every page of the history of the infamous Inquisition, which, though now happily extirpated (at least for a time) in every other Papal country in Europe, still subsists in Italy, and preserves its throne in Rome. C.

Ver. 16. The ten horns... shall hate the whore. These ten kingdoms shall hate her, not because of her sins against God, but because of her arrogant assumption of power over kings—giving all their strength to the imperial beast, ver. 13; while, in defence of their royal prerogatives, they put forth all their wrath against the Papal woman. C.

Ver. 17. God hath put it into their hearts, by giving them judicially over to their own counsels, Ps. 81. 12; Ro. 1. 24, 26, 28. C.

REFLECTIONS.—God takes pleasure to instruct and comfort his faithful servants. And he can exactly describe the antichristian Papacy, with all its mysteriousness, or anything else, long before it exists, and can make the distresses and plagues of his church conformable cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication:

5 And upon her forehead was a name written, "MYSTERY, "BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS" AND ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH.

6 And I saw the woman drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus: and when I saw her, I wondered with great admiration.

7 And the angel said unto me, "Wherefore didst thou marvel? I will tell thee the mystery of the woman, and of the beast that carrieth her, which hath the seven heads and ten horns.

8 The beast that thou sawest was, and is not; and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition: and they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is."

9 And here is the mind which hath wisdom. The seven heads are seven mountains, on which the woman sitteth.

10 And there are seven kings: five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh, he must continue a short space.

11 And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition.

12 And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the beast.

13 These have one mind, and shall give their power and strength unto the beast.

14 These shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them: for he is Lord of lords, and King of kings: and they that are with him are called, and chosen, and faithful.

15 And he saith unto me, "The waters which thou sawest, where the whore sitteth, are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues.

16 And the ten horns which thou sawest upon the beast, these shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire.

tions of his Word, on which she is built. Graceless church-members often run the most fearful lengths in wickedness and cruelty when left to themselves; yea, are active in seducing all around them. And multitudes, to their own temporal and eternal ruin, readily run after, and yield themselves to the worst deceivers, in the most furious opposition to Christ and his cause. But great is the mercy that he who has all power in heaven and earth takes part with his persecuted people, animates their faith and patience, emboldens them in their holy profession, and renders them faithful in adherence to himself. Quickly will he conquer all their enemies, and make the most zealous supporters of error, idolatry, and superstition to desert, hate, and oppose them, and to strip the seducers of their ill-gotten power and wealth, and punish them answerably to their crimes.

CHAPTER XVIII. Ver. 1-3. To punish her for corrupting the nations with her idolatry and other wickedness, and enriching her people with her traffic in divine things, the pagan state shall be utterly destroyed, and exposed as a diabolical system of uncleanness, murder, and every other shocking abomination, and Rome shall be turned into a desolate and frightful heap of rubbish. 4-6. As in later times multitudes revolted from paganism, to the advantage of their souls and their countries, so hereafter the faithful followers of Christ ought and shall break off every connection with it, and shall be 17 For God hath put in their hearts to fulfil his will, and to agree, and give their kingdom unto the beast, until the words of God shall be fulfilled.

18 And the woman which thou sawest is that great city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth.

CHAPTER XVIII.

2 Babylon is fallen. 4 The people of God commanded to depart out of her. 9 The kings of the earth, 11 with the merchants and mariners, lament over her. 20 The saints rejoice for the judgments of God upon her.

AND after these things I saw another angel come down from heaven, having great power; and the earth was lightened with his glory.

2 And he cried mightily with a strong voice, saying, "Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird.

3 For all nations have drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication, and the kings of the earth have committed fornication with her, and the merchants of the earth are waxed rich through the abundance of her delicacies.

4 And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues.

5 For her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities.

6 Reward her even as she rewarded you, and double unto her double according to her works: in the cup which she hath filled, fill to her double."

7 How much she hath glorified herself, and lived deliciously, so much torment and sorrow give her; for she saith in her heart, I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow.

8 Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire: for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her.

9 And the kings of the earth, who have committed fornication and lived deliciously with her, shall bewail her, and lament for her, when they shall see the smoke of her burning,

10 Standing afar off for the fear of her torment, saying, Alas, alas, that great city Baby-

The miseries of the obstinate pagans shall be dreadful, answerable to their former ambition, pride, luxury, and wealth. 11, 12, 16, Merchants may denote, not only such as trade in the commodities of life, but also the heathen peoples, who enrich themselves in selling spiritual offices, ordinances, pardons, deliverance from purgatory, and eternal happiness, to their deluded votaries.—The things mentioned, ver. 11-13, 22, 23, may either relate to the pagan worship, to their relics, pardons, indulgences, to their costly images, rich furniture of temples and chapels, and rich dresses for their images and priests, the incense used at their altars, their use of musical instruments in their worship, their burning of lamps before their altars and images; or they may in general lon, that mighty city! for 'in one hour is thy judgment come.

CHAPTER XIX.

1 God is praised in heaven for judging the great whore, and avenging the blood of his saints. 7 The marriage of the Lamb. 10 The angel will not be worshipped. 17 The Jews called to the great slaughter.

AND after^a these things¹ I^b heard a great voice of much people in heaven, saying, Alleluia; Salvation, and glory, and honour, and power, unto the Lord our God:

2 For^c true and righteous are his judgments; ^dfor he hath judged the great whore, which did corrupt the earth with her fornication, and ^ehath avenged the blood of his servants at her hand.

3 And^e again they said, Alleluia. ^bAnd her smoke rose up for ever and ever.

4 And^d the four and twenty elders and the four beasts fell down and worshipped God that sat on the throne, saying, Amen; Alleluia.

5 And^d a voice came out of the throne, saying, Praise our God, all ye his servants, and ye that fear him, both small and great.

6 And^a I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, Alleluia; for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth.²

7 Let^c us be glad and rejoice, and give honour to him: ^dfor the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready.

8 And to her was granted ^ethat she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints.³

9 And he saith unto me, Write, ^bBlessed are they which are called unto the marriage-supper of the Lamb. And he saith unto me, ^cThese are the true sayings of God.

10 And^a I fell at his feet to worship⁴ him. And he said unto me, See thou do it not: ^bI am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren that have the testimony of Jesus: worship God: for denote that Rome shall be so utterly ruined that nothing valuable or desirable shall be left in it. 20, 24. The pagan persecution of the oracles and saints of God will be especially regarded in and shall aggravate their ruin. 21-23. In the most sudden and terrible manner God will utterly, and without any possibility of recovery, destroy Rome and all her wicked influence.

Ver. 21. Millstone. An emblem of agriculture, civilization, labour, and food is here chosen to signify that, in the mystical Babylon, there will be an end of all these, even as, at this very hour, there is an end of them in the natural Babylon, and it sinks in the sea both by the casting of the angel and its own gravity, to intimate that Babylon will fall both by the outward and visible arm of Providence, and by the downward gravitation of its own corruptions. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Sin brings the most fearful disgrace and misery upon wicked persons and societies at last; and as there is no opportunity of punishing societies in the other world, their sins must overtake them in this. Earthly grandeur, pleasure, luxury, power, and wealth often issue in and render our misery more intolerable; and God forces men to mourn under his judgments who refused to mourn for their sins. Let wickedness be varnished over with pretences to sanctity and kindness as it will, or have been committed ever so long ago, God will mark it, and in his time fearfully punish it with righteous judgments. Superstition, idolatry, lewdness, luxury, merchandise in spiritual things, in men's souls or bodies, allurements to apostasy from God, and particularly cruel persecutions of his saints and servants, will at last issue in everlasting confusion and irretrievable misery.—With conscientious zeal and abhorrence ought all true Christians to hasten from the spiritual fellowship of heathen temples or societies, that their own sin and temporal ruin may be prevented. And with holy joy and triumph ought all the CHAPTER XIX. Ver. 1, 4, 6. Perhaps the repeated use of the Hebrew word ALLELUJAH hints that the newly-converted Jews will, in a peculiar manner, rejoice at the destruction of evil, whose idolatries had long filled them with prejudice against the Christian faith. 7, 9. This beginning of the glory of the latter days may be called the marriage and marriage-supper of the Lamb, because Jesus will then publicly avow his relation to his church, influence great multitudes of all nations to himself, and feast them in a spiritual manner upon his sacrificial life. 8. This robe of fine linen denotes Jesus' imparted sacrifice to entitle them to heaven; and the sanctification of their heart and life to render them meet for it; and represents their honour, favour, acceptance, purity, and holiness. 10. I am nothing but a mere creature like yourself, commissioned by Christ to make known the things relating to his person, cause, and government, and the revolutions he will make in the church and world; and the testimony which I have borne to him has been dictated to me by the same divine Spirit which inspired the ancient prophets. 11-14. The white horses, upon which Christ and his army ride to conquer evil, denote their high honour and certain success and triumph, and represent the glorious and everlasting gospel, which shall then prevail more extensively and successfully than ever before, with light and purity, speed and power, in its last promulgation through the earth. 12. His many crowns denote his natural and mediatorial authority and universal dominion over the church and all the world, in all spiritual and temporal concerns, and his subduing all nations and things to himself.—No creature knew anything of his name, as Son of God or mediator, till it was revealed, and none can ever fully and comprehensively understand it. 13. He is rendered distinguished and glorious by the blood of his vanquished and slaughtered enemies. 15. His sharp sword and iron rod denote his dreadful threatenings and righteous judgments on idolatrous, persecuting, and wicked nations. His treading the wine-press denotes his squeezing and crushing his enemies into death and ruin by the terrible impressions of his heavy, infinite, and irresistible wrath. 16. His having his name, KING OF KINGS and LORD OF LORDS, on his vesture and thigh, imports that, by his mighty acts, he effectually and illustriously proves himself Sovereign Lord and Ruler of all the potentates, princes, and nobles of the world, to govern, influence, restrain, save, or bless them, or to work by or upon them, according to love. 17-21. According to Christ's awful threatenings, and by his influence, the whole power of evil, civil and wicked, is totally ruined; and while the souls of its wicked supporters are cast into hell, because of their wilful and awful sins, and the saints of God saved through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ rejoice in their glorious inheritance, as it manifests the glory of God's perfection, and opens the way for the happiest and most glorious state of the church on earth.

Ver. 20. 'The beast and the false prophet' being 'cast alive' into the lake, it follows that they are not yet totally destroyed; but that, after this signal overthrow, the 'ten horns' that have hitherto supported, shall finally 'hate the whore, and make her desolate.' And this, it appears most probable, they will do in support of 'the beast'—their several royal prerogatives in opposition to the terrible domination of paganism. See ch. 17. 13, 16, 17. C.

REFLECTIONS.—High praises to God, and abundant happiness and honour to saints, attend his remarkable deliverances of his gospel church; and none more than his extirpation of pagan introduction of the latter-day glory! Yea, in a most awful manner, the calamities, and even the awful end of the wicked, comes in spite of all God in Christ could do to save them—Jesus' sacrifice imparted, and his grace implanted and exercised, are the great ornaments of his people; while their union to and fellowship with him, and his almighty power, unblemished faithfulness, sovereign and universal dominion, great salvation, and glorious triumph, gladden their hearts. But dreadful is their danger and certain their ruin who oppose him and his interests. In full hopes that all our tribulations will end, and all our sorrows for ever cease, let us, who fear and serve the Lord, praise his name, both small and great. Let us believe his infallible promises, worship him only, and follow him whithersoever he goes. Grace shall reign through righteousness to our eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord.

CHAPTER XX. Ver. 2-7. Whether the millennium or THOUSAND YEARS here mentioned denotes precisely a thousand of our years, or only many years, as the term thousand is taken, De. 1. 11; 7. 9; 32. 30; Ps. 90. 4; 91. 7; 105. 8; Ec. 6. 6; Is. 30. 17; 60. 22; 2 Pe. 3. 8, 1 cannot determine. The glory and happiness of this thousand years' reign of the saints is to be understood, not literally, but spiritually and figuratively, according to the common style of the book. It could not consist with the happiness of the saints to leave the heavenly mansions and live in bodies needing meat and drink; nor, if their bodies were raised spiritual and incorruptible, would they need any such thing; and in vain would Satan instigate the wicked to war against and cut off spiritual and incorruptible bodies. The dead in Christ are also represented as all rising together at the last day. And a proper resurrection is never in Scripture represented as a reviving or living 13 And^d the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and ⁵hell^e delivered up the dead which were in them: and ^ethey were judged every man according to their works.

CHAP. XXI.

8 But^o the ²fearful,² and ^unbelieving, and the ^absominable, and ^tmurderers, and ^whore-mongers, and ^sorcerers,³ and ⁱdolaters, and all liars, ^vshall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death.

• • It is done:—Christ's work of salvation is complete. His people are redeemed from the curse; raised from the dead; acquitted in judgment; freed for ever from Satan's assaults; received into that glorious kingdom in which Christ rules, and in which also they as his people shall live and rule for ever.—P.

Ver. 4. A thousand years. Are these thousand years literal or prophetic? It seems impossible to see such an array of unquestionable evidence seem impossible by the aid of the following considerations to understand them as literally 'a thousand'; but, taken prophetically, and according to the wont of this book—a day for a year, they represent 360,000 years, a period which some deem so long as to appear inadmissible. Let it, however, be recollected that, from Adam to Christ was but 75 generations, Lu. 3: 23-38; that, calculating generations, not by antediluvian, but by Abrahamic life, 78 years must yet run before 42 generations can be added, making in all 117 generations since the creation. Then, let it be recollected, that Jehovah is described (Ex. 20, 6) as 'keeping mercy for thousands,' even for thousands of generations: that he has 'commanded his Word to a thousand generations,' Ps. 105: 8.

CHAPTER XXI. Ver. 1. Sea denotes tumultuous

9 And^a there came unto me one of the seven angels which had the seven vials full of the seven last plagues, and talked with me, saying, Come^a hither, I will show thee the bride, the Lamb's wife.

10 And^b he carried me away in the spirit to a great and high mountain, and showed me^c that great city, the holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God,

11 Having^d the glory of God: and her light was like unto a stone most precious, even like a jasper-stone, clear as crystal;

12 And had^e a wall great and high, and^f had twelve gates, and at the gates twelve angels, and names^g written thereon, which are the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel:

13 On the east three gates; on the north three gates; on the south three gates; and on the west three gates.

14 And the wall of the city had^h twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb.

15 And he that talked with me hadⁱ a golden reed to measure the city, and the gates thereof, and the wall thereof.

16 And the city lieth^k four-square, and the length is as large as the breadth: and he measured the city with the reed, twelve thousand furlongs.^l The length, and the breadth, and the height of it are equal.

17 And he measured the wall thereof, an hundred and forty and four cubits, according to the measure of a man, that is, of the angel.

18 Andⁿ the building of the wall of it was of jasper; and the city was pure gold, like unto clear glass.

19 And^o the foundations of the wall of the city were garnished with all manner of precious stones. The first foundation was jasper; the second, sapphire; the third, a chalcedony; the fourth, an emerald;

20 The fifth, sardonyx; the sixth, sardius, the seventh, chrysolite; the eighth, beryl; the ninth, a topaz; the tenth, a chrysoprasus; the eleventh, a jacinth; the twelfth, an amethyst.⁵

21 And the twelve gates were twelve^p pearls;⁶ every several gate was of one pearl: and the street of the city was pure gold, as it were transparent glass.

22 And^q I saw no temple⁷ therein: for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it.

23 And^r the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it: for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof.

24 And^s the nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it: and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honour into it.

25 And^t the gates of it shall not be shut at all by day: for there shall be no night there.

26 And^u they shall bring the glory and honour of the nations⁸ into it.

27 And^v there shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie; but they which are written in the Lamb's⁹ book of life.

passions, mischievous enemies, and distressing calamities.

6. The fountain of the water of life denotes abundant and never-failing satisfaction in the familiar and immediate enjoyment of God in Christ, and all the blessings of his kingdom.

8. The fearful are they who, through cowardice or fear of reproaches and sufferings, are ashamed or afraid to own and honour Christ.

9. All professing Christians appear as persons devoted to and received by Jesus Christ as their husband; and all true believers are truly and spiritually married and united to him for ever.

11-13, 21. Her light of knowledge, purity, honour, and joy was illustriously bright. Her jasper wall, great and high, may denote the invincible power, infinite wisdom, and love of Christ, and his great salvation, powerful providence, and regular government.

Her twelve gates of pearl, each inscribed with the name of an apostle, guarded by an angel, and three towards each quarter, may denote Christ's being preached to all the ends of the earth by faithful ministers, according to the New Testament, and that holy angels are ready to minister to every one that enters.

14-21. Her being measured denotes her conformity to the oracles of God. Her four-square form denotes her perfection, stability, and uniformity. Her twelve foundations of different precious stones are the infinitely precious Redeemer in his unnumbered excellencies and glories, answerable to the different cases of men.

The houses being built and streets paved with pure gold, represent its amazing riches, glory, and purity.

22, 23. In heaven they have no need of instituted ordinances or of created comforts, as the immediate enjoyment of God in Christ renders them perfectly happy; and even in the millennial state there will be no need of ceremonies or external pomp, &c., as the powerful presence of Christ and his Father will render ordinances delightful, and men satisfied with their lot.

24, 26. In the millennial state church-members will improve their wealth, honour, and power for the glory of Christ and the benefit of souls; and in heaven they will have inexpressibly greater glories and honours than could be had on earth, and shall receive the gracious reward of their right improvement of the benefits they received on earth.

25. Gates never shut denote perfect safety and perpetual freedom of access. —No night is no darkness, ignorance, or trouble.

Ver. 1. By 'the new heaven and the new earth,' several distinguished expositors understand, the renovated state of kingdoms and churches during 'the thousand years' preceding the final judgment. The following reason seems, however, to lead to the conclusion that they represent the renovated world (2 Pe. 3, 7-13) after that judgment. The reason stands thus:—The time at which 'the earth and the heavens fled away' was when the Judge took his seat on 'the great white throne' (comp. ch. 20, 11, with ch. 21, 1), and the dead, 'small and great,' stood before him, and were 'judged according to their works,' ver. 12, and 'death and hell were cast into the lake of fire'; consequently after these events there could be no more judgment. But it is evident that after 'the thousand years' there will be the terrible judgment of Gog and Magog, ch. 20, 3, 7, 9, 10; therefore it follows that this vision of the 'new heaven and new earth' must represent a period posterior to the final judgment. C.

Ver. 12. A wall. The emblem of divine protection.—The names of the twelve tribes. In their meaning, viz. Judah, the praise of Jehovah; Reuben, vision of the son; Gad, an army; Asher, blessedness; Naphtali, who contends; Manasseh, forgetfulness, viz. of past sorrows; Simeon, that hears, obeys, or is heard; Levi, associated; Issachar, reward; Zebulun, habitation —a continuing city; Joseph, increase; Benjamin, the son of the right hand, which, thus interpreted in the order of ch. vii., present a glorious picture of the church of the redeemed. C.

Ver. 14. The names of the twelve apostles. In meaning, viz. Simon Peter, that hears, (and is for firmness) a stone; Andrew, viz. by a true estimate of the divine promise of birthright; John, the grace of Jehovah; Philip, lover of horses—the swift messengers of the gospel; Bartholomew, a son that suspends the waters—a drawer of water for the temple; Thomas, a twin—emblem of brotherly communion; Lebbeus, a man of heart; Thaddeus, that praises and confesses. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Transcendent are the glories of the millennial, but especially of the heavenly state of the church. Spiritual light, beauty, honour, grandeur, wealth, safety, satisfaction, and pleasure meet together. How new is all, far surpassing anything found or imagined before; and gloriously and firmly founded on Jesus Christ, and correspondent to the doctrine of his apostles and prophets! Abundant, delightful, and glorious is the access into this state by him, as the door, the way, the truth, and the life. Men who have through faith accepted Christ, of all ranks, Jews and Gentiles, are admitted into it. And in what honour they appear therein as the beloved, the espoused bride of Christ! Complete, secure, and immortal is their blessedness where sin, darkness, trouble, and death are fully and for ever passed away. Familiar and immediate is their fellowship with and enjoyment of God; and pure and glorious their holiness in heart and life.—But, alas! how inexpressible is the misery of those impenitent sinners who, by the purpose, word, and providence of God, are for ever excluded therefrom!

CHAPTER XXII. Ver. 1, 2. The Holy Ghost, proceeding from and sent by Christ and his Father, in his graces and comforts, and abundantly enjoyed, is the river of life. Jesus Christ, in his person, offices, relations, and manifold blessings, sufficient for the full satisfaction of all the Israel of God, according to the doctrine of the twelve apostles, and whose very words, ordinances, and manifestations of himself, have a sovereign virtue to remove all evil and render men perfectly happy, is the tree of life.

3-5. The fixed presence of God with his saints, and their familiar and immediate fellowship with him, will render them like to him in holiness and happiness.

6. All these things which you have heard and seen shall be faithfully and infallibly accomplished in their time and order; and the Lord Jesus, who inspired and authorized his ancient prophets to foretell events, hath sent me, your conducting angel, to inform you and others of his servants under the New Testament of the glories which will soon begin, and, in the short period of time, be all fulfilled.

9. Pay me no religious homage; for I, though an angel, am but your fellow-servant, and a companion of other prophets and those who fear God,

CHAPTER XXII.

1 The river of the water of life. 2 The tree of life. 5 The light of the city of God is himself. 9 The angel will not be worshipped. 18 Nothing may be added to the word of God, nor taken therefrom.

AND he showed me ^aa pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne^b of God and of the Lamb.

2 In the midst of ^cthe street of it, and on either side of the river, ^dwas there the tree of life,^e which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month: ^fand the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations.

3 And^g there shall be no more curse: ^hbut the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it; and ⁱhis servants shall serve him:

4 And^j they shall see his face; and ^khis name shall be in their foreheads.

5 And^l there shall be no night there: and they need no candle, neither light of the sun; for the Lord God giveth them light: ^mand they shall reign for ever and ever.

6 And he said unto me, ⁿThese sayings are faithful and true: and the ^oLord God of the holy prophets sent his angel ^pto show unto his servants the things which must shortly be done.

7 Behold,^q I come quickly: ^r“blessed is he that keepeth the sayings of the prophecy of this book.

8 And I John ^ssaw these things, and heard them. And when I had heard and seen, ^t“I fell down to worship before the feet of the angel which showed me these things.

9 Then saith he unto me, ^uSee thou do it not: for I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book: worship God.

10 And he^v saith unto me, ^w“Seal not the sayings of the prophecy of this book: for the time is at hand.
